But that is where organized labor is on the wrong track. Organized labor, with its magnificent record of accomplishment, permits itself to play into the hands of the unreasoning chauvinist and of the most reactionary labor-hating element, in the vain hope that labor will improve its condition by limiting the working population of the United States through restrictive immigration. There would be just as much logic in limiting population by prohibiting childbirth. Every child added to the poor man's family is a burden which weakens the power of resistance of the worker to oppression.

I know that the trusts and the corporations have their own designs in seeking free and unrestricted immigration. I know that steamship companies have by alluring advertisements been stimulating immigration into certain industrial sections of the country, although the extent of the practice is exaggerated. But this is not the kind of immigration that I am fighting for. I am opposed to immigration artificially stimulated in the interests of capital. I will join you in adopting the most rigorous rules to prevent greedy capital from taking advantage of helpless immigrants. I will certainly go the limit in prohibiting the importation of workers which has for its object the breaking of strikes or the crushing of organized labor. No; I will go a step further, and I will demand that the power of the Congress of the United States be invoked to prohibit the transportation of strike breakers, whether native or foreign, from one portion of the United States into another.

The truth is that normal immigration automatically regulates itself. If times are good, relatives from abroad are induced to come to America. If times are bad, relatives are warned to stay away. Thus the beginning of every panic is followed by an increased emigration from the United States, and there is no surer sign of returning prosperity than an increasing tide of immigration. A study of membership of labor unions and of strikes teaches the same lesson. Improving times are accompanied by larger union membership and by a growing number of strikes.

I speak for the immigrant who, being a victim of religious, economic, or political oppression, seeks access to the United States to improve his condition. If he is illiterate, it is so much more reason why an opportunity should be given to him to give to his child the light which was denied to the parent. See with what avidity the children of the immigrant rush to your schools. As long as the schoolhouse exists there need be no fear of the illiterate.

Come to the city of New York, with its schools and colleges and universities, with its evening extension courses, with the best free lecture system in the world, and you will realize what the American school is doing for the immigrant.

I put my faith in the American school.

The trouble with the average representative of organized labor is that he is incapable of that broader vision which sees above and beyond the narrow needs of the moment. That is the misfortune of the trade-union movement. What lack of intelligence! The politician is afraid to tell them that they are stupid. The average member of Bricklayers' Union 6879 does not give a rap what happens to the rest of the world so long as Bricklayers' Union 6879 is taken care of.

We find in Ward's "The Ancient Lowly" a reference to a remarkable historical incident which is typical of the narrowness of craft statesmanship. Ward tells us that the early Christians obeyed literally the injunction of the Bible against the making of images. There was an organization in ancient Rome engaged in the carving of images—a sort of a union. This image carvers' union refused to see the spiritual significance of the new faith, the beauty of the conception of one God, the higher ethical code, and it stoutly opposed the spread of Christianity to the last, for no reason other than that it threatened the image-carving business. And that is how the bricklayer, with the bricklayer's mind, has always judged big things. He has one remedy—to reduce the number of bricklayers.

And it is the same unthinking and unreasoning method that has checked the progress of the whole labor movement. The bricklayer does not give a snap for the carpenter; the carpenter does not give a care for the metal worker; none of them for the railroad worker or the telegrapher or the printer. That is how it came that stereotypers recently lost a bitterly contested strike against newspaper owners—because the typesetters kept on working while the stereotypers were on a strike.

The railroad workers could have crowned many an effort of other unions with immediate success by refusing to haul the products of any industry in which a strike was pending. But that requires a broad vision, it requires a higher intelligence, a deeper grasp of things. It is so much easier to look out for oneself.

Mr. QUIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. LONDON. No; I can not yield. I do not want to be interrupted. I am approaching the subject from an entirely different angle, and I should not be disturbed.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used nine minutes.

Mr. LONDON. The question was asked here, "What do you think of those 400,000 men who went to Europe after the declaration of the present war to join the colors?" I want to say something about those 400,000 men. I say that the man who, enjoying safety in the United States, went abroad to fight belongs to the noblest and best stock that the United States could ever hope to get. Why do you not look at the thing from this standpoint?

Mr. KAHN. They could all read and write, too, could they not?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, yes; undoubtedly.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], in the few remarks that he made here during the discussion of the rule this morning, said that he did not like to see a repetition of what happened at Youngstown, at Lawrence, and down at Columbus, N. Mex. That gives away his case. Some people do not want any white labor, because white labor organizes into unions and fights. They want child labor; they want the subservient, docile labor of an oppressed and submerged race.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Were the men who were in the labor trouble at Youngstown members of organized labor?

Mr. LONDON. I assume that they were not; but if they were not organized it was the fault of the narrowness of the labor movement that does not know how to reach the masses. The union should greet the immigrant as a brother. The union man should teach him unionism. Instead of that, the labor leader looks upon every immigrant as an enemy. If you are going to keep down the supply of labor by keeping out immigration, why not limit childbirth? That would be a way of keeping down the population. In 1798 a Presbyterian minister by the name of Malthus suggested that—and now and then the theory crops up—that the population is too large.

I have no faith in the friend of labor who encourages every stupid demand of the worker, checking at the same time every real aspiration of the working class for a greater share in life's joys.

I find it hard to reconcile a vote for restriction of immigration in the name of labor with a vote against child-labor legislation. We have had that exhibition here. The Representatives of many a State voted solidly for restriction of immigration and against child labor legislation.

Nor have I much respect for the labor leader who permits himself to be a tail to the kite of the politician. The union card should not be used for political trade. Had there been genuine friendship for labor there would be an irresistible demand that the 2,000,000 children be taken out of the factories and quarries and mines by legislation which would completely eliminate child labor instead of the present meaningless makeshifts of child-labor legislation, which by regulating child labor, retain it; that the 4,000,000 women slaving their lives away in factories should be returned to the homes where they belong, so that wife and child should not compete with husband and father. Had there been a real interest in labor's cause this Congress would get busy to provide unemployment insurance, health insurance, and old-age pensions. Natural resources of vast extent still unexploited and held by the Nation would under the guidance of the Nation have been found to offer remunerative employment to tens of millions of men.

A national network of unemployment exchanges would have been spread all over the country to aid the jobless in reaching the job. Facilities would have been offered for the free transportation of workers during the movements of labor incident to the gathering of harvests. Vocational education would have been promoted. The rising cost of living would then engross our attention. The concentration and increase of the total wealth of the Nation, accompanied by an increased poverty of the many, the social problem in all its ramifications and in all its depth would then become the object of our studies.

The true friend of labor would seek to qualify the workers to take a larger and larger share in the administration of the Government and in the running of industries, thus paving the way for industrial democracy.

But we hear none of these things.

What has become of our reforestation projects? Have all our arid lands been irrigated? What measures have been taken to prevent disastrous floods that have been devastating tens of thousands of square miles of fertile land? Have our physical resources been exhausted? Have our mental resources been exhausted? What about the development of the natural resources, about which the platforms of all political parties speak so eloquently?

I protest most solemnly against that narrowness of mind, against that lack of vision, against that absence of sympathy for our fellow men which refuses to a fellow human being a refuge and a resting place.

The captain of a ship who would refuse to take on board a drowning person would be shunned as inhuman unless he could plead in justification that the addition of a passenger would result in the sinking of the ship with all on board. Not unless all opportunities are exhausted, not unless there is no room left to shelter one more, will the American people be justified before their own conscience and before history in adopting the philosophy of Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Adopt the literacy test, refuse admission to the man without a knowledge of the alphabet but with hands willing to work and with a soul free from the contamination of commercialism. Paralyze industry, check progress, reverse the policy which has given to America life and sustenance, surround the country with a Chinese wall of exclusion, smother all humane instincts, punish the unfortunate man for being illiterate by depriving him of an opportunity to earn his bread. But remember that no free people can long remain unjust. The day of retaliation will come. The narrower the policy you pursue the quicker will you be overthrown. The American people will again be as just as they are free. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, the legislation proposed in this bill, in substance and spirit, has been before Congress for many years and has established a record and made a history both interesting and unusual. Many legislative battles have been fought over its provisions, the literacy test being and constituting the chief cause of contention and the storm center around which the controversy has raged since 1896. In 1896 the House and Senate passed an immigration bill containing the literacy test. It was vetoed by President Cleveland. The House passed the bill over the President's veto. It failed in the Senate by the expiration of the Congress. In 1898 a like bill passed the Senate, but was not considered by the House on account of the Spanish-American War. In 1902 the House of Representatives passed an immigration bill containing the literacy test. In 1906 the Senate passed an immigration bill containing the same test. When the matter reached the House the Federal Immigration Commission was created as a substitute for the pending bill. This commission consisted of nine members, who, after a very thorough investigation of the immigration question, both in this country and in Europe, by a vote of 8 to 1, settled upon the literacy test as the most satisfactory and practical means of restricting, limiting, and regulating immigration.

In 1913 the Senate and House adopted and passed a bill embodying the recommendations of the Immigration Commission and containing the literacy test. President Taft vetoed this bill, which passed the Senate over the President's veto, but failed in the House by only a few votes.

In 1914 the House and Senate, by large majorities in each body, passed a like immigration bill, which was vetoed by President Wilson, and which failed in the House to pass over the veto by a margin of 8 votes. Therefore the literacy test has been indorsed by one or both branches of Congress six times during the past 20 years, and in several instances has failed to pass over the veto of the various Presidents by a very limited margin. In view of this record, it might be asked if any legislative proposition has ever been more thoroughly approved or so often indorsed by the American people through their representatives in Congress? The question has been asked if any political party has ever committed itself to this particular proposition. In the Democratic platform of 1896 the following appears:

We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market.

It is generally conceded and acknowledged after the most thorough investigation that the literacy test is the best means by which this may be accomplished. It is true that the Democratic Party and its candidates were not successful in 1896, but it was certainly not due to this declaration in the platform that defeat overtook Democracy in that year, as the following plank appeared in the Republican platform of 1896:

For the protection of the quality of our American citizenship and the wages of our workingmen against the fatal competition of low-priced labor, we demand that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who can neither read nor write.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I desire to know from what platform the gentleman is reading.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. From the Republican platform of 1896.

Mr. SABATH. It is something unusual for the gentleman to support anything in the Republican platform.

Mr. BURNETT. The Democratic platform for the same year is even stronger on that subject.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Ordinarily the advisability of any legislation which had been halted by so many presidential vetoes might be seriously questioned, and no doubt will be; but, on the other hand, when any piece of legislation has for so many years been approved and indorsed by the majority of both branches of Congress, irrespective of party or section, the necessity and desirability of such legislation must seriously impress itself upon the minds of thoughtful men. Propositions without merit can not stand the test of time nor the light of full and open discussion and extended publicity. Here we have an attempt to enact certain legislation urged by its advocates as being in the interest of the American people, for the protection of American labor in shop and on the farm, and for the maintenance of the American standards of living and the permanence and security of American civilization and ideals.

The struggle to place this law upon the statute books of this country has been going on for nearly 20 years. The question has been most thoroughly investigated; it has had the fullest publicity. Members of Congress who have advocated it and voted for the proposition have been continually returned to Congress, and the majority favoring the literacy test appears to have increased from session to session. In addition to this unusual record before the Congress and this unequivocal indorsement in the two great party platforms, the literacy test has been indorsed by the American Federation of Labor, with its allied organizations, comprising about 2,000,000 members; the National Grange, composed of about 1,000,000 members; the National Farmers' Congress, embracing about 3,000,000 farmers; and the National Farmers' Union, with a membership of about 3,000,000, making a total of 9,000,000 members of these various organizations, representing the wage-earning and agricultural classes and interests of the country.

The wage earners of this country plead for the enactment of this bill into a law, not through any feeling or spirit of antagonism toward the laborers or peoples of other countries, but for the protection of those of their own country, already here.

Mr. Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, in his statement before the Immigration Committee, gives the position of organized labor upon this question, as follows:

The wage earners believe in an effective regulation of immigration because they desire to retain the American standard of living. The standard of wages for both skilled and unskilled labor in this country is the result of many years of effort by organized labor. When an immigrant accepts work at less than the standard wage he not only takes the place of the man working at the higher rate but he assists in forcing downward the prevailing rate of wages in that industry, which result carries with it a corresponding reduction in the physical, moral, and intellectual standard of American life.

The class of laborers in relation to whom restriction is desired, can, on account of their lower standard and habits of living, accept work at a lower wage and prosper, where the American, accustomed to the standards he has established for himself here, would fail and be forced to retire.

The American laborer, much to his credit, and a fact that should be to the pride and glory of this country, can not compete with the cheap labor of other countries. Not because he lacks in skill, industry, or energy, but because for himself and his family he has builded toward higher ideals and become accustomed to a higher and better plane of existence.

The high wage, the wholesome conditions, and the continued improving opportunities surrounding the American workingman must, of course, in some measure be due to the high character and the public spirit of his employer. Such conditions could not exist permanently without some degree of cooperation and mutual sympathy. This must be the general rule, to which there are no doubt, noted exceptions.

Wages may naturally be affected by the number of the unemployed, and the employer may profit when there are a number of men seeking each job, and such conditions may be expected to occur and obtain in this country for certain periods, but no man or interest should be given the opportunity to profit by an oversupply of cheap labor imported into this country. The American laborer is entitled to be protected against that. He asks Congress to adopt and pass this bill as a means of affording to him this protection.

Many schemes and remedies have been devised by others and offered to the working classes as a protection against the pauper labor of other countries; for instance, a protective tariff high enough to prevent the importation of articles manufactured and produced by that pauper labor, so as to avoid, it is claimed, competition between the man receiving the high wage here and the one receiving the low wage there.

This has been adopted and tried for the laboring man, but to him it has been a disappointment and a delusion and a snare. So why not give him the remedy he has asked for, something he has recommended for himself?

The same causes and motives which have prompted the wage earners of the country to urge the adoption of restrictive measures in relation to immigration have actuated the farmers of the country in their desire and efforts to secure the same legislation. Since this matter has been before Congress the National Farmer's Union, the Farmer's Educational and Cooperative Union of America, the National Grange, and the Farmers' National Congress have repeatedly in numerous conventions held in various cities of the United States passed resolutions indorsing restricted immigration and the literacy test as the most practical means of securing the proper limitations upon the flow of immigration to this country. The position of all these organizations upon this matter is summed up in the following statement issued by the National Grange at Wilmington, Del., November, 1914:

Among the thinking people of America there is an unusually strong feeling that the time has come when our immigration laws should be further amended so as to prevent the ignorant, dishonest, vicious, and physically defective from entering our country. While recognizing that ignorance is not a badge of dishonesty and crime, we are satisfied that the higher the average education of our people the better it is for our happiness, prosperity, and stability. When the war now raging on the Continent is over Europe will unquestionably dump untold numbers of undesirables on our shores. The better element from these countries will not be permitted to leave, if such can be prevented. Therefore, be it resolved by the National Grange in Forty-eighth annual session assembled, that we demand the passage by Congress, at its next session, of such immigration laws as will adequately protect our present citizenship from those of other countries whose mode of living, ideals, and beliefs are inimical to those which have made us great.

This correctly states the position of organizations representing more than 7,000,000 farmers upon this question. They favor restricted immigration because that is necessary to preserve and protect the American standard of living upon the farm, and to insure that American ideals and civilization will not be lowered or forced to take a backward step. And further, because the American farmer feels that he should not be forced into competition in the results of his toil and the products of his industry with a class of immigrants who have been accustomed to conditions in farm life, manner and habits of living to which the American farmer could not adjust himself, and to which he should not be forced to endeavor to adjust himself, because that would be and result in the lowering of his ideals, and the abandonment of the social standing he has with so much pride and industry erected for himself and his family.

These various organizations, representing 7,000,000 farmers, with members and local organizations in every agricultural State in the Union, after a study of this question for 20 years, ought to know what is for the best interests of the farmer and the agricultural classes. Their conclusions, reached after so much deliberation, are certainly entitled to the highest consideration by this House. Where it is shown that organizations representing any particular interests have purely a selfish purpose in securing the enactment of a law, the chances are that such a law would be class legislation. But where the purpose and motive is the upholding of higher wages, maintaining better prices for products of the soil, and the preservation of conditions which secure the prosperity of the very class and portion of the population upon which rests the welfare and happiness of the whole people, then the motive results from an unselfish devotion to the public interest and from a spirit of exalted patriotism. I can not agree with those who say that the farmer has been without influence shaping legislation in this country. The real basis for complaint is that he must be so patient and long-suffering in getting and securing the proper consideration of the justice and fairness of his claims. Henry Grady once said that "the farmer, segregated and deliberate, does not move on a slight provocation, but organizes only under deep conviction, and that when once organized and convinced he is terribly in earnest, and is not going to rest until his wrongs are righted," and quoted abundant history to prove this.

The farmers led the fight for the parcel post. They secured that. The farmers have been the pioneers in the good-roads movement, and have long urged Federal aid for road building. We have just passed a bill appropriating $25,000,000 to assist in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads. The farmers have long urged a change in our banking system that would free the currency and credit of this Nation from the control of the Money Trust, and place the same under the control of the Government, where the people have a voice. The Federal Reserve System is in answer to this demand. They have long fought for a rural credit system, free from Wall Street influence, and independent of the commercial banking interests of the country, with Federal supervision and Federal aid, and if we do what we ought to do, and what we have promised to do, they will secure that. And now, in this particular bill, they are demanding better regulation and restriction of immigration, which, in my opinion, is as essential to their continued prosperity and general welfare as any other reasonable demand they have ever made upon Congress.

The present bill is practically a reproduction of House bill 6060, of the last session of Congress. To those excluded in the former bill are added vagrants and persons of "constitutional psychophatic inferiority." To those included in the admissible class are added all those "seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt act or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs, because of his religious faith." There was a similar provision in the former bill, but there seemed to be grave doubt as to whether it would be effective for the purposes intended, that purpose being to enable those fleeing from religious persecution to find here a city of refuge. The objections urged by those who opposed the former bill on account of the uncertainty of the terms in this provision have been met by changes in respect thereto in the bill now under consideration.

This is the land of religious freedom. Our institutions have been founded and our civilization constructed so that as a part and through it all is interwoven the thought and principle of freedom in religion—the right to believe and practice according to the dictates of the individual conscience.

No one truly American would close the gates here against the man deprived of these sacred rights and privileges elsewhere and seeking entrance to our shores on that account.

The objects and purposes of this legislation are to further regulate, restrict, and limit immigration. The provisions of this bill have been adopted as the most practical and effective means of securing the results desired; that is, a check in the stream of immigrants constantly flowing to this country of a class that can never become a part of our American life and civilization, who can never appreciate and enter into full sympathy with our ideals and the underlying principles of our governmental structure, but who, on the other hand, constitute an obstruction to our development as a people and a menace to our institutions—a class who do not come here for the purpose of becoming American citizens and who are not good material out of which to make American citizens.

The effect of the adoption of the literacy test would be in normal years, taking for instance the year ending June 30, 1913, the year before the outbreak of the European war, as a normal year, to exclude about 30 per cent of the immigrants arriving on our shores or to reduce the number at the rate of about 300,000 each year. Those excluded from northern and western Europe would be, on the average, about 3 per cent of the whole and from southern and eastern Europe about 43 per cent of the whole. It appears that illiteracy among the immigrants from southern and eastern Europe is more than twelve times as great as that among the aliens from northern and western Europe, and that more than three-fifths of the total immigration for the five years preceding the breaking out of the present war in Europe was from these illiterate races.

No one can foresee or tell what effect the European war will have upon our immigration problem here. It is generally admitted, however, that every possible effort will be made to retain in those countries, whose ranks of able-bodied men are being so ruthlessly decimated, and whose resources are being exhausted, all who may be capable, competent, and qualified, either physically or mentally, to assist in the work of rehabilitation and reconstruction. The more desirable, useful, and worthy, actuated by the same patriotic motives and impulses that caused them to rush to the colors, will choose to remain, regardless of the fate of their native land in this struggle. Experience has shown that the soldier, even in the hour of defeat, with a determination and heroism unsurpassed on the battle field, will return to his home and reconsecrate himself to his native soil and to the work of reestablishing its industries and the reorganization of his civic structure. Out of such conditions here have grown the very best and highest types of our own civilization.

It will be the shiftless, the irresponsible, those devoid of patriotic spirit and impulse, who would come from the countries now at war and seek entrance to our shores at its close. Therefore it will be more important than ever that we have a system or method by which our immigration may be selective.

It has been stated here and elsewhere that the passage of this bill would indicate on our part a lack of appreciation for our foreign population, for those who have come from other shores and become a part and parcel of this country and who have added so much to its growth and worth, and who have been an important factor in every phase of its development. But this is not true. The very fact of what these people have been able to accomplish here, the honors that have been conferred upon them, the opportunities that have been open to them, and the protection afforded them by this Government is sufficient answer to that contention. Every man who has come to this country fit to be an American, and who wanted to be and has become an American, has been given every opportunity, endowed with every privilege, and surrounded with every blessing that this country affords and secures to the native born. And when we speak of protection for the American people, and the preservation of the standards of American life, and for the security and perpetuity of American institutions in the scope and spirit of the fathers, we speak for all who are now Americans. There is no danger in this country from hyphenated Americans, if by that is meant those who have come here from other countries and their descendants; who have assumed in truth and in fact all the responsibilities of American citizenship, and who have become in all respects a part of this people, with no allegiance elsewhere. There is considerable argument in favor of a man's loyalty to this country, growing out of the fact that he has selected America as his home, and this loyalty ought to be accentuated by the further fact that he has had conferred upon him a privilege of inestimable value, an honor unobtainable elsewhere, and that is, of being made an American citizen.

It is only natural that the citizen here, foreign born or of foreign parentage, should sympathize in this hour of stress and conflict with his native land and kindred and that his sympathy and hopes would be with that land and his people in this great struggle, and also that, enjoying the privileges of free speech and free press guaranteed him here, he should so express himself, even to the extent of disagreeing with the policies of this country in dealing with belligerents. That is not any more than is done by the native-born American, dating his ancestry to the Puritan in New England or the Cavalier in Virginia. The policies of this Government—executive, judicial, and legislative—are freely and openly discussed in every nook and corner of this Nation, in every business center, and at every crossroads, and there are at each place champions of every side; but there is nothing in any of it detracting from loyalty and devotion to America, and should it become necessary to repel invasion or to maintain "peace with honor" or to pay the price that peace may eventually cost it would be found that the Jewish-American, the German-American, the Franco-American, the Irish-American, and everyone else who is any sort of American at all would rally to the flag of this country, as they have always done in the past, and all the powers of earth could not prevail against us. Germany knows that. There is no reason why Great Britain should forget it.

This is a condition and a spirit that we should protect and preserve. The conditions as to immigration have during the last few years undergone a rapid and startling change. For the 90 years preceding 1910 only about 30,000,000 immigrants were admitted to the United States, and these from the very best stock of Europe. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY], discussing this question in this House on February 4, 1915, said:

> From 1819 to 1883, 95 per cent of the total immigration from Europe originated in the United Kingdom, Germany, Scandinavia, the Netherlands, Belgium, France, and Switzerland. The immigration prior to 1883 was exceedingly desirable, and we were able to add to our population the very best of the red-blooded people of these north Europe countries. The immigration prior to 1883 from these countries has been referred to as the "old immigration," but after 1883 there was a rapid and distinct change in the character of the influx of European immigrants. From that time to this 70 per cent of the movement originated in southern and eastern Europe, and the old-immigration movement in the last 30 years has materially declined.

Speaking on the same subject, February 25, 1914, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] said:

> The report of the Commissioner of Immigration also shows that from September 30, 1819, down to June 30, 1903, a period of 84 years, 21,095,614 immigrants came to this country, whereas during the 10 years from June 30, 1903, to June 30, 1913, no less than 9,713,330 immigrants have arrived. Think of it! Nearly one-third of all the immigration of the last 100 years has arrived since June 30, 1903.

This educational test would bar the very portion of the immigration that we do not want and should not have. It is an indorsement of our own effort and progress in education.

We are spending nearly $1,000,000,000 per year on public schools. Those of our own people who were so unfortunate as to be deprived of educational opportunities are the most ardent advocates of our American school system and are now making the greatest sacrifices to relieve their own sons and daughters of the disappointments and handicaps resulting from a lack of education. While they are doing all this, let us not here in Congress place a premium on ignorance and illiteracy, but instead of that let us stand for the doctrine that the greatest asset of this Nation, and the most essential element of its power, lies in the intelligence, the equipment, the efficiency, and the character of its people.

Now, in view of all this, is it not of the highest importance that our immigration be regulated and restricted? Our first duty is to this country, and our foremost thought in legislation should be America first and America for Americans first. That would mean safety all the time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CASEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather apparent that it will be very late when we get through with the seven hours' debate, and I have asked that the committee rise in order that we may have an agreement in the House, if we can secure it, that at 6 o'clock the committee rise, and that the House then take a recess until 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. SABATH. And that the general debate shall be resumed at that time.

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock the House shall stand in recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

JAMES H. SCHNEIDER—LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. TILLMAN, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of James H. Schneider, Sixty-third Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WM. ELZA WILLIAMS, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. FLOOD, for three days, on account of a death in his family.

To Mr. HART, for 10 days, on account of official business.

To Mr. WOOD of Indiana, on account of the illness of his father.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all who have spoken or who may speak on the bill now under consideration be allowed five legislative days in which to extend their remarks.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that if he is going to give consent to all who speak, he might as well at once get consent for all Members.

Mr. BURNETT. I shall be very glad to include that in my request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all Members have five legislative days in which to print remarks on House bill 10384. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

IMMIGRATION.

Under the rule the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, with Mr. CASEY in the chair.

Mr. SABATH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to state my position on this question. I have heretofore at a former session discussed it briefly before the House. I voted against the rule bringing the matter at this time before the House. I believe that we could have better used our time in perfecting and passing a useful piece of legislation which we have promised in our platform, to wit, legislation on the subject of rural credits. It seems to me that this particular bill has occupied a vaster space in public discussion and in our deliberative time than the magnitude of its results or its relative importance will justify.

I am not sure just what number of helpless, hopeless, and unfortunate immigrants may be turned back or prevented from coming to our shores on account of the literacy test, but I do know that as the years pass by the number of illiterates in the Old World will be less and less, and that the effect of this legislation in each succeeding decade will be far less than it is now. The peasant immigrant of the white race is the under dog in this fight, and we know how prone the stronger and bigger dogs are to jump upon the under dog. Somehow or other I have always felt sympathy for the under dog, and tried to look at things from his eyes; to put myself in his place; to weigh justice and right with his scales. I can not help feeling that in this piece of legislation we are not making a merit of virtue, but we are making a crime of misfortune. It does seem to me that the literacy test is the one test which, applied to the conditions of the nations of the earth to-day, speaks less for our humanity than any other test under the sun. Under our laws to-day we exclude the unfit morally, physically, and mentally. We exclude those who would be a burden upon our institutions and our people, and now we seek to close the door of hope, the gates of our country, to him who is not criminal, who is not a pervert, who is not wicked, but who is simply unfortunate. As I came into the House a moment ago, a gentleman was figuratively wrapping the folds of that flag above the Speaker's desk about his manly form and making an appeal, under that flag which floats over the free, to us to rivet the chains upon the limbs of the helpless of other lands so that they might be everlastingly bound, and I could not help thinking—

Oh, for the rarity of human charity
Under the sun!

[Applause.]

Just a little freedom, just a little chance in life, is dear to us; but how little some of us care to lessen the burdens and light up the hearts and hearthstones of God's children who are hard pressed in the struggles of life. How many of us read the story of the Good Samaritan and then fold the cloak of our sanctimony about us and pass by on the other side? Lazarus and the rich man is a pretty story, but not for our practical use. The dogs may eat the crumbs that fall from our table—the fashionable lap dog may even sit at our table—but the poor we turn from our gate. For one, I will not close the door of hope to the helpless.

Mr. SABATH. How much time did the gentleman from Texas use?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I had not intended to say anything on this measure in the general debate, but twice to-day the name of the city of Youngstown, in which I live, has been used on the floor of this House. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] in his opening remarks mentioned the city of Youngstown, and just a few moments ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] had occasion to say something in regard to that city.

About two months ago there was a strike in one of the steel plants of East Youngstown. I want to make it clear at this point that East Youngstown is entirely separate from the city of Youngstown. It has a separate village government. Things that happened in East Youngstown could not, in my opinion, have occurred in the city of Youngstown. Youngstown has received an undeserved reputation on account of what happened in East Youngstown. The people of Youngstown are law-abiding, representative American citizens, who have looked with keen regret upon the disgraceful occurrence in East Youngstown, and we have a city government and police force which, I believe, is fully competent to control any condition such as developed in East Youngstown. In fact, at the same time that the strike occurred in East Youngstown there was also a strike in one of the mills located in the city of Youngstown, without any of the disorder such as occurred in East Youngstown..

Now, what was the condition that existed during this trouble? The suburb of East Youngstown has a population of about 10,000 people, who speak 11 different languages; and in that population of 10,000 people there are not more than 500 or 600 citizens of the United States. A large body of foreign-born workingmen in this community who were employed in one of the industrial works went on strike for higher wages, and what was the result? The police of East Youngstown were unable to handle the situation and before the State militia could reach that community a drunken mob had burned down $650,000 worth of property and several people were killed in this riot.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], referring to this situation a few moments ago, said that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] did not want a repetition of Youngstown, because he did not want the workingmen to become organized, thereby insinuating that this howling, drunken mob that caused this destruction of property and loss of life in East Youngstown were members of organized labor. I resent such a statement as this by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], for there was not one man in all this mob that took part in this riot in East Youngstown that was affiliated in any way, shape, or form with any union labor organization in the United States of America. [Loud applause.] And, Mr. Chairman, it ill becomes any man to stand on the floor of this Congress and insinuate that the thousands of good, clean, honest workingmen, who are good law-abiding American citizens, that live in the vicinity of Youngstown are ready to uphold such anarchy as was exhibited by the mob during the East Youngstown strike. Mr. Chairman, ever since I was a small lad it has fallen to my lot to associate with the working people, and I feel proud of the fact that my name is recorded in the records of one of the great labor organizations of our country, and I for one, while I am a Member of this body, will rise on these floors and resent anything that is said which has a tendency to reflect on the patriotism and law-abiding spirit of the large majority of the American workingmen who are affiliated with organizations of labor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

Mr. BURNETT. And I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Chairman, there has been introduced this afternoon considerable poetry in the argument upon this bill. If I can get some friend, Roman, countryman to lend me his eyes, I shall introduce a little poetry myself on this occasion. The title of the poem is "The literacy test." The authors of the poem are the people of the tenth district of the State of Minnesota, whom I have the honor to represent.

Mr. MEEKER. This is a result taken by Congressman SCHALL in his own district on this question. Out of 5,958 votes which were cast the total for the literacy test is 4,478 and the total against the literacy test 1,480, and they are by counties for and against the literacy test, as follows:

Counties.	For.	Against.
Anoka	263	114
Chisago	293	61
Isanti	238	147
Mille Lacs	279	78
Pine	227	154
Kanabec	241	97
Wright	349	61
Hennepin	2,588	748
Total	4,478	1,480
Grand total	5,958

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Chairman, in this bill the literacy test seems to be beyond question the one bone of contention. This test, as far as we can find out, has been in one way or another before this House and the other branch of the legislature some 17 times. It has been thoroughly discussed from every possible viewpoint in the last two Congresses. I can not add any new information to the debate, but merely tell you from my angle that which you yourselves do know. My mother could neither read nor write. But I warrant that had the spirit which burned within her Irish breast desired to enter this country it would not have been brooked by the petty test of learning to read 30 words in her own language. [Applause.]

From the age of 9 to my admission to the bar I earned my living by the use of my hands and the sweat of my brow, and if I did not to-day raise my voice with the weak of this country against the strong, with the humble cobbler, carpenter, mechanic, laborer, and in general against the minions of Midas, with the tiller of the soil against the speculator, gambler, and seeker for riches and glory unearned by the sweat of the brow, I should be unworthy of being one of the common people. [Applause.]

Mammon and his millions behind the throne may ultimately defeat this so-called literacy test, but the people who toil and labor all over this broad land will know that we have stood in defense of their rights as God gives us the light to see them.

Some time ago one of my little sons, who was then about 4 years of age, crawled upon my lap and said to me, "Daddy, can't you see me with your eyes?" And I said, "No, darling; I can't." After a moment's reflection he said, "But you can see me with your heart, can't you, daddy?" In his innocent prattle he had struck the keynote of life. It is with the heart that we all see. It is with the heart that we all understand. The heart is the source of power, the source of love, the source of all that is good in the world, and men and women and nations are great as their hearts are great, as their souls are great, as their characters are great. [Applause.] I would not bar any aspiring heart who seeks the haven of our shores, but I do not want any to reach our shores who has not an aspiring heart. Those that will not try and are content with "I can't," I would have remain where God put them, and while I am in accord with the sentiment that runs high for the unfortunate foreigner seeking admission, my sympathy begins at home where millions of pitiful, unkempt little children, despondent, dispairing American citizens, show us our distressing political conditions, the product of money-maddened industry, the divine right of the dollar kings whose avarice creates this insatiable demand for the spiritless man who does not know his rights, and if he did would not have spirit enough to assert them.

The man who can not read 30 words in his own language or dialect and desires to enter this country, gentlemen, if he has the right stuff within his heart to entitle him to become an American citizen, will learn to do it before he knocks at our door.

It is no longer sufficient to be merely good. We must also be lucid; we must know what we do and why we do it. God gave us a mind capable of choice, and he gave us a soul to direct that choice, and the faith that the soul contains will spur the mind to better things in striving to compass the aspirations of the heart. If, then, the soul that would enter our midst will not compass so slight a test, it is too feeble to be one of us, it has shown no sign of lucidity, and therefore no sign that it is capable of becoming an American citizen. Mr. Chairman, character will always draw after it its own conditions and shape its own environments.

Where religion bars a people from educational opportunities, political or property rights, as in the case of the Armenian in Turkey or the Jew in Russia, the eminent fairness of this bill is shown in exempting them from the test, in order that no man on account of his religion may be deprived of entering that country, one of whose fundamental principles is the right of its citizens to worship God as they choose. When kings could not read their names and monks were spelling out their litanies, the Jews were lecturing on scientific, political, and ethical subjects. They are a people martyred for principle, because they feared the wrath of their God more than that of men and loved truth more than life. All Europe is stained with their blood. Even to-day we witness the same old sight of thousands of innocent human beings fleeing for their lives, they know not whither. If suffering ennobles, the Jews have reached the acme and are entitled through merit to our protection.

All the expert opinion of the last 30 years recommends this test as the only practical and feasible one to meet the conditions of to-day. The test is so simple that they who value our citizenship can not complain. All it requires is the first ray of enlightenment, an entering wedge, a feeble aspiration. Is our citizenship so despicable that the knowledge of a 7-year-old school boy is too dear a price? Are our constitutional rights for which we have spent 140 years of treasure, of strife, and of blood so worthless that an alien should not be expected to give even a part of his ocean voyage for them in learning to read three lines? This test is a test of disposition, of aspiration, of character, of energy. It is a test of moral attitude, not as the opposition would have you believe, of literary achievement. To-day when popular education, colleges, public schools, newspapers, books, not only in this country but in all Europe, are the rule, I submit that to read 30 words in one's own language or dialect is in no sense a literacy test. The opposition tell you that you can not test a man's character until after he has lived and died. Thus they relegate this test to the next world. [Laughter.] But, Mr. Chairman, the elements of successful judgment are foresight, not hindsight; not a post mortem, but a prospectus; not ancient history, but modern; not superstition, but science; not the procrastination of the ignorant, but the faith of the prophetic engineer, who maps your project and names your dividends before you invest a dollar.

Shall we legislate to guard the quality and character of the rod in the engine, the brick in the wall, to raise the standard of cotton and corn, to improve the breed of the cow and the hog, to ward against the weevil in the cotton boll and the smut in the wheat, to protect public health by rigid tests, and then proceed to overthrow it all by leaving open our ports to the world's mass of illiteracy? We are not legislating for the seventeenth or the eighteenth or even the nineteenth century. We are legislating for the twentieth century, for the year 1916 and beyond. We are not legislating for the colonial period, when public schools were almost unknown in the world. We are not legislating for the period of the American Revolution, though the founders of this country must have believed that the safety of the Republic rested upon the intelligence of the individual citizen, for they established our public-school system in the same mortar in which they set our Constitution. We are not legislating for the generation immediately following our Civil War, when over 90 per cent of our immigration came from an enterprising, thrifty, alert, adventurous, energetic, courageous class of men, who easily became Americans, who had American ways, who respected American laws, and who loved American institutions, from the fisherman of Norway to the vine grower of France, who came here not at the behest of the agents of the great steamship companies, but of their own free will to carve out for themselves a future and conquer a wilderness. But, Mr. Chairman, the frontier is gone, and most of our natural resources, God's provision for the people, have passed into the hands of great corporations who control mines, mills, forests, fisheries, food products, and the highways of traffic over which they are carried, and who are to-day exploiting the people by on the one hand urging us to protect the products of their industries so that the toiler and laborer of this country may be protected from the products of cheap foreign labor and on the other hand are fighting this test, tooth and nail, that the cheap immigrant laborer may be had to defeat the just demands of the intelligent American laborer. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, on the wings of steam and with the voice of electricity they rally their discipled forces for aggression or defense as speedily as the devil in the ancient legend showed to Jesus all the kingdoms of the earth. It is the boast of one of the largest mining corporations in this country that it has rid itself of all labor troubles by substituting for its former mine hands, largely recruited from Cornwall, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and northern Italy, a new labor admixture, made up of 17 nationalities from south and southeastern Europe, who are not only too spiritless to learn the English language but are too spiritless to assert their own rights.

Is it agriculture that desires the illiterate immigrant? I asked Judge BURNETT the other day, and though I am not positive, I think he will bear me out in the statement that 17 States of the Union have memorialized Congress to grant this test. Your committee of immigrant investigation put the question to the governors of the various agricultural States, and the answer in each instance was for intelligent farmers and farm hands, capable of mastering scientific agriculture; but for the illiterate of south and southeastern Europe there was no demand. During the last 15 years 75 per cent of our immigration came from Asia, Mexico, south and southeastern Europe, of which 43 per cent is illiterate. Over 95 per cent of these illiterates are without a trade. They are below the average human unit physically and mentally. Bowed by the weight of centuries, weakened by want and misery, they huddle together in the slums of our great cities, where they become an easy prey to corruption. In 1914 out of a total immigration of 1,200,000, 900,000 came from countries where from 30 to 90 per cent can not read. Our present immigration law without this test places a premium upon illiteracy and repels that class of citizens who desire to live and bring up their children under a Government that sets value upon enlightenment and gives progress the right of way. It also retards immigration coming from countries like Great Britain, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Germany, Switzerland, where the percentage of illiteracy is less than 1 per cent.

Gentlemen, our present immigration law is not the right kind of advertisement for the right kind of men. Will this test keep out desirable immigrants? The great bulk of the immigration to this country is due to the enterprise and energy of the steamship companies. This test will not lessen their energies. It will simply prompt them to secure a better class. They will say to their agents, "America is getting more particular; she is now demanding men who can read 30 words. Having improved the breed of her cattle and hogs, she is now taking note of the kind of men she is getting." [Applause.]

Now, the opposition come in here and tell us that for 300 years—I guess Brother CANNON went back further than that—for 300 years this country got along fine without any citizenship standards. True; but it is also true that for 3,000 years the world muddled along somehow without either science or order; but, gentlemen, that time has passed. We live in another age, the age of science, the age of progress based on the test of experience. In every branch of our civilization except citizenship, the most vital of all, our progress rests upon standardization.

Mr. GORDON. Would it divert the gentleman if I should interrupt him at that point?

Mr. SCHALL. It will not divert me, but it may bother me some to answer.

Mr. GORDON. Why does the gentleman say——

Mr. SCHALL. Let the gentleman put his question and I will try to answer it.

Mr. GORDON. Why does the gentleman speak of citizenship? This bill does not refer to that.

Mr. SCHALL. I am aware of that; but this bill does refer to the timber from which we propose to make our citizens. In getting a chunk of wood you should see to it that while getting it you pick out a good stick. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. That it does not affect the naturalization laws is the point I want to make.

Mr. SCHALL. No; it does not; but that is the material you are going to make citizens of later, and let us get the material without holes and knots. Let us get some good stuff [applause] while we are getting it.

Mr. GORDON. I could not read or write when I came to this country.

Mr. SCHALL. I could not read and write when I was 12 years of age, either, but I would be ashamed to-day if I could not read or write. I do not read very fast now, but I can write well enough to get money out of the bank when I have any in there. [Laughter.] Every form of our Government to-day gentlemen, rests upon standardization. Science, business, and government rest to-day upon foresight. The difference between ancient and modern civilization and superstition and science is preparedness, foresight which reads the signs before the breaking of the storm, applies the acid test before the poison enters the system, the sifting, testing process which knows the quality and character of every stone, stick, lock, and bar that goes into the foundation and superstructure, anticipating the time of storm and shock.

Now, gentlemen, if science guards us against individual loss, why should we not employ it to guard us against national loss? We demand efficiency in every department except citizenship, upon which the whole fabric of our civilization stands. [Applause.] It is no kindness, gentlemen, to thrust upon people duties for which they have no understanding nor means of understanding. Is it unjust that the immigrant should exhibit capacity for citizenship or at least an intelligent desire for it? To-day, when books, schools, and newspapers penetrate even darkest Africa, is it unjust that the immigrant shall show some spark of aspiration, some inclination toward enlightenment?

Is it unjust to the boy who wants to attend high school that he first know the common branches? Is it unjust to the workman who wants employment in a trade that he should have first served an apprenticeship? Why, gentlemen, this test asks less of an alien seeking a life job as an American than any office in this country would ask of a 10-year-old colored messenger boy. [Applause.]

Give us a sign, brother, that we may know you understand or have the means of understanding; that we may know that you know that you live in the age of the printing press; that you have emerged from the stone age and the condition of the cave man to the age of electricity, where men have powers and duties as citizens of a republic. Give us a sign, brother. What is the sign? Why, just read us a few words in any language you please, and we will take for granted the rest.

Gentlemen, character is the test of life, and the simple test in this bill will drive from our shores no alien who has the courage and purpose worthy of citizenship in the world's greatest Republic. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, this is the third time since I have been a Member of this body that this bill to prohibit immigration has been before Congress, and it is surprising, to say the least, that it should so soon again make its appearance in this House, after having been vetoed by three different Presidents. Its adoption would be a reversal of a policy that has been in force in this country since the day Columbus landed on this continent. I do not believe the people of the United States are in favor of it, nor do I believe they want it to become a law. The real objectionable feature of this bill, and the principal point in controversy, is as follows. I read from page 7, section 3, of the bill:

THE OBJECTIONABLE FEATURE.

That after three months from the passage of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien, or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age; his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in some one of the various languages and dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they emigrated from the country of which they were last permanent residents solely for the purpose of escaping from religious persecution; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who have resided therein continuously for five years, and who have in accordance with the law declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States and who return to the United States within six months from the date of their departure therefrom; all aliens in transit through the United States; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

Now, let me call to the attention of the House the reason why a minority of the Committee on Immigration felt it incumbent upon them by "a strong sense of patriotic duty" to dissent from the report favoring this provision. They said:

The literacy test provided in the bill will not serve to keep out the viciously inclined, the criminal, or otherwise undesirable alien. Experience has demonstrated the fact that with the educational facilities afforded in this land, thousands of illiterates who, unhappily, were denied educational opportunities in their native lands, have learned to read and write here and have shown eagerness to acquire knowledge and fit themselves to become good citizens.

In our opinion, the desirable immigrant is the healthy law-abiding worker, who comes to this country in good faith, and the undesirable immigrant is the clever and educated schemer who immediately upon his arrival begins to find fault with our institutions.

UNAMERICAN AND UNDEMOCRATIC.

There must be a peculiar influence at work somewhere when such extraordinary efforts are put forth to stop immigration under the guise of the so-called literacy test which, to my mind, is unjust, undemocratic, and un-American. The real object of the backers of this proposed legislation is to prevent immigration altogether, but they have not the nerve to come out squarely for what they want. They are afraid to show their hand. If our country had had such patriotic Representatives in Congress in the early days of this Republic and as influential apparently as the men that are promoting this legislation, our glorious flag would fly with fewer stars than are counted upon it to-day. And what seems stranger still is the large number of sympathizers this legislation has in and about this Capitol advocating and promoting the passage of this restrictive measure, men who know little or nothing about immigration; the strongest supporters of this bill have few if any immigrants in their districts. They do not know by experience or personal contact the people they are talking about.

As I have stated before, I come from and live in a district that is made up entirely of foreigners. I doubt if there is another district like it in the country. I think it is safe to state that I represent more Polish people and a greater number of Polish-American citizens than any Member of this House; they are honest, industrious, and law-abiding, and have done their share in the work of building up the city of Chicago; that I, in part, have the honor to represent here a city whose rapid growth and development has been one of the surprises of the country, and the Poles that I know have helped and are still helping to make Chicago the greatest and the most progressive city in all the world. We should feel grateful to and sympathize with the people of Poland. That most unfortunate country has been pillaged plundered, and oppressed, its people cruelly suffering for generations under inhuman and despotic rule. Poland gave to our struggling Colonies, when they needed help most, the distinguished patriots and courageous Gens. Pulaski and Kosciusko, who did so much to aid and assist Washington to secure for this Republic its liberty and independence. [Applause.]

THE ITALIAN IN AMERICA.

I am sure I represent more Italians than any other Member here, and they come mostly from the south of Italy at that; a people that are very harshly criticized by those who do not know them and who never come in contact with them. Let me quote what the chairman of the Immigration Committee says about them on page 5 of the hearings of Thursday, January 20, 1916. He says:

I had a conversation a few years ago with one of the great mine operators in the Birmingham district, in which I asked, "Who are your best laborers?" and he mentioned the Welsh as the best miners, and then came along with other nationalities from northwestern Europe, and the Americans. I said, "Who are your poorest laborers?" He said, "The southern Italians." I said, "Why is it that you employ them? Are they poorer laborers than the negro?" He said, "They stay on the job better than the negro, but otherwise they are poorer than the negro." I said, "Why, then, do you employ the—?" And he said, "For the purpose of regulating wages."

Again, the chairman says they are not like the Germans and the Jews, who come here to become citizens. Oh, what insolence, what an insult and a slander! I hope you do not believe it, gentlemen. They, too, have suffered in the past the misfortunes of war. They come from a section of their country where conditions are such that many of them have been deprived of an opportunity to obtain an education. The Italy of Dante, Raphael, and Michelangelo! What land has done more to influence the destiny of the human race? In my city they are a hard-working, sober, and industrious people and are fast becoming naturalized; many of them have homes of their own. There are no warmer-hearted people on earth anywhere, and none are more faithful to the land of their adoption or more contented than the grateful sons of sunny Italy.

I have quite as many Jews as any other district, and, like the Poles and Irish, they are another persecuted race; and I do not have to tell you of the progress they are making; you can not stop them.

The largest colony of Greeks in Chicago reside in my district. They are industrious, prosperous, and law-abiding people and are fast becoming citizens.

I have the Irish and the Germans. They need no praise from me. I have a few of almost every other nationality on the face of the earth. I know of few native Americans in the district.

CHURCHES, COLLEGES, AND BEAUTIFUL HOMES.

We have in that district great churches, schools, and colleges which compare favorably with those of any other district in this country; also large mercantile houses, immense stores, and manufacturing plants that will equal in size and importance those to be found anywhere on earth.

These people are building and purchasing homes for themselves—beautiful, comfortable, and happy homes—wherein you will find prosperity, contentment, and happiness. They do not patronize the divorce courts and race suicide is something that is unknown among them.

I have a clipping from the Chicago Examiner, referring to the last school census, which will throw a little light on that subject. Listen to what one of the enumerators reported in one block in my district.

TWELVE HUNDRED CHILDREN IN BLOCK.

CHICAGO, May 19.

Twelve hundred children in one block were found this week by school-census enumerators. This is believed to be the prize baby block of Chicago, if not of the world. The block is bounded by Division, Blackhawk, Holt, and Dickson Streets. The population is almost exclusively Polish. Louis Link, with 17 children, is the largest contributor to the imposing total.

[Applause.]

If the bill that you now are considering had been the law in the early days of this "land of the free and home of the brave," many of these people who have done so much to build up Chicago and develop the great West would have been deprived of an opportunity to come here to do this great work or to better their own condition.

The people seeking admission to this country who can not read or write are not the unsafe or undesirable people; a great majority of the unfortunates who fill our jails and penitentiaries no doubt can read and write well, and the cunning criminal and the dangerous classes will be able to defeat the objects of this law. They will be allowed to come in, while the honest and deserving but unfortunate will be refused admittance. We have people in my district who are honest, upright, and trustworthy who can not read or write, who have made just as much progress and have just as much money and are just as good citizens as there are in any other district in this country. They understand the duties, responsibilities, and privileges of citizenship under our form of government; the young men growing up are as loyal to the Stars and Stripes as the youth in any other district. In the recent disturbance with Mexico, at Vera Cruz, one of the first of our soldiers to lose his life in that skirmish was a Jewish boy from Chicago.

A CRIME TO BE ILLITERATE.

Because a man has had the misfortune to be ground down by poverty and deprived of an opportunity to educate himself, is that a crime? Is he to be classed as an undesirable? Many immigrants come here from countries where public education is unknown. Oh, America, how far we are wandering away from the spirit of our fathers! In their day they extended a welcoming hand to the oppressed of every land.

In my district we have the children of immigrants in our schools who are making as much progress as children are able to make in schools in any part of the civilized world. Our night schools are largely attended by immigrants, men and women, who are anxious to learn how to read and write the English language. In our high schools and colleges many of the children of immigrants are preparing for their life work in the various professions, in music, art, and in the sciences. And to-day many of them are to be found in the professions and in positions of trust and responsibility; they are alike prominent in the commercial and industrial life of our progressive, prosperous, and typically American city.

Where would Chicago be to-day without these immigrants and the children of immigrants? They are our bankers, manufacturers, doctors, lawyers, artists, and teachers, and in public life they have been signally and conspicuously honored. They are to be found in public office from the lowest to the highest office within the gift of the people of my State, and they render honorable and faithful service to the people or the community that they serve.

Six of the 10 Congressmen representing Chicago on the floor of this House are sons of immigrants.

One of the surprising things in connection with the passage of this bill is the display of confidence on the part of its advocates that they have votes enough to pass it over the President's veto, but when you think of the powerful lobby that is maintained here in Washington in season and out of season working and lobbying for this bill one ceases to wonder. What are the mysterious influences that are back of this legislation that is so persistent in pushing this bill?

ORGANIZED LABOR NOT A FACTOR.

It is not because some of the officers of the American Federation of Labor favor it and it is not because of your love for organized labor that you are crying for it to pass. That is not the reason. Many who are anxious to vote for this bill were formerly the principal opponents of the bill that was passed by the House a short time ago to prevent the shipment of goods in interstate commerce made in whole or part by child labor.

I regret that the religious issue has been injected into this debate, but I am of the opinion and have always believed—now more than ever—that the anti-Catholic organizations in this country favor and are pressing the passage of this bill. It was so stated on the floor of this House the other day, that they are behind this legislation, and at the hearings of the committee it was said they are in favor of it and anxious for it to pass. It was further asserted at the hearings "that many people are opposed to present immigration because it is Catholic and Jewish instead of Protestant, as the earlier was," and "that religious prejudices existed in Congress against immigrants." That is the actual reason this bill has been introduced again after having been defeated so many times. It is unpatriotic and shameful to allow religious intolerance and bigotry to enter this immigration question. It was also stated at the hearings before the committee that every anti-Catholic and anti-Jewish paper in this country condemned President Wilson for his veto of the last immigration bill. It is the old cry of "America for Americans," the "Know-nothing," "A. P. A." spirit that is still alive and again at work.

Another thing that has caused many of these guardians of liberty to become considerably agitated of late is the hyphen, and malicious and unwarranted attacks are made against a class of citizens that do not deserve it. The hyphenated Americans have done as much to protect the Union of States when their services were needed as the Junior Order of American Mechanics or any other element within our borders. They have taken part in all our wars, and have shown themselves to be as brave, reliable, and patriotic as the most gallant defenders of the Stars and Stripes.

REMEMBERING THE LAND OF OUR BIRTH.

Because a man remembers with love and affection the land of his birth and may have sympathy for the land of his fathers, is that a reason why he should be charged with being disloyal to the land of his adoption? If trouble comes between this and any other country most of the hyphens will vanish, and a great majority of the so-called hyphenated Americans, who have always been and are as loyal to our Government as any other class of citizens under our flag, will again be ready and willing to defend it.

I wish to call your attention to another feature of this bill. It increases the head tax from $4 to $8; and this is another proposition that I believe ought to be stricken from the bill, as it is unnecessary, unfair, and unjust. Four dollars is an ample amount to exact from these poor, struggling immigrants coming here to better their condition, with the hope that they may be allowed to share in the liberty and freedom we enjoy.

I am aware of the apology the chairman of the committee makes for increasing this tax, but I still believe that to increase it above an amount necessary to defray the expenses of the Government in administering the immigration laws is unjust. Upward of a million dollars annually in the past has been wrung from these poor people and turned over to the general fund in the Treasury.

The birthday of Abraham Lincoln was observed in this House a short time ago, and we were told he said at Gettysburg "that our fathers brought forth on this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal," and also it was said on that occasion "that the secret of our love for Lincoln was his own love for his fellow man." Now, what were his views regarding immigration? In his message to Congress December 6, 1864, he said:

I regard our immigrants as one of the principal replenishing streams which are appointed by Providence to repair the ravages of internal war and its waste of national strength and health. All that is necessary is to secure the flow of that stream in its present fullness, and to that end the Government must in every way make it manifest that it neither needs nor designs to impose involuntary military service upon those who come from other lands to cast their lot in our country.

NOT RESTRICTION BUT EXCLUSION.

It was not a question in his day whether immigrants could or could not read or write, nor did they dream at that time of excluding immigrants for such a cause. Now, I have no doubt that the real object of this legislation is to prohibit, if possible, immigration altogether. If you pass this bill, where do you expect to obtain the help that is required to do the work that these men who come here are now doing? Perhaps it is expected that the graduates from our schools will do it. With compulsory-education laws in force, will our school system prepare our youth for such work as cleaning the streets and alleys, handling garbage, and cleaning our sewers? Will our graduates build our railroads, go to work in our mines and upon our farms? We are informed the farmers are in favor of this legislation. Where do they expect to obtain their help? With illiteracy far greater among women arriving here than men, where will you get servants if this bill is passed? Tell us who will do the many difficult kinds of work that women are now doing?

The more I think of this whole question, the more I am convinced that any bill favoring such a test should be defeated. The great army of immigrants that have come to our shores have come here to work to improve and better their condition and to labor for the common welfare and glory of all.

For the benefit of the House, I wish to call your attention to the veto message of Grover Cleveland, when President, calling attention to what a radical departure from our national policy such a law would be; yet how beneficial, he points out, was this immigration to the growth of the country:

VETO OF PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

MARCH 2, 1897.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 7864, entitled "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States."

By the first section of this bill it is proposed to amend section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, relating to immigration by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following:

"All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language * * *."

A radical departure from our national policy relating to immigrants is here presented. Heretofore we have welcomed all who came to us from other lands except those whose moral or physical condition or history threatened danger to our national welfare and safety. Relying upon the zealous watchfulness of our people to prevent injury to our political and social fabric, we have encouraged those coming from foreign countries to cast their lot with us and join in the development of our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

A century's stupendous growth, largely due to the assimilation and thrift of millions of sturdy and patriotic adopted citizens, attests the success of this generous and free-handed policy which, while guarding the people's interests, exacts from our immigrants only physical and moral soundness and a willingness and ability to work.

A contemplation of the grand results of this policy can not fail to rouse a sentiment in its defense, for however it might have been regarded as an original proposition and viewed as an experiment, its accomplishments are such that if it is to be uprooted at this late day its disadvantages should be plainly apparent and the substitute adopted should be just and adequate, free from uncertainties, and guarded against difficult or oppressive administration.

It is not claimed, I believe, that the time has come for the further restriction of immigration on the ground that an excess of population overcrowds our land.

It is said, however, that the quality of recent immigration is undesirable. The time is quite within recent memory when the same thing was said of immigrants who, with their descendants, are now numbered among our best citizens.

A careful examination of this bill has convinced me that for the reasons given and others not specifically stated its provisions are unnecessarily harsh and oppressive, and that its defects in construction would cause vexation and its operation would result in harm to our citizens.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

And now let me present for your consideration the veto message of President William Howard Taft, wherein he declares that he can not sign a bill which in its chief provision violates a principle that ought to be upheld in dealing with immigration.

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3175.

I do this with great reluctance. The bill contains many valuable amendments to the present immigration law which will insure greater certainty in excluding undesirable immigrants.

The bill received strong support in both Houses and was recommended by an able commission after an extended investigation and carefully drawn conclusions.

But I can not make up my mind to sign a bill which in its chief provision violates a principle that ought, in my opinion, to be upheld in dealing with our immigration. I refer to the literacy test. For the reasons stated in Secretary Nagel's letter to me, I can not approve that test. The Secretary's letter accompanies this.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 14, 1913.

And before I close I wish to call the attention of the House to the veto message of President Wilson, in which he states that he believes such a law would deprive many deserving persons the right of asylum. True Americans all over the United States are of the opinion that he did our country a distinct service when he vetoed this bill. Let me read:

WORDS OF PRESIDENT WILSON.

To the House of Representatives:

It is with unaffected regret that I find myself constrained by clear conviction to return this bill (H. R. 6060, "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States") without my signature. Not only do I feel it to be a very serious matter to exercise the power of veto in any case, because it involves opposing the single judgment of the President to the judgment of a majority of both the Houses of the Congress, a step which no man who realizes his own liability to error can take without great hesitation, but also because this particular bill is in so many important respects admirable, well conceived, and desirable. Its enactment into law would undoubtedly enhance the efficiency and improve the methods of handling the important branch of the public service to which it relates. But candor and a sense of duty with regard to the responsibility so clearly imposed upon me by the Constitution in matters of legislation leave me no choice but to dissent.

In two particulars of vital consequence this bill embodies a radical departure from the traditional and long-established policy of this country, a policy in which our people have conceived the very character of their Government to be expressed, the very mission and spirit of the Nation in respect of its relations to the peoples of the world outside their borders. It seeks to all but close entirely the gates of asylum which have always been open to those who could find nowhere else the right and opportunity of constitutional agitation for what they conceived to be the natural and inalienable rights of men; and it excludes those to whom the opportunities of elementary education have been denied, without regard to their character, their purposes, or their natural capacity.

Restrictions like these, adopted earlier in our history as Nation, would very materially have altered the course and cooled the humane ardors of our politics. The right of political asylum has brought to this country many a man of noble character and elevated purpose who was marked as an outlaw in his own less fortunate land, and who has yet become an ornament to our citizenship and to our public councils. The children and the compatriots of these illustrious Americans must stand amazed to see the representatives of their Nation now resolved, in the fullness of our national strength and at the maturity of our great institutions, to risk turning such men back from our shores without test of quality or purpose. It is difficult for me to believe that the full effect of this feature of the bill was realized when it was framed and adopted, and it is impossible for me to assent to it in the form in which it is here cast.

The literacy test and the tests and restrictions which accompany it constitute an even more radical change in the policy of the Nation. Hitherto we have generously kept our doors open to all to who were not unfitted by reason of disease or incapacity for self-support or such personal records and antecedents as were likely to make them a menace to our peace and order or to the wholesome and essential relationships of life. In this bill it is proposed to turn away from tests of character and of quality and impose tests which exclude and restrict; for the new tests here embodied are not tests of quality or of character or of personal fitness, but tests of opportunity. Those who come seeking opportunity are not to be admitted unless they have already had one of the chief opportunities they seek, the opportunity of education. The object of such provisions is restriction, not selection.

REVERSAL OF AMERICAN POLICY.

If the people of this country have made up their minds to limit the number of immigrants by arbitrary tests and so reverse the policy of all the generations of Americans that have gone before them, it is their right to do so. I am their servant and have no license to stand in their way. But I do not believe that they have. I respectfully submit that no one can quote their mandate to that effect. Has any political party ever avowed a policy of restriction of this fundamental matter, gone to the country on it, and been commissioned to control its legislation? Does this bill rest upon the conscious and universal assent and desire of the American people? I doubt it. It is because I doubt it that I make bold to dissent from it. I am willing to abide by the verdict, but not until it has been rendered. Let the platforms of parties speak out upon this policy and the people pronounce their wish. The matter is too fundamental to be settled otherwise.

I have no pride of opinion in this question. I am not foolish enough to profess to know the wishes and ideals of America better than the body of her chosen Representatives know them. I only want instruction direct from those whose fortunes, with ours and all men's, are involved.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 28, 1915.

In conclusion, let me say that you may be able to secure a sufficient number of votes to pass this bill, also enough to pass it over the veto of the President, regardless of his stated objections to this iniquitous literacy test. This evidently was the intention of the promoters of this legislation when the bill was again introduced at this session of Congress. Liberal and devoted Americans everywhere will be dissatisfied and disgusted by the passage of such an act; it does not chime with their sense of justice. By vetoing this bill when passed by the last Congress, President Wilson rendered a distinct service to his country and to his party. It seems strange any faction of that party would bring into Congress at this time a bill that if made a law is bound to prove disastrous to many of those supporting it. It is unnecessary and indefensible legislation and is not demanded by the public. If placed upon the statute book, it will prove discouraging and disheartening to liberty-loving people all over the world, and especially to those who are hoping and longing that some day they may be able to come here to enjoy freedom and to escape oppression and intolerance. This bill ought to, and I hope it will, be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). There is general authority to that effect, the Chair will state.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, my colleague [Mr. BUCHANAN] wishes to insert a speech which is not confined to this bill, and I yielded him time in order to get into the RECORD with his speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the speech indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Reserving the right to object, what is the nature of the speech?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not know.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Texas. The nature of the speech relates to the committee that was appointed this morning to expunge from the RECORD a certain speech which I think undoubtedly ought to be expunged.

Mr. BENNET. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry. This is rather a delicate matter. Is it in order to discuss questions extraneous to the bill at this time?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think the practice of the House perfectly justifies it, and probably the practice of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] will justify it.

Mr. BENNET. The only reason I objected was this: There was a committee appointed, the matter is under discussion, and it did not seem to me that the matter ought to be complicated by further discussion at this time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman does not wish to complicate it by discussion, but clarify it by publication at this time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, what is the answer?

The CHAIRMAN. That we can talk of anything under general debate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There was no agreement?

Mr. BENNET. I did not understand the last words the gentleman from Texas said.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I said I had secured some information that the gentleman's speech will not complicate the situation here as it touches the committee. It is chiefly, I think, for publication in Texas, and for illumination.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman from Texas is a man of long service and one who would not make a statement of that kind lightly. Therefore I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Texas. Mr Chairman, I will not take the two minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, how much time did the gentleman consume?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Did he use it, or did the gentleman from New York use it? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. At any rate, it was used.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY].

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, like the other Members of the House I listened with a great deal of attention and interest to the remarks made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER]. He talked very forcibly and very vigorously, but, in my judgment, not very accurately or very consistently. He made this statement that intelligence and literacy were inconsistent; that they never went hand in hand. I desire to challenge that statement.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COADY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MEEKER. I will have to see the notes before I admit I said it that way.

Mr. COADY. I am confident he made that statement.

Mr. MEEKER. The gentleman may be confident of it.

Mr. COADY. I want to say that among the best men I know, men who have contributed greatly to the progress and development of this country, are men who can not read or write, and never could read or write; but they are men who have raised large families, raised them in the Christian faith, raised them well, and did more than the gentleman from Missouri for the progress and development of the cities in which they lived. [Applause.] Why, the lack of an education, unfortunate and undesirable as it is, does not, in my judgment, unfit a man for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I say the gentleman talked very inconsistently. When the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was addressing the House, the gentleman asked him about the Italians who came to this country and harked back to Italy on the breaking out of the war in Europe, and the gentleman from California frankly told him that they were Italian reservists and not American citizens.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. MEEKER. I object, Mr. Chairman, to being misquoted. I never mentioned Italians.

Mr. COADY. Well, the gentleman mentioned foreigners. I do not believe the gentleman did mention Italians, but he mentioned foreigners who were in this country, and I have not the slightest doubt in the world but that he had Italians in mind, although I am confident he did not say Italians. But whilst the gentleman has been complaining about the foreigners who have harked back to their native heaths to fight for their own countries, he has sat here mute and silent without complaining of the American citizens who have left this country to fight for the allies. [Applause.]

The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the former Speaker of this House, said he had the greatest respect for the labor leaders of this country when they kept within the law, and so have I the greatest respect for the labor leaders of this country. I have received some communications from them. I have respect for men in this world who fight for principle, but I have no respect for the men who have signed labor letters that have been sent to me, because in almost every instance these men are the sons of foreigners, men who left their native land to come here and seek an asylum and have prospered, and now they would enjoin others from coming here and enjoying the benefits of this great country of ours.

Let me read to you some of their names. I have received a letter from Boston, the home of my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE], bearing the name of Martin T. Joyce. Apparently he was ashamed to sign the letter, because the letter is not signed, although his name is at the top of the letter. He neglected to sign the letter.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. COADY. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Joyce is against this bill. No wonder he did not sign the letter.

Mr. COADY. Another letter was signed by Mike Donohue and another by Mike Tighe. Still another was signed by Heinrich Hoehn, and still another by George Schmidt, men whose forbears came to this country seeking an asylum here. I have nothing but contempt for men with names like those who would exclude others from coming to this country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, two years ago a bill similar to the one under discussion, and introduced and fathered by the gentleman from Alabama, was before the House for its consideration and action. After a study of its provisions and the effect of their enforcement I became convinced that it was not a good measure and should be defeated, and I voted against it, and later on voted to sustain the President's veto.

I shall vote against the pending measure because of my conviction that a literacy test is not only undesirable, but is unfair, unreasonable, and un-American and violates our time-honored principles that this country shall be a refuge for the oppressed of other lands, an asylum where the persecuted may come and worship their God according to the dictates of their own consciences without the fear of molestation from any source.

Those of us who oppose this unfair educational test do not oppose those restrictions that are designed to exclude the criminal, the anarchist, the insane, those who suffer from contagious diseases, and others who are likely to become public charges. We do not want such as these, and we favor their rigid exclusion.

Ex-Secretary Nagel, who in the Taft administration presided over the department of which the Bureau of Naturalization was a part, made an exhaustive and close study of this question and reported to the President that the administration of a law with such a test would cost the Government over a million dollars more annually to operate this bureau and that the application of the literacy test could not be fairly and justly made.

The gentlemen on the other side of this question, when confronted with the opposition of President Cleveland to such a test, invariably retort with the excuse that conditions were different during his incumbency of the great office of the Presidency. But, Mr. Chairman, that great President, in his veto message, said that this action was governed by principles—not conditions—and principles never change.

It is needless for me to tell you of the veto of President Taft, whose disapproval of the measure passed during his term of office was made after the report to him by Secretary Nagel, and after an independent and thorough study by himself.

President Wilson said he was constrained by clear conviction to veto the Burnett bill passed two years ago.

Most of our greatest and clearest thinkers are opposed to this test, including Prof. Eliot, president emeritus of Harvard University.

The great metropolitan dailies with one accord have registered their opposition to it, and in doing so they reflected the intelligent and best thought of their communities. Their opposition is based on their belief that the ability to read and write, as required in this bill, does not supply satisfactory evidence of desirable citizenship; that the tests prescribed are not tests of quality or of character or of personal fitness, but they are rather tests of opportunity. They said educational tests should be applied not at the time of entrance of the foreigner but when he submits to an examination for the high privilege of citizenship, and that there had been no lowering of our standards by the immigrants, but that they had lived up to our ideals and had cherished them.

The demand in this country for unskilled manual labor to dig trenches, burrow out openings for subways, do heavy work on railways, is greater than the supply, and it has been this way for years. We need the foreigners to do this rough, heavy manual work, and there is so much of it to be done in a great undeveloped country like ours. Where can you get these laborers? The Irish and the Germans, who formerly did this work, have passed away, and their descendants have prospered to such an extent that they are beyond this kind of work. We have been educating the children free and compelling their attendance at school, as we should do. I believe in free education and I believe it should be as free as the air we breathe. You do not suppose after we educate them that they will go into cellars and ditches to dig. We have educated them far beyond that.

We have educated the negro so that he will not do heavy, rough work.

Then whom have we to do it except the foreigners from the southern part of Europe? Restrict their immigration to our shores and we will shut out the unskilled labor we need in the great work of developing our resources, and at the same time we will limit the work and the opportunities of the skilled mechanics, who need the unskilled laborers to blaze and prepare the way for them. We need more men in this country to help develop our latent resources. There is an admitted scarcity of labor.

In discussing the Keating child-labor bill here on the floor a few weeks ago the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] said that the problem of the landowner in his district is to get sufficient help to run his farm.

Gov. Spry, of Utah, in an address of welcome to the members of the American Bar Association, held in Salt Lake City last August, said, in speaking of the greatness of his State and its opportunities, that they had the land, the water, and the resources, and all they needed is to have people come, locate there, and help develop their resources.

We want immigrants to come over and help us on the farm; we want them to help us develop our latent resources; we want them to fill the places and to embrace the opportunities mentioned by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] and Gov. Spry.

The immigrants arriving here, realizing the opportunities awaiting the tillers of the soil, are going into the country districts in large numbers. In the year 1913 over 300,000 immigrants who came to our shores were men who till the soil.

Labor is in demand, and I believe this demand will soon exceed the supply.

According to an article in the New York Evening Sun, the Canadian Government has arranged to advertise in 5,000 American newspapers for farm laborers. It is said over 30,000 farm laborers are needed to harvest the crops of the prairie Provinces of Canada. This is sure to take from us many men—more, no doubt, than we can spare.

The problem of distributing immigrants over the country has been, I believe, successfully solved. The Jewish Agricultural and Industrial Aid Society is doing a great work in this respect. It is promoting agricultural colonization in the United States on a large scale. It has loaned over $2,000,000 to farmers, and its operations extend over 35 States.

Let us not to-day reverse the wise policy of those who have gone before us; let us not bar our doors against the downtrodden and oppressed of other climes; let us not deny to others the privileges and blessings your forbears and mine found here in America; but let them come in and share with us these privileges and blessings and help us to keep our country what it is—the greatest and most prosperous in the whole world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. COADY. I think I have the right to extend my remarks under the general privilege that has been granted.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the gentleman has that right.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

[Mr. CHANDLER of New York addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASKELL].

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, I think I represent one of the most cosmopolitan congressional districts in this country. I think in numerical strength it is first, or near first, in foreign population. As to qualification of its citizenship I think it has not its equal anywhere. I have been associated for 10 years in public life and civic activities with the people now living in what is known as the tenth congressional district, including as it does the population in the vicinity of Brooklyn known as Brownsville, with a Hebrew population of approximately 200,000, and in another part of the district a large Italian citizenship and a scattered population of other foreign nationalities. After a close association with these people for 10 years I am able as an expert, with that experience, to say that they are an unexcelled contribution to the advancement of our progress and civilization. [Applause.]

I want to say that in 1914, when I was a candidate for Congress in that district, there was an overwhelming protest by the people there, not only by this foreign population of which I speak, but many of our native-born population as well, against the Dillingham-Burnett bill, which was then under discussion. In that campaign I know that I and other candidates as well pledged ourselves to vote against bills of that nature. I took a pledge in that campaign to the people of the tenth congressional district that if I were elected to the Sixty-fourth Congress and legislation similar to the Dillingham-Burnett bill came up I would vote against it and all similar bills. I shall not only vote against the bill but I thought I would be remiss in my duty to my constituents in the tenth congressional district if I did not say a word here to-day in opposition to the Burnett immigration bill. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] stated that it is nonsensical and silly to have this literacy test in it. It seems to me this Burnett immigration bill will keep out annually about 350,000 foreigners, according to the way they were coming here before the war started. If that is so, every man who wants to hold up the dignity of this country and safeguard our institutions and properly protect labor in this country ought to be for the bill.

We have a hundred million people in the Republic now. Some men seem to think that we ought to let all the foreign elements come in and overpower the original American citizen. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said there were very few people in this country who were here and had American names in 1790. That may be true, and I do not dispute it. He further said that in this country in the Southland they had only 2 per cent of the immigration, because there was servile labor with which the foreigner would have to mingle and upon which an aristocracy looked down. He is still mistaken in that suggestion. The great majority of the white people in the South make their living by the sweat of their brow, and character is the standard of society instead of wealth or where a man might come from. Of course no decent white man associates with the Negro race.

Labor is honorable in my country. We all work for a living.

This Republic has vital questions confronting it now. Some speakers on this floor have said that all the people of foreign birth are true to the American flag. It strikes me that within the last few months there have been some people in this country publishing in magazines and periodicals articles against the American flag and against the American Government, and even against the American Nation.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not the time to yield; I have only a few minutes. Public opinion in this Republic against America comes from foreigners. I do not believe that a man born and reared in this country is responsible for any upheaval against our flag. [Applause.]

We all know that a great many foreigners who have become naturalized are good citizens and loyal Americans. Yet we know there is a large foreign element in our country now that has been sowing the seeds of discord ever since the development of delicate diplomatic questions with the European nations involved in the war now raging in Europe. Before the war began in that country about 1,500,000 aliens were pouring into the United States every year. Since the war has been in progress the average is about 400,000 a year. When that bloody struggle is over, do you not think the desire will be greater to emigrate to the United States? I fear a great flood of immigration will then be headed this way. Our country can not assimilate this great horde of foreigners. Who wants them to come to the United States? The great trusts, corporations, railroad companies, mine owners, and other large employers of labor. They want them here for the purpose of beating down the price of wages. They use these ignorant foreigners as sledge hammers to beat over the heads of laboring men.

The steamship companies want them to come for the profit of transporting them. The political bosses in the large cities where the ignorant element congests itself use the ignorant foreign element to carry on the nefarious work of machine and corporate domination over the people.

I for one know that the great majority of the laboring people and the farmers of this country do not want this great flood of foreign immigration pouring into the United States. The people who study this question seriously realize what a menace unrestricted immigration is to the Republic.

Some of the gentlemen who have addressed this House to-day appear to be more solicitous about the welfare of the people of other countries than they are about the people of our own country. Gentlemen, I stand for America first. I consider it my duty to my constituents and to my country to look out for and protect our people. It is my judgment that the best interests of our people and of our Government demand that we pass this bill with the literacy test in it. I voted for this bill on former occasions, and I shall vote for it every time it comes before this House.

How can this Republic stand if we continue to permit all the scum of creation—the anarchist, the blackhand, and the bomb thrower—to come here from every portion of the world to undermine our institutions, destroy society, and overthrow the Government? If my voice and vote will shut the gates against them, they shall not come here and endanger and despoil fair America.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party in 1896, when the lamented McKinley was a candidate, adopted a plank in its platform favoring this legislation—an educational test. A similar plank was carried in the platform of the Democratic Party. Both parties were pledged in favor of the restriction of undesirable immigration. President McKinley was elected upon that platform by an unprecedented majority. No subsequent party platform has repudiated or changed or modified the declarations proclaimed by both parties at that time. How many foreign immigrants were we receiving in the year when both parties went upon record in favor of keeping out undesirable immigration? We were receiving 343,267; and the illiterates over 14 years of age numbered 83,196.

The population of the United States at that time was 70,884,554. In 1914, prior to the present European war, we received 1,218,480, and the illiterates over 14 years of age numbered 263,226. We increased our foreign population, our immigration, in the year 1914, 875,000 over the number landed the year the Republican and Democratic Parties declared in favor of restricting immigration. President Wilson, in 1902, in his history of the American people, stated we were receiving too many of what he termed "the lowest class of people from southern Italy and the meaner sort from Hungary and Poland," and that "the Chinaman was to be preferred as a workingman, if not as a citizen, to the coarse crew" we were receiving from those countries. How many were we receiving at that time? We received that year 165,101 illiterates and in 1914, 263,225. Now, taking the total number of immigrants, in 1913 we received more than double the number landed the year President Wilson wrote his condemnation of undesirable immigration. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY] is indignant about an alleged criticism made on the floor of this House against the immigrants from southern Italy. I call his attention to the criticism of the President of his own party on the character of immigrants we have received from southern Italy.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not in 10 minutes, unless the gentleman can give me some time.

Mr. SABATH. I wish I could.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the most serious, vital, and far-reaching question involved here—and it is above party, above creed, above class—is the enormous increase in our population. We increased by immigration 2,645,707 in 24 months—1913 and 1914—prior to the present war in Europe. We have now 30 people to the square mile. The Russian Empire has 20, Italy 51, Germany 60, and Japan over 300. I made a trip through Japan last summer, and there are 525,000 Japanese women and girls working in textile mills for from 8 to 15 cents a day. Skilled mechanics in Japan, in the steel mills, in the railroad shops, in the factories, arsenals, and so forth, are receiving the highest wage paid, and that is 37½ cents for a day's work. No wonder the working people of all classes in this land feel a deep and earnest interest in this proposed legislation. Continue to keep our doors wide open and the time will come when we will have an overpopulated country, just as they have in Italy, where they work longer hours for lower wages; just as they are doing in Germany, in Poland, in Hungary, in Austria, in China, in Japan, and in other overcrowded countries, where they work for one-third and as low as one-tenth of what is paid in the American workshops. Keep the doors wide open and the ceaseless tide of immigration to our shores, and our women will work for from 8 to 15 cents a day in the textile mills of America, and skilled mechanics will labor longer hours at lower or starvation wages. Our high standard of wages and living will be a thing of the past. No wonder the faithful engineer at the throttle appeals to our patriotism; no wonder the representative of more than 2,000,000 honest American farmers knocks at the doors of Congress for relief; no wonder Mr. Gompers, at the head of an organization of over 3,000,000 of organized workers, petitioned against the coming danger to the American wage earner; no wonder not only organized but unorganized labor is urging the passage of this bill. You may stop it, you may halt it, you may delay it, by an unpatriotic veto or otherwise, but the American people are determined to write it on the statute books. [Applause.]

The sure and certain way to retain our high standard of wages and living, the highest and best in all the world, to continue and insure advancement, prosperity, and happiness in the United States is to stop the flood of cheap foreign-made goods and the coming to our shores annually of more than a million idle men.

No man will ever again be elected President of the United States who does not pledge his support to legislation of this kind. Never again will we choose a President who thinks more of the men who live beyond the seas than he does of American freemen, American workingmen, and American firesides.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. No. Recently 400,000 of these people returned to fight in Europe and 200,000 more could not secure passage. Yet you praise them for leaving America to fight in Europe. The American taxpayers are educating their children, America was giving them work, and our institutions caring for their sick, their insane, and their poor and unfortunates. They owe allegiance and obligation to this country higher than to any foreign land. We should write upon the statute books of our country a law compelling these people when they come here to share in the blessings of our prosperity, to enjoy the benefits of our public schools and our free institutions, to become a part of the American citizenship, and they should declare within 48 hours after they land that they intend to become American citizens. They send back every year $250,000,000 to foreign shores earned in America which should remain here for the purchase of homes and aid in the development of the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Have they not produced double that amount?

Mr. AUSTIN. They are coming here because they live in an overpopulated country, where every calling and trade is overcrowded, where the standard of wages and living is much lower than in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, believing that I can add nothing new or interesting in this debate, and that my remarks if extended in the RECORD may be of some interest to my constituents, I ask the privilege of extending them in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that privilege already.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman from California use some of his time?

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, with the rest of the committee I have listened with much interest to the discussion of this question. In the Legislature of Pennsylvania a bill that had been up before the two branches as often as this has been here would be denominated an "old soldier," and yet I am convinced that the import of this legislation transcends the consequences of any other question now before the American people.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard it stated here to-day that there are those in favor of the bill who have an ill feeling toward certain nationalities. For my part I am ready to welcome the Jew, the Armenian, and the Dago, and any other race or nationality, providing, Mr. Chairman, they can measure up to some reasonable conception of what this great country means. I say, Mr. Chairman, that never anywhere in all the history of all the world has there been a country with institutions as broad and great and liberal as this, and hence I believe it is time for us to look about and inquire whether at any time there is to be in this country such a thing as a distinctive nationality. In other words, when will the time ever come that a man may have his shoes shined on the sidewalk and know the language of the man who shines them, or that he may have a meal served him and know the language of the man who serves it, or, may I say, have a refreshment passed over a bar or counter by a man whose language he understands, or where in any of the great cities he may offer a street car fare and be able to get an answer in the English language?

My friends, I know a man up in New England who went down to New Haven and on the street of that city inquired for the register's office, where he desired to have some papers recorded in connection with his property, and he walked three squares and asked of every man he met, and he was unable to find anybody who could speak the English language until he met a colored man. [Laughter.] That is true enough. Now as to the conditions. Where, my friends, is the opposition to this bill coming from? You and I all know. We have great sympathy for you gentlemen, our good friends, excellent associates here, and we sympathize with you. In this one great instance you come from centers of population and it suits you better to yield a little to the importunities of those who may want to have their friends come over here or for some reason not assigned; but nevertheless it happens, as it happened in two previous sessions, when I was here and voted for this bill, and when the President vetoed it, that I noticed particularly that the vote against the bill came from the centers of population, and really there is great justification——

Mr. OAKEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. I have not very much time and I have a lot to say; but I will yield; go ahead.

Mr. OAKEY. In the absence of my colleague from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]——

Mr. TILSON. I am here.

Mr. OAKEY. The gentleman should not be on that side of the House. I want to say that there are men in Yale University who speak the language.

Mr. FOCHT. Yes; and I know some of them in Yale University, when the inquiry was made, who said there was a French teacher who could speak not only French but 10 different languages, and the gentleman who inquired about it said that certainly English was not one of them. Now, the only protests against this bill I have received from eight of the great counties which I represent, constituting one-seventh of the area of the State of Pennsylvania, are but two, and it is self-evident what inspired them. I notice what we call in the printing business a boiler-plate petition, a sort of patent inside, and to a newspaper man it is sometimes a little suspicious. I happened to turn on the other side and I found some language there to me impossible, but I judge from my sojourn in several colleges it must be Hebrew, and I will submit it to the Public Printer to be printed in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. It is Yiddish.

Mr. FOCHT. I will say to you that I am a Republican protectionist, a real protectionist. I am not only for a tariff, but I am in favor of protecting American industry and American labor.

In this connection I would like any gentleman who will follow me to explain this away and clear us all before the American workingmen, whose votes we all seek and whom we all promise before we are elected what we are going to do for them. I would like to ask any American protectionist what protection it is to unskilled labor to have all the mountain-high tariff laws you can erect if you are going to allow this free flow of a million and a quarter of foreigners to come here and compete with that labor?

My friends, it is possible—and we subscribe to it cheerfully—for this Government to take away all our property, tax it away. This Government can come and, as some one here said, draft us, as was incorporated in a bill the other day, and not only take our possessions, but take us to protect the country. Now, if we are willing that that should be done—and we surely are—then it is the duty of this Government to protect her citizens. And that is not done when a million and a quarter of foreigners are allowed to come here to compete with American labor and prostitute and degrade the dignity and lower the standard of living of our workingmen.

Now, in proof, Mr. Chairman, that a condition most horrible exists in this country in that respect let me read a letter written by a minister living in Vermont. He tells us what the American workingman must compete against. And this is what he says about the tariff we read so much about and about which we speak so much here:

> Why can not Congress see the fundamental relation of the whole matter of protection and immigration? Certainly the great hordes of men and women who face low European wages after the war ceases will not remain in Europe if they can come here. Some time ago we made a survey of our town. We found within a stone's throw of the main street that runs by our church three houses remade from small stables, such as one has when he keeps a horse and cow, with place for a buggy and a hayloft. In these three houses there were 47 Polacks, made up of 9 families (9 men and 9 women), 17 children, and 12 boarders. These men can and do undercut American wages, for Americans can not and will not live as these people live. I am for Americans first, last, and always, in labor, in preparedness, and everything else. One gets a little different view of such things when one gets away from an agricultural district into a region where American industry should thrive.

In the discussion of foreign immigration the nativity of our own ancestors is naturally suggested. Voltaire said great and good men do not need to stand on what ancestors did or did not do. A young man in Philadelphia spent a great sum of money having the genealogy of his family run out, only to be told after some considerable time that he was merely an adopted son. An Irish lady when asked where her ancestors sprang from replied, "My ancestors did not spring from anywhere; they always sprung at 'em." When "Uncle JOE" CANNON was asked as to his nationality, his response was that he was part English, part Irish, part Hungarian, and quite some American, but that it made little difference as to his forbears, for, after all, the mongrel pup often made the best trick dog. Of course it is only human nature to be proud of great and good ancestors and to say little about and try to forget those who were not.

The question with us now is not one of ancestors and how we got here, but it is a question of vital importance and interest to determine where we are going and how we will get there, carrying as we do this excess baggage in the shape of 1,200,000 illiterate foreigners added to the Republic's load each year. In any argument we may offer we will not undertake to justify our ground by presenting or attempting to present comparisons with the past, for there is no country and no past that is great enough and broad enough and comprehensive enough in any division of government or economy to be in any sense a guiding lamp for this the mightiest Nation and only successful confederated democracy the world has ever seen. Being without counterpart, the future of this Nation must be therefore uncharted, and the hope of its perpetuation must necessarily rest upon the sheet anchor of Christianity, patriotism and intelligence. We find in Goldwin Smith's book the interesting story of our early colonization, but there is nothing even there that could act as a guide or precedent in measuring up to the requirements of the present crisis. For me I care little about history or tradition in connection with this immigration business. I would much prefer to stand on the ground held by that great philosopher and Republican statesman, Thomas B. Reed, who once said he cared not so much for the pedantic maxims and theories of the bookmen, nor so much as to how a proposal might sound or look; what he wanted to know as influencing his decision and conclusion in the last analysis was, How does it work?

It is too often the tendency in public discussion for scholars to point to Rome and Greece and endeavor to frame a comparison of conditions with then and now. It is all pointed out with splendid imagination why and how these once great States rotted and fell into decay. Many thousands have accepted as accurate the conclusions of these scholars, but there are others who are skeptical as to whether these Governments of Rome and Greece ever were as great and potential as the historians record. But even if correct, Rome, in her highest glory under Augustus Cæsar, had but 54,000,000 population, and it is said that more than 60 per cent counted within her dominions were slaves and barbarians. When the great battle of Marathon was fought the population of Greece is estimated to have been but three and one-half millions. There is certainly nothing bewildering about this, and surely these Governments could not possibly have been called upon to solve the many complex economic questions which the great American people have successfully negotiated; and no man will contend that we could not in a single day raise more and better fighting troops right in Pennsylvania than ever fought under the standards of Greece at any one time. These countries may have fallen and their glory departed because of corruption, but that corruption was due to the fact that those countries were pagan and not Christian. This Nation will live because it is Christian. Although this question of immigration is more vital than the trust issue and the tariff question and has direct bearing on both, it relates in no way to your ancestors and mine, but does have much to do with the future of our children. It is a question to be determined whether Americans or foreigners are to govern and control the United States. Let us accept Tom Reed's method of holding the scales and arriving at results, and not be misled and swayed by momentary impulses because our ancestors came from somewhere some time ago, or be blinded by the sentiment of the hour when the country stands in such imminent peril. There is nothing analogous in the causes which caused Rome and Greece to fall with the perils which beset this country, and there is no relationship or analogy with the kind of people who came here 100 or 200 years ago and those who are coming here now.

Even of the kind coming here now we might assimilate a few, but if the onrushing horde continues in unabated numbers the dominance of the Anglo-Saxon is doomed on this continent. With me it is a question of number and kind, and therein rests my opposition to unrestricted immigration.

Your ancestors and mine perhaps came from the north of Europe, emigrating from the fair valleys of the Palatinate. They were people whose ancestors were first heard of as emerging from the Baltic Sea section, and were referred to by Tacitus and Cæsar. They swept everything before them, beating back the best soldiers of the Cæsars, until the gates of the Eternal City were battered down. Or your ancestors may have been among the good Dutch or Swedes, or those Scotch-Irish who depopulated Ulster County to come here and become nation builders, or they may have come as natives from the Emerald Isle to become nation rulers, for the Irish are said to rule every country excepting Ireland. But when these pioneers came they came to stay. They came for religious and political liberty, they came to make a country. They cut away the wooded hills and cultivated the plains, and when their flag was assailed or even endangered they quickly laid aside the implements of peaceful industry and took up the sword. And for their homes and their country countless thousands on many battle fields gave up their lives.

But what about a vast majority of those coming here now? A misfit picture has often been painted of the incoming immigrant and has excited the sympathy of many unwary and unthinking. It is this: The great ocean liner appears off Sandy Hook, she is slowly piloted through the Narrows, and as the mists rise from the inner bay the Statue of Liberty, the immigrant's beacon light of hope, is beheld; then as he passes up Broadway he observes the statue of Nathan Hale, in Park Place, which patriotically inspires him as he reads the inscription on the monument, "The only regret I have is that I have but one life to give to my country." Then the immigrant is further inspired as he beholds the statues of Lafayette, Lincoln, Sumner, George Washington, Daniel Webster, and Simon Bolivar as he passes along the great thoroughfare and through Central Park. He crosses New Jersey and in every direction he sees points closely associated with the conflicts of the Revolution. Then, upon arriving in Philadelphia, he walks in the shadow of Independence Hall and is within 20 miles of Valley Forge where the snows were reddened with the blood of Continental patriots.

But this picture is all moonshine so far as the immigrant of to-day is concerned. The men who come here to-day, or most of them, have no comprehension of what all this means—these glorious heritages, these memories of a divine struggle, this test, and successful test, of man's ability to operate a representative government. And it seems that many, at least, do not wish to know, for the commissioner's report shows that more than 40 per cent of those who do come go back and annually take with them $350,000,000 of our good gold, which is gone forever.

The kind of immigrants we want now are the sort who will become producers, those who will produce the things which sustain human life. While they consume little, yet what they do consume helps raise the price of what you and I must have to maintain an existence and support our Government. The colonization of many of these immigrants in our great cities is the bane of our land. Assimilation is our only hope, but too many come for that, and there must be restriction. Certainly, if a foreigner is not sufficiently anxious to come to be stimulated to the trouble of learning to write his own name, then he should not be allowed to enter; and if he is mentally incapable of learning, then he is an undesirable and unfit to enjoy the protection of a government even as paternal as this one. In some of the Southern States before a colored man is allowed to vote he must not only be able to read the Constitution but to explain it. In addition to this, in some cases he must pay from $1.75 to $2.50 poll tax to enable him to be registered. Some of my colleagues propose to be much more liberal with these new-coming foreigners than the southerners are with real Americans, although of African descent.

When I say we want producers, I assert that very few of those who are coming now engage in agriculture. Of 1,030,000 from southern Europe landed here in recent years but 10,000 are engaged in farming. Therefore to this horde of unproducing foreigners may in some measure be attributed the present high cost of living.

We have the report of the commission which investigated this whole subject. That commission gave to the world most astounding information, revealing a condition of avarice and degradation never before dreamed of. Not only the white-slave traffic, which horrified all men and women of clean morals, but the industry of the foreign Steamship Trust in advertising and even canvassing every European village for immigrants was a shock to the American people who have been sitting supinely by while the country has been flooded with the ignorance of Europe. I do not protest against the coming of the healthy, intelligent, upright immigrant who wishes to make the United States his home, who comes here to become a part of the Republic and follow and aid in working out its destiny. I believe in freedom and free men and a free country, and I believe intelligent men are capable of self-government, but ignorant men can only add vexation and complication to the many hard problems of state now confronting the Government.

My answer to all the arguments against this literacy test—and that is all the act requires—is written in the laws passed by the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Massachusetts, New York, and Pennsylvania. These great States found it necessary to enact laws providing for the deportation of aliens quartered upon these Commonwealths. As chairman of a committee appointed by the Senate of Pennsylvania, I personally visited every public institution in the State, and my report shows that at that time there were quartered upon the Commonwealth 20,000 aliens, who cost approximately $2,000,000 annually of State funds to sustain. If this be relatively true in other States of the Union, then the burden imposed upon the country by these aliens must mount into tens of millions. And while these enormous sums are being spent in a public way to take care of the indigent of other countries, thousands upon thousands of true Americans stand in need of better pay that they may properly provide for their own families.

In opening my remarks I stated that immigration bore relationship to the tariff, and so it does. The protective tariff theory conceived by Hamilton and advocated by every public man of broad conception since his day, was that competition between American industries should bring about unhampered and unhindered the operation of the law of supply and demand, and at the same time protect our market and our labor. But the result in recent years has seen competition strangled, and in many instances price-fixing trusts developed and become almost impregnably entrenched. The Democratic theory is to smash the trusts and monopolies by sending our money abroad for the purchase of foreign goods, and then in case of a deficit to raise revenue by means of an income tax. The Democratic policy of free trade will unquestionably very speedily destroy the trusts and monopolies, but it will at the same time destroy everything and everybody else. My theory is to enact and maintain a sane and sensible tariff. The tariff originally designed to raise revenue and protect industry and labor has been a success in accomplishing the former, but so far as the laboring man is concerned, in the presence of 1,200,000 unskilled laboring immigrants coming in each year, it is a farce and a joke. Immigration as conducted to-day puts unskilled American labor on the free list. And with 10 workingmen to 1 in the professions or in business, what chance has the Republic to live on if the American laboring man is not given wage enough to sustain himself, support his family, and send his children to school, and who must compete for his wage with a foreigner who can and does often live on 10 cents per day?

We do not hear much said against immigration in public speech or the public press. If anything is said, it is usually a protest, and sometimes the protest is a gentle hint, but more frequently a violent assault, against those whose attitude like my own is assumed from purely patriotic motives and through a desire to save the workingmen of the land from the penury, degradation, and competition with the foreigner of low-standard living, and which condition must speedily grow worse unless this bill offers relief. In the same newspapers which oppose the bill may be noticed many clothing store advertisements and in some displayed steamship announcements. The absence of outspoken interest for this bill might be because lawyers are afraid of their clients, members of the legislature and State senate tremble in the presence of a few recently naturalized foreigners, and in some instance because Congressmen residing in centers of population where there is a congestion of foreigners and a large foreign vote do not wish to commit political suicide, and so it is left to those of us who do not have many foreigners in our districts to speak out in meeting and speak the truth and what we think and what others think, as well.

We have accepted the responsibility of supporting and sustaining this Republic. The foreigner of to-day, in many instances, does not do this. He accepts one thing only, and that is the opportunity to come here, live on husks, horde his gold, then leave the country poorer for his having been here, but himself enriched.

I hope this measure may be effective in keeping out a vast number of foreigners, and that the day may come when there will be a distinct and recognizable type of American citizenship. That is not the case to-day, and is less so than 50 years ago. Let us check the inflow until we have assimilated the more recent invoices, and until they have learned to know what that flag stands for, and not only what it symbolizes, but the cost of life and treasure it has taken to sustain its integrity. Let us close the gates, in part at least, for a time and teach these aliens already here that the flag stands for liberty but not license, that it will protect the weak and unfortunate but abominates and despises the vicious and criminal, and that intelligence is the rock of our Constitution and the hope of the future. Patriotism purified and sanctified by the blood of countless thousands of men and the suffering and tears of women, scattered the stars on that field of blue which typifies the expanse of God's own sky. It is the purest emblem ever unfurled in the mighty tide of time. Let all men who enjoy its protection love and revere it, but first know its cost and what it represents.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I feel somewhat confused, as this is the first time I have attempted to address any remarks to the House; but as I come from a State and district largely industrial, I feel I should make my position clearly known on the pending immigration bill.

I thought when I came to Washington it would be my first duty to listen to the words of wisdom which fall from the lips of the older Members, and we who are serving our first term should see and be seen, should "stop, look, and listen" before undertaking to make a speech on the floor of this House; but I have, after observation and experience, come to the conclusion about one-half of the speeches made in this House are not made with the expectation of influencing the final vote on a bill, but the speeches are made for the people at home, having for their purpose the intention of convincing the dear people at home their Representative is making good in Washington.

I have the honor to represent in this House a district in West Virginia that produces almost one-half of the coal produced in that State, and, as you are aware, West Virginia is second only in the production of coal to the great coal-producing State of Pennsylvania. Any law written upon the statute books by the lawmakers of the Federal Government in any way affecting capital or labor will of necessity be felt in the district I represent in this House.

I feel I know something about coal mines, industrial plants, and the employment of labor in coal mines and industrial plants. I have spent practically 30 years of my life working in coal mines or aiding in the industrial development of the coal mines of West Virginia. Like the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Labor, Mr. LEWIS, I have been all along the line. I have occupied every position in a coal mine except fire boss. At the age of 10 I was a trapper boy in a coal mine, the proud possessor of a miner's cap and lamp. I opened and closed a door in order to properly divert the air currents in the mine. I have driven the kicking mule in the mines, I have dug and loaded the coal, have assisted in running cutting machinery, locomotives, both steam and electrical, and was, a short time prior to my election as a Member of this House, manager of three of the largest coal-mining companies in my district, so I feel my experience in the mines and about the mines and my acquaintance with labor give me peculiar knowledge as to the employment of labor, both native and foreign, in the coal mines and industrial plants of this Nation, and especially in the State of West Virginia. Only one county in my district does not produce coal, and my district comprises 12 counties, having a population of over 300,000 souls.

There are over 1,000 coal mines at this time in the State of West Virginia, producing over 70,000,000 tons of coal annually. Over 80,000 men are directly engaged in the mining of coal in that State. The very life of the State depends upon the coal industry. Over $55,000,000 are annually paid out in pay rolls by the coal companies operating in the State. The welfare of cities, towns, and villages is tied up and dependent upon the success of the coal industry. Every single railway, except a branch of the Baltimore & Ohio Railway Co., was built into the State for the purpose of engaging in the transportation of coal, coke, and lumber. Over 400 lives are sacrificed annually in the coal mines of West Virginia in order that heat, power, and the light which reflects in this Chamber to-day be given the Nation.

We passed in this House the other day the child-labor bill. I felt when the bill passed it would have its disadvantages as well as its advantages, as I know from experience it will drive hundreds of widows to the washtubs to earn an honest dollar to support their children; but I realized sooner or later this legislation would have to pass, and I felt, in the language of the governor of the State of West Virginia, "The boys and girls of West Virginia are the most precious asset the State has, and to-morrow they will become the men and women of the Nation," and for that reason I voted for the child-labor bill; but I would have felt much better had I had an opportunity to vote for and seen passed at the same time a national mothers' pension bill.

In this connection it is fair to say that no word of protest did I receive from the coal operators or the manufacturing interests of West Virginia against the passage of the child-labor bill. In view of the fact that bill has for its purpose the better development of the youth, both physically and mentally, to meet the conditions of life, I insist we should go a step further and pass legislation which will restrict immigration and not put our labor on an equality with the ignorant labor which has been flooding this country for years.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Do not these common laboring people, whom you call ignorant immigrants, make it possible for American laboring men to secure higher positions?

Mr. KING. The gentleman made no such statement as that.

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. What is that?

Mr. SABATH. You said that the immigrant will take away and does take away the position of the American laboring man. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that due to immigration the American laboring man secures higher positions, the same as you have, because they do the rough and common work?

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. It beats down the price of labor in this country every time you bring a laboring man from Europe. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if it is not the fact that the price of wages is higher to-day than it was when the gentleman started to work in the coal mine?

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. The price of labor to-day is higher by reason of the fact that thousands of these men have gone back to lose their lives in the trenches of Europe instead of in the coal mines of Pennsylvania and West Virginia by by reason of their ignorance. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that privilege.

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, released from the schools of the States at the age of 16, thousands of the youth of the land will be forced by necessity to enter the mills, mines, and manufacturing plants of the Nation to "earn bread by the sweat of their faces"; educated to at least the limit required by State and national law, capable, both mentally and physically, to meet successfully the problems of life; I ask in the name of justice, in the name of right, in the name of humanity, if it is fair to these boys, to my boy, perhaps your boy, who have followed the rules and regulations written into law by the lawmakers of the Nation, to keep open wide the doors of this country to the ignorant labor of Europe, when it is well known these men from Europe will be freely admitted to the mills, mines, and manufacturing plants of our country, and will work side by side with our boys, putting in peril their lives, and when it is well known an ignorant brain can and will in the end destroy, not only himself, but perhaps every one of his fellow workmen?

It appears to me you have undertaken to prescribe a bill of health the youth must follow to prepare him for life, and after he has followed your rules and regulations and kept his body and mind clean and pure turn into his room a man infected with smallpox, scarlet fever, leprosy, or other dangerous contagious disease, and tell him to live or die with him. Admitting ignorance and greed to enter our mills, mines, and manufacturing plants, and increase to a large degree the dangers of an already hazardous occupation.

Safety first is flashed from the hilltops in letters of light in the mining camps of West Virginia. The State maintains an expensive mining department to fight the dangers ever found lurking in the coal mines of the State. The National Government, after years of neglect decided it was imperative to cooperate and lend governmental aid to a scientific study of the greatest of all our industries, and to-day we see mine-rescue stations established all over this land; we see experimental stations established, endeavoring by experiment to find out the causes of explosions which in the twinkling of an eye send so many men to meet their Maker.

We see the States passing rigid mining laws; we see laws on the statute books of the States requiring a thorough understanding of the same before a man be permitted to work in a coal mine; yet we see the laws of the National Government allowing ignorance and poverty freely admitted into our fair land, to nullify and make of no legal force the good work being undertaken by the State mining departments, the Bureau of Mines, and the safety-first promoters. Millions spent for State and Federal research; but as long as ignorance and poverty are allowed to come to America and make this home, we shall continue to see the coal and the manufacturing products of our Nation washed in blood. I make the assertion without fear of successful contradiction more lives are sacrificed to-day in the coal mines of America through ignorance than through the ordinary accidents which are likely to occur in any coal mine, and this ignorance is manifested through failure or inability to read and study the rules and regulations, and thereby be better able to protect life and property by following the rules and regulations written by men of experience. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

It is not the experienced miner I fear in the coal mine, not the miner who reads, studies, and follows the rules; but the greedy, ignorant foreigner, the man who will take the chance, and in order to earn a dollar quickly and without labor fire a shot from the solid, which may result in blowing himself and every man in the coal mine to eternity. The man who undertakes to accomplish with an ignorant brain that which he should do with a lazy muscle; the love for the American dollar is dearer to him than the life of his fellow workman.

Of the 78,041 employees directly connected with the production and distribution of coal and coke for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, 28,830 were foreigners and 49,211 Americans.

The above statement of the West Virginia Mining Department for the year ending June 30, 1914, shows that more than two foreigners to every American, based on numbers employed, were killed in the mines of the State for that year. This, in my opinion, is due to the fact that the foreigners coming to our shores for the past several years have been the ignorant, uneducated of Europe.

Since 1897 there have been killed inside the mines of the State as follows:

Killed by falls of roof and coal	2,230
Killed by mine cars	446
Killed by gas explosions	340
Killed by dust explosions	590
Killed by electrocutions	144
Killed by other causes	641
Total	4,391

The experience of persons killed and injured for the past 14 years, from 1901 to 1914, inclusive, is as follows:

Having an experience of 1 year or less	2,287
Having an experience of 2 to 5 years	3,147
Having an experience of 6 to 10 years	1,539
Having an experience of 11 to 25 years	1,073
Having an experience of 25 to 50 years	196
Having an experience of many years	296
Having an experience of unknown years	2,083

The above table shows conclusively that the persons with little experience are the persons who are most frequently injured or killed.

Since the year 1883 the average lives lost inside for every 1,000 persons employed inside the mines is 6.51.

Ratio per 1,000 employed inside during 1908	12.24

The most dangerous condition I can imagine in a coal mine would be to turn loose into the mines of this country ignorance from abroad and place in its hand a jacket or keg of black powder, a 6-foot auger, and allow shooting from the solid the coal from the mines of the Nation. I would as soon visit a powder plant with tacks in my shoes as to visit a coal mine under such conditions, and yet this will be what we shall have if we continue to allow ignorance to freely enter our harbors.

Our laborers, our men with American blood flowing through their veins, and who go into the bowels of the earth and dig the black diamonds from the mountains of West Virginia and Kentucky, from the plains of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, from mother earth in Pennsylvania and Maryland and the far Western States, have a right to appeal to you in the fight for life, for an equal chance, and have you exclude from the shores of America the labor which is a blot on the fair name of a free and independent Nation.

I believe in the language of the martyred McKinley:

It is better to open the mines and mills of this country to the laboring men of America than to open up the harbors of this country to the pauper-manufactured articles of the Old World.

I think it is equally the right of the American laboring man to ask that a certain class of undesirable citizens or subjects of Europe be kept away from our shores, and who are now engaged in the manufacture of articles of commerce which we should by tariff laws keep away from our country.

I do not mean to say, nor do I hope you will so understand me, that I am in favor of keeping men of industry, men of thrift, men of intelligence away from our shores; but I am in favor of keeping by legislation, if necessary, a certain class of ignorant and undesirable peoples away from this country; making this, a country ruled by intellect, holding out the glad hand to men of industry, intelligence, and honesty of purpose toward our land, who desire to make this home in the true sense of the word, and holding away from the shores of our country that class of men who come here for the purpose of receiving the benefits of our country, but who are unwilling to take upon themselves the responsibilities of citizenship.

I desire to give some statistics furnished me by the Bureau of Mines, showing number of fatal accidents for years 1907 to 1915, inclusive, and also statement released for publication February 26 by the Department of Interior, Bureau of Mines, showing decrease in fatal accidents for year 1915.

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR, BUREAU OF MINES,
Washington, February 25.

"Safety first" is beginning to show substantial results in lives saved in the coal-mining industry, according to a statement made by Secretary Lane, of the Interior Department, to-day. A report of the casualties in the coal mines for the year 1915, made by the Bureau of Mines, shows that—

The actual number of men killed is the lowest in the last eight years.

The death rate for each 1,000 men employed is the lowest in the last 16 years.

The number of tons of coal produced for each miner killed is the largest in the entire history of coal mining in the United States.

Statistics gathered by the bureau show that more than three-quarters of a million men were employed in coal mining last year, and that of this number 2,264 were killed, which is 190 less than in 1914 and 521 less than in 1913. The death rate for each 1,000 men employed was 2.95, as against 3.22 in the previous year and 3.73 the year before that. This means that as a result of the general safety campaign that has been proceeding for several years there was one additional man saved in every 4,000 employed as compared with the previous year, and 3 more men saved in every 4,000 employed as compared with the year 1913. There were 228,799 tons of coal produced for every life lost, as compared with 208,078 tons in the previous year.

"This is the most gratifying report the Bureau of Mines has been able to make since it was established," said Secretary Lane. "It indicates very forcibly to me that 'safety first' has come to stay in the coal-mining industry, and that it is being practiced more assiduously in mining camps than ever before. Every effort along this line spells lives saved, suffering lessened, and poverty and want prevented. It is such a report as this that leads us to translate, as President Wilson did, 'safety first' into 'America first,' for I do believe that to-day there is more regard in the United States for the welfare and safety of the working man than in any other country in the world.

"It is especially gratifying that this movement is progressing so rapidly in an industry that is one of the greatest in the world. The United States to-day mines 40 per cent of the entire coal of the world; as much coal as Great Britain and Germany combined; and employs an ever-increasing army of men that has now reached beyond the three-quarter of a million mark.

"It is difficult to say what might have been had the various agencies throughout the United States not cooperated with the Bureau of Mines in the 'safety-first' movement. All we do know is that if, instead of decreasing, the death rate had continued to increase as it did up to the year 1907, there would be to-day several thousand more dead miners in the United States.

"While it is not possible to attribute this reduction of deaths to any one of the many agencies striving to reduce mine accidents, each deserves credit for the part it has taken in this work. The saving of lives has been the result of closer and more careful inspection by the State mine inspectors; the better enforcement of laws and regulations by the operators; the miner's realization of the dangers attending his daily work, and his own efforts to reduce accidents; the more general use of safety lamps in doubtful mines; the use of permissible explosives passed upon by the Bureau of Mines; the watering of dusty mines to keep down the dangerous coal dust; first-aid and rescue training, which save lives that otherwise might be lost by reason of injuries received; the enactment of industrial accident compensation laws; and last, but not least, the splendid spirit of cooperation on the part of all concerned."

I agree with Secretary Lane entirely that the fatal accidents have been much reduced all over the United States, and the Department of Mines and the Bureau of Mines are to be congratulated on the part they have played in the reduction of fatal accidents. Efficiency has much to do with the results obtained, and I feel education has played an important work in this splendid showing; but I would call the attention of the House to what I believe the main reason for the decrease in fatal accidents, and it is summed up in a very few words. I think the main reason for the decrease in the fatal accidents for the year 1915 has been caused, not alone from the endeavors of the State mining departments, Bureau of Mines, and safety-first promoters' good work, but the war which is now going on in Europe and which on the 1st day of August, 1914, called back to Europe from America ignorance to fight in the trenches and be destroyed there instead of being destroyed by ignorance in the coal-mine and industrial plants of America. Hundreds, yes, thousands, of foreigners answered the call of their "first love" and returned to their country to fight for the country they love, and thereby reduced to a very material extent the dangers of coal mining in this Nation.

The table herewith published from the United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Immigration, shows my conclusions are correct that the foreign labor has to a great extent emigrated, and very few immigrants have come to this country to replace those which have left, and the class we are now getting is far superior in intelligence to the class heretofore received in this country.

Well do I remember the day I decided to become a candidate for Congress from the fifth congressional district of West Virginia. I immediately sent to the city and had printed on cardboard four or five thousand pictures of myself, and they were nailed to almost every telegraph post in my district. Under my picture was printed my name, and under my name I had printed the words, "Vote for him and he will vote to protect your interests." That promise was the promise of an honest candidate made to the great body of workingmen of my district, men who supported my candidacy almost as a unit, because they had confidence in my word, and in so far as I am concerned I propose to vote for the pending immigration bill, as I believe the interests of the laboring men will be best protected by the passage of this bill.

I have been taught from infancy that whenever a commodity is scarce in the market it is high. Whenever the wheat crop is scarce, wheat is high. When the potato crop is short, potatoes are high; the same with oats, corn, hay, or any other necessity of life. Skilled labor is scarce, and skilled labor is high and able to obtain the best possible price for its hire; therefore the best possible way to conserve to the workingmen of this country the best possible price for labor is to create a shortage of labor, and the most practical way to do that is to pass the pending immigration bill, and to reduce to a great extent thereby the underpaid labor of Europe which has been flooding this country for years.

I know it will be said we must have the labor, that capital can not expand unless we allow immigration to continue, but, in so far as I am concerned, I would rather have 100 competent Americans working for me than 200 incompetent foreigners. Give me the 100 contented, satisfied, happy Americans working in the coal mines rather than 200 discontented, dissatisfied, incompetent foreigners, whose one thought is to hear the whistle blow at 6 o'clock, hoping the next day will be pay day, so they can send three-fourths of the money earned back to the country from which they came. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Chairman, following the line of thought pursued by the previous speaker [Mr. COOPER of West Virginia], who deplored the fact that because we have enacted a child-labor law we are going to send back to the washtub the mother of the child, I say to him then that it is for him and for every other legislator on the floor of this House of Congress to see to it that his State enacts a law, as my State of Massachusetts has done, that protects that mother, worthy as she is.

One would believe from all that we have heard here to-day that all the Americanism in the country is wrapped up in the bodies and in the hearts and in the minds of the men who have addressed this House of Congress to-day in favor of this bill.

I come, Mr. Chairman, from the city of Boston, the second largest port of entry in this country; a city made up, as are all the large cities, of a cosmopolitan people, people from every clime and from every part of the world; and into that city, Mr. Chairman, naturally goes the immigrant, who goes where he is welcomed among his friends, and not among his foes; and to know him as we know him is to know that in him we have one whom we can respect and admire.

Mr. Chairman, in the district that I have the honor to represent and where I live and was born towers the shaft of Bunker Hill, which marks the spot where Warren fell, shedding his blood for this great Nation of ours; and I wondered in listening to all the addresses that have been made here to-day how many of those men who stood with him on that eventful day were literate or illiterate. I wondered whether the great Chrispus Attacks, the colored patriot who shed his blood on State Street, in Boston, at the beginning of the Revolution, and unable to read or write, was not a patriot for his country.

Mr. Chairman, this literacy test is not in keeping with the traditions of Bunker Hill and Faneuil Hall. It is not in keeping with the traditions that have made this country the great country that it is. Oh, we have heard much to-day of our flag and of the story of the flag. We have seen some of the Members wave it, figuratively speaking, in the eyes of the Members. I would like to take those Members back to my home district, where the child of the Italian, where the child of the Jew, of the Pole, of the German, and of the Irish is being taught daily the lessons of patriotic devotion to the adopted home of his beloved father and mother. I would like them to see how proud are the parents of those little children as they listen to them sing of the flag of their adopted country, and then say, if you will, whether or not they are fit for citizenship.

Mr. Chairman, we have all received petitions from organized labor. I have received them, as every other Member has. But, coming from that great commercial and industrial center, the city of Boston, I have yet to have one individual in my district ask me to vote for this bill. [Applause.]

No, Mr. Chairman; not one individual in the great city of Boston has come to me in the interest of this bill; and as I looked upon the petitions that were presented to me and looked over the names I wondered from whence they sprung, and I wondered how many of the men who signed those petitions would have had the privilege of petitioning this Congress if this literacy test had been applied to their fathers and to their mothers. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the time has not come in this country of ours when we can afford to shut the doors of opportunity afforded by these great institutions of ours against the people of a foreign clime. Educate the whole world. Yes, Mr. Chairman; that is why God ordained that this Nation should be what it is. He ordained that we should preach to and teach the rest of the world and take them out of the darkness in which they were born. It was intended that this Nation should give them the chance, and it was never intended that because you and I may have preceded those who are attempting to come now that we shall say to them that because our forefathers came from abroad and shed their blood for this Nation we shall now shut the door of opportunity to the children of the less fortunate people across the sea. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have been endeavoring to find some good substantial reason for the passage of this bill, and I am frank to confess that so far during the debate no sound, just cause has been advanced that would lead me to believe that this bill should become a law.

It appears that many of those advocating its passage come from sections of the country almost free from immigration, and I contend that they are not qualified to speak in favor of such a proposition as this, because they have not the knowledge of conditions existing among this class of people. I am inclined more to listen to the argument of those who daily come in contact with this element of our people, who know their ways and also their worth in the communities. Coming from a city made up mostly of an immigrant population, with whom I come in daily contact, I believe the arguments so far advanced by the proponents are very misleading.

Mr. Chairman, in the district that I have the honor to represent are many persons unable to read and write, who, if this law had been in effect at the time of their entrance, would have been unable to enter and our country would have been deprived of many of our beloved and honored men and women, whose children have since become the leading citizens of our land.

This alone proves to my mind the inadequacy of this law, and also proves that a literacy test is not necessary to the welfare of our country.

These people, suffering from the oppression in a foreign land and seeking an opportunity to better their conditions, with eagerness, hope, and gladdened hearts at the chance of enjoying the benefits of the freedom of a nation only enjoyed in this land of ours, come amongst us willing and anxious to do their part in building up and maintaining the honor and integrity of our country. The opposition to this class of people is not new, and I am afraid it is prompted by other than broad American motives. Our country is made up entirely from the immigrant, each and every one of them having the same aims and desires, and I do not believe the time has come when we should close the doors of opportunity against them.

I believe the claim that it is in the interest of labor is misleading; and while it may come from those who are the accredited representatives of the large labor organizations, yet I believe they have permitted their honest views to overcome the better part of their judgment, and, could this question be left to a vote of the individual members of organized labor, it would never receive their sanction.

I do not believe that the literacy test reflects the best judgment and wisdom of the rank and file of the toilers of our Nation, and if this bill was in the interest of toiling masses, I am confident that every Member now opposing its passage would instead be standing in his place on this floor defending and advocating the passage of this bill.

I do not hesitate to say as one Member of this House who has always worked in the cause of labor, and coming from a great industrial and commercial center, that I am speaking the wishes of the working people of my city, whom I have the honor to represent, when I oppose this legislation.

But, Mr. Chairman, I can not believe that this is the real purpose of this bill, and I am confident that it is aimed in another direction. It is aimed to keep from our shores the immigrant who comes to our land seeking opportunity for himself and family. Neither can we deny that to the immigrant from across the sea does this Nation of ours owe, in a substantial way, its great progress and advancement, for it was founded by the immigrant and it is to the immigrant and his children that the Nation can always look in the hour of need.

I can not forget that as a Member of this House I stand here as a son of an immigrant, and while he could read and write the English language, it is, nevertheless, a fact that many of his countrymen may have been less fortunate. Illiterate you may call them, but as soon as the opportunity was allowed them they took advantage of the splendid institutions of our country, educated themselves, and became good citizens.

It was the oppression of tyrannical England that drove the thousands of Irishmen from their homes to this land, and they brought with them strong hearts, beating warm for freedom, and while enjoying the privileges of American liberty and her grand institutions they have always been ready and willing to give up their lives in protecting the land of their adoption. The history of this country can not be written without giving credit and praise to the Irishmen in America.

In every field of endeavor, whether upon the field of battle, where the sons of Ireland have shed their blood freely in the patriotic devotion to their country, at the signing of the Declaration of Independence, or in the sciences or arts, they have added to the material and patriotic advancement of the Nation.

The same motives actuated the immigrants of other nationalities coming to our shores. It was the same unfair, inhumane oppression of Russia that drove so many of the people of the Jewish race to our land, and I know of no man who will say that this great race of people have not done their share in the advancement of our Nation and to the uplift of humanity. It was the great Columbus, an Italian, who discovered our country; and to-day you say to the children of that country that unless they can read and write they can not enjoy the fruits of his endeavors.

The opposition to the immigrant is nothing new. It has been carried on unsuccessfully almost since the beginning of our Nation by those whose narrow views would have prevented this Nation from being what she is to-day—the greatest Nation in the world.

We are all immigrants or children of immigrants, and not one of us can deny our ancestry. First, it was the opposition to the Irish, Germans, and Scotch, but the day of their migration to this country is almost a thing of the past. Now it is the opposition to the people of southern Europe, who, seeking the same opportunities of freedom and social advancement, are met with the same unfair, un-American claims, which are against the best traditions of our beloved country.

I shall vote against the immigration bill, because I do not think the literacy test a test of fitness or character and because I think it unfair and un-American. I am in favor of restriction that will exclude the criminal, the insane and mentally defective, the pauper, the morally unfit, and those who are incapable of earning a living. I am also opposed to the clever, educated schemer who immediately upon arrival begins to find fault with our institutions, and the immigration bill in its present form would not keep out such clever, educated schemers. I could not vote for a bill that ranked lettered scoundrelism above untutored industry and virtue.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the pending measure and sincerely hope that it will not become a law as I am not in favor of an educational qualification as essential to the right of persons of foreign birth to come into our country. Such a law is repugnant to every idea that I have ever entertained of the relations borne by our people to the people of the balance of the world, and, if adopted into a law, would falsify a record which to my mind makes for the integrity and glory of our country. I am not unmindful, I hope, of the advantages of cultivation in those who are to come amongst us, whether native or foreign born, but to say that only those who have some degree of education and letters may come to our shores is, in my judgment, to exalt an important, but not indispensable, incident to the position of an essential and overruling factor. The essential factors of immigration, to my mind, are health and virtue, and, having these makes any man or woman desirable as a resident and in course of time as a useful and valuable citizen.

I am opposed to the policy of this legislation, and with its departure from the broad and liberal spirit which has hitherto guided our legislation on the subject, and I am also astonished that it should be seriously considered in this National Congress. Ignorance in the foreigner is a misfortune and not a crime. He is ignorant because it has pleased the Almighty to plant him on a barren soil and under an inclement sky, there to live in subjection to a cruel and wicked policy which has kept him in ignorance and darkness.

It is known that many of the countries of the Old World from which we draw a large immigration not only furnish no educational facilities to the masses of their people, but they consider it unwise and unsafe to do so, and the victims of such a policy deserve to be commended for seeking to escape from such cruel conditions. Striving for a chance to do better things is highly commendable in them, and must they be told on approaching our shores, the asylum of the oppressed of every land, that their misfortune must remain unchanged?

Mr. Chairman, have the fountains of Christian charity and humane benevolence in this country, so rich and copious in the past, dried up and ceased to flow? I do not believe this to be the fact, and know the people of this country will never favor such a policy. For myself, I would as soon refuse food and drink to the hungry and thirsty as to turn away from our shores the poor, struggling unfortunate who seeks for himself and his children the blessing of freedom and enlightenment at our hands. Such a course is not in accord with the policy of this country, with the spirit of the people of this country, with the genius of our institutions, or with the history and the traditions of our Republic. No argument I have ever heard in its favor commends itself to my judgment or my conscience. Can it be said that education and learning are an indispensable equipment for the right of entrance into society with our fellow men? Have we reached the stage of development which abandons forever the mandate that man shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow? If not, then strong hands are as indispensable as ever and energy of action is as necessary to the propagation of the race as profound mental calculation. Is virtue centered in learning and merit measured by the extent of our information? Such a proposition can never be maintained. The poet says, "A little learning is a dangerous thing," and the amount of learning which this measure requires is extremely small, indeed; just sufficient, in fact, to create an odious distinction accomplishing no just or useful purpose.

Virtue is not the handmaid of learning, however profound the latter may be. That jewel may be found at the seats of learning and in the midst of wealth and culture, but it is more often discernable on the farm and in the factory, at the plow, the bench, and the counter, and in the lowly cottage, where happiness reigns in the midst of the family circle. Learning is important as an aid to moral culture, and to the duties of a citizenship I think it is altogether essential. This I appreciate as much as any man, but I deny that its possession is or should be considered as indispensable to the right of entrance into our great national family.

I will never vote to deny any man the protection of our laws and the benefits of our free institutions on the score of learning. The Committee on Immigration proceeds on the theory that vice and ignorance go hand in hand, and that in order to bar out the vicious it is necessary to bar out the ignorant. It neither requires statistics nor arguments to prove that the ignorant are more prone to vice than the learned, but it will require stronger argument than the friends of this legislation have so far advanced to convince me of the truth of their contention.

The claim is made by the Committee on Immigration that immigrants, when freed from the ship, are accustomed to congregate in the largest cities of the country. This is so. They go wherever they can, and it is usually toward the densely populated communities, which are largely recruited from the foreign population in our cities in which they find many friends and where they always are welcomed. They remain there for awhile, but when once they learn the ways of our people they become ambitious and anxious to better their own conditions by striving for a higher standard of living.

Mr. Chairman, we can not deny that a large proportion of our immigrant population is illiterate. This is to be expected when we realize the conditions from which they came; but it is a deplorable fact, when so many opportunities for education exist, that so many of our own native population are also illiterate, and if applying for admission to the country they would be unable to pass the literacy test now proposed in this bill. While our immigrants are not the most distinguished of our people, yet they have signally contributed to the development of our national life, and we are not therefore justified in putting this proposed ban upon them.

We could not have accomplished what we have without them. They were the pioneers of our civilization on its westward march, and though they had little, if any, learning they blazed the pathway that others followed, and when pressed too hard at times by the trammels of a superior culture encountered on their journey, they pushed on and on until the entire continent gave way to their superior efforts and the barren wastes and the wilderness yielded to their useful purpose.

This class has done its part reasonably well, both in peace and in war, and I do not believe that the officers of our Army or Navy would undertake to recruit their armies with a spelling book. They know too well that courage and endurance are not bred in the school alone. In every contest which our country has had, whether internal or external, it has been proven that men may be heroes although untutored in the belles-lettres of their more fortunate brothers.

Every class of our population has done its part in building up this advanced civilization of our mighty Republic, and the time has not yet come when we can dispense with any part of it. We have yet many battles to be fought in this country. The battle with stubborn nature is never ending, and a conflict with jealous nations may come to-day or to-morrow, or at any time, and no man can foresee its end. In the one contest I apprehend that our generals would prefer good red blood in the rank and file to bulging brows and shrunken limbs, and our statesmen would be wise if in the other contest they would recognize the importance of virile manhood in the enlistment of a virile citizenship to fight the battles of democracy.

I am aware that there is a clamor from certain quarters for a restriction of immigration on general grounds, as it is thought that our population is already overcrowded and the stress of competition is lessening the rewards of labor. We have also been inopportuned by some of our constituents to adopt any expedient which would cure the evil, and the committee confess that this is the purpose of this bill.

I am not in favor of giving way to clamor, however urgent it may become, unless I believe it to be wise and just; but no argument so far advanced has proven their contention. I do not think that this country is overpopulated, and I do not believe that it can ever be said to be overpopulated until its people have reached the stage of density greater than that of any other people on earth, because in no other country has nature been so lavish and so diffuse in her bounties. Given these conditions, every addition of human energy not only adds to the potential wealth of the Nation but it adds to the prosperity, the comfort, the convenience, and the happiness of all the people of the Nation.

It is idle to talk about the necessity of restricting immigration on the grounds claimed in this bill—because we have too many of this kind of people. We have not too many people, Mr. Chairman, for there are still vast stretches of unexplored and unimproved lands in this country waiting to be subdued; there are still millions and millions of acres of virgin soil which have never been pricked by the plow or the spade. Our forests are illimitable, and with proper care will prove to be inexhaustible. The wealth of coal and minerals of all kinds has hardly been touched and can never be worked out during our age.

Cities are yet to be built which will rival the most opulent and populous of the present day. Commonwealths are yet to be founded—or, at any rate, are yet in their infancy—which in time will vie with the strongest and most powerful of the States now composing the Union. We are in the infancy of our development, and we never had greater need for people than have we to-day; and yet it is at this time this cry for restricted immigration comes up to retard our development, and it comes from the section of the country that are greatly in need of development.

Mr. Chairman, I should be ashamed to stand up in my place in the Congress of the United States and put forth such a pitiful and contemptible plea as that. It has been our policy from the inauguration of the Government to invite immigration, and it has been our proud boast that none who were worthy and deserving were ever turned away from our shores. A distinguished statesman once said that the gates of Castle Garden swung inward but never outward. These words were intended to emphasize the fact that conditions in this country were such as not only to invite immigration but to make it welcome and desirable when it came. Our liberal policy of immigration is almost as well known to the world as our flag, and to see the one has always been to herald the other. That glorious emblem has been an inspiration and a hope to the people of the entire world. It has whispered to them not only an inspiration and a hope but a promise, and to now deny that hope or to repudiate that promise would be to dishonor our flag and make it contemptible in the eyes of the world.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

RECESS.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I suppose, under the order, the House will stand in recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. Under the order adopted by the House this afternoon, the House stands in recess until 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until Saturday, March 25, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 25, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee with our morning prayer, in a full assurance that the deeds of this day and all the work of our lives must come in last review before Thee. We seek not only to measure up to the moral ideals of our own time or those interests which seem to be the interests of the day, but we would remember that at last we must stand before Thee and give an account of the deeds done in the body. We fear not so much an austere judge as a loving Father, who has given to us the revelation of His will and bestowed upon us the unmeasured tokens of His love.

Grant us this day hearts responsive to Thy love and wills obedient to the Divine will, that we may perform the tasks of the day in obedience to Thy law and with hearts full of gratitude to Thee for Thy love. For Christ's sake. Amen.

HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS IN CONGRESS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication addressed to the Vice President, and desires to have it inserted in the RECORD. It has to do with the intelligent dispatch of business in the Congress of the United States. The Chair calls the attention of Senators to it that they may consider the subject of the communication.

The communication referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 4, 1916.

The VICE PRESIDENT.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE: The presence of the heads of the departments before Congress is not suggested by the parliamentary systems of other Governments. The bill of Representative MONTAGUE, of Virginia, to provide, through a mere change in the rules of procedure, that the heads of the executive departments may occupy seats on the floor of the Senate and House of Representatives to give information in reply to questions propounded under the rules of the Senate and the House, is as follows:

"That the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Attorney General, the Postmaster General, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Secretary of Labor shall be entitled to occupy seats on the floor of the Senate and House of Representatives, with the right to participate in debate on matters relating to the business of their respective departments, under such rules as may be prescribed by the Senate and House respectively.

"That the said Secretaries, the Attorney General, and the Postmaster General shall attend the sessions of the Senate on the opening of the sittings on Tuesday and Friday of each week, and the sessions of the House of Representatives on the opening of the sittings on Monday and Thursday of each week, to give information asked by resolution or in reply to questions which may be propounded to them under the rules of the Senate and the House; and the Senate and House may, by standing orders, dispense with the attendance of one or more of said officers on either of said days." (64th Cong., 1st sess., H. R. 4.)

The suggestion belongs to the development of our own laws, and must be discussed within its capacity of adjustment to our American system.

No encroachment by the legislative branch upon the constitutional privileges of the President or of his Cabinet is suggested, and no invasion by the Executive of the jurisdiction of the legislative branch, nor does it involve any modification of the constitutional distribution and separation of the functions of the three departments of our Government, its distinctive and characteristic feature. Nor would such a change in the rules of procedure interfere with the existing methods of communication, by written reports or by the personal presence before congressional committees of members of the Cabinet and subordinate chiefs of bureaus of the executive departments.

The inquiry is nonpartisan and impersonal, whether executive supremacy has gradually developed to such a degree as to require an effort in order to restore the equilibrium between the executive and legislative departments of the Government. It is not a result of usurpation of arbitrary power by any of our Presidents, nor has it been brought about by general consent expressed in amendment of the Constitution. The enormous development of national wealth and industrial energy has created a collective pressure of local interests represented in an overwhelming mass of legislative measures, general and special, forced upon the attention of Congress. The consequent subordination by Congress of national and external, or especially of foreign, policies to the exigencies of internal or domestic policy has accompanied the centralization of power and has had the effect of largely diverting to the executive department the consideration of national policies, yielding to the President a practically exclusive control over them. The impossible is required of him and the impossible attributed to him.

The President must remain independent of Congress as to the manner in which he may choose to communicate information in regard to executive matters. The heads of the executive departments are there to aid him in the performance of certain duties, and so far are responsible to him alone. But Congress creates offices by law, and all the heads of the departments are creatures of congressional legislation. The legislative branch could not require the President to come in person and compel answers to interrogatories, but Congress, having created the office held by the heads of the departments, may assign new duties to them.

The law organizing the Treasury may be accepted as a solution of this question. Congress in creating the office of Secretary of the Treasury declared that the Secretary "shall make report and give information to either branch of the Legislature, either in person or in writing, respecting all matters which shall appertain to his office," as either House may require.

The heads of departments were at first, with the exception of the Secretary of the Treasury, little more than mere adjuncts of the President. By subsequent acts of Congress, and especially since the tenure of office act, the relations between the heads of departments and the Chief Executive have been modified. The First Congress gave the President power to remove from office without the assent of the Senate. But during the administration of President Johnson the lawmaking power declared, in effect, that the President could not remove even a Cabinet officer without the Senate's consent.

The President is invested with the authority to make treaties and appoint foreign ambassadors and ministers, with the consent of the Senate. The Secretary of State is not required by the law creating his office to make report or give information to either branch of the Legislature; but whatever is said in respect to foreign affairs is usually said directly by the President in his annual message. Congress has not the power to compel the Secretary of State to give such information as might be required in respect to an appointment, the negotiation of a treaty, or the management of the foreign affairs of the country. But as to matters relating to the Department of State there is no reason why Congress should not claim and exercise the same power which is established in the law organizing the Treasury. To the Executive is given the power to carry out in secret certain measures of foreign policy. Yet if Congress should invite the Secretary of State to the floor, even in regard to such matters, information which in his opinion should be made known could in this way be communicated, and with great benefit to the country.

The Constitution does not contain the words "Cabinet officers" or "constitutional advisers." It says that the President may require the opinion, in writing, of the "principal officer in each department." And for this reason such officers are said to be "constitutional advisers" to the President. As it is within the scope of the law and the spirit of the Constitution that the executive officers or heads of the departments may be admitted to discuss public measures on the floor of Congress, it is only a question of expediency whether or not such a change in the method of procedure ought to be adopted.

The relation of the executive department and Congress engaged the attention of the men who formed the Confederate Government and modeled its constitution and laws upon those of the Federal Government. Long experience of the Federal system suggested to them in framing their provisional and permanent constitution as well that to allow the members of the Cabinet seats on the floor of their congress would be an improvement. They therefore preserved the existing provision of our Constitution distributing the functions of government, and after the words "and no person holding any office under the Confederate States shall be a member of either house during his continuance in office" they introduced the following clause: "But Congress may by law grant to the principal officers in each of the executive departments a seat upon the floor of either house with the privilege of discussing any measures appertaining to his department."

The proposition for the presence of members of the Cabinet in Congress is merely that they should be requested to communicate orally and directly what they now communicate in writing. The volume of printed matter is growing enormously, until it becomes physically impossible for Members of either House to deal with it effectively. The great number of printed reports, although of value for reference, are in the mass practically unavailable for the purpose of supplying Congress with facts and information. They have created a situation in which Congress is unable to act with any degree of promptness.

Leaders in both Houses are expressing the opinion that we are reaching the point where continuous sessions of Congress must be expected. No method has been suggested to avoid this apparently inevitable situation. Information from the heads of the departments would enable Congress to be more quickly advised by direct oral communication, rendering legislation much less subject to the present serious delays. A few words spoken by a competent head of a department would place the whole of Congress on the same vantage ground as the members of a committee. Such direct information and communication would be most useful to the purposes of legislation and administration as well, and would inevitably shorten the sessions of Congress.

Much has happened recently in confirmation of the advantage of the proposed effort to minimize, without the slightest change of our Constitution, the dangers of personal government—that the President be not enabled to initiate personal policies of which the consequence even so great and powerful a Nation as ours might have cause to regret. The Executive may initiate a policy which Congress opposes, and the absence of authorized means of oral communication may prevent establishing the harmony of action necessary to the public welfare. When, on the contrary, there exists an agreement between the executive and legislative branches, an intercourse resulting from a common purpose would be promoted by free oral communication.

The executive officers of our Government would be subject to more definite form of accountability, having great advantage over the purely parliamentary systems of Europe, in which the cabinet or government is in reality a committee of the majority in the parliamentary body to carry into execution its general policy. Such a cabinet is subjected to the instability resulting from parliamentary changes of opinion. An adverse vote is generally interpreted as involving the resignation of the government. If the head of one of our departments, under the proposed system, were seriously opposed by the majority in Congress, there would be more than one course open to him. He might resign, and the President could then appoint some one to take his place, without being under the necessity of removing any other member of the administration; or the head of the department might modify his views, submitting a new and more acceptable proposition.

There is no legislative body in the world containing men of higher qualifications of ability and character for legislative and executive office, including the Presidency, than are found in our Senate and House of Representatives. To have served with distinction many years in Congress greatly adds to the important qualifications for that great office and may be considered the most desirable.

The majority are men of good standing in their respective States and congressional districts, who fully deserve the consideration in which they are held by those whom they represent. While this is true with regard to its individual membership, the collective membership of Congress is comparatively unknown to the country. It is the habit to decry the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and although, as in the legislative journals of all other countries, features appear now and then that are open to criticism, speeches are delivered upon the floor of our Senate and House of Representatives that are the highest order of merit. Our congressional debates contain contributions of the greatest value to the subjects discussed, possessing a wealth of research and power of presentation which are more liable to excite the admiration of the representatives of foreign Governments at the National Capital who, in the course of their duties, are called upon to read them, than of our own people. The reason of this is that we all feel it is a laborious and apparently useless task to follow the debates in Congress; nor is the press to blame if comparatively slight public attention is given to them. A complete change of attitude would undoubtedly be brought about if the intercourse between the legislative and executive branches of the Government were open, direct, and more responsible to public opinion. A discussion on the floor of either House between the leaders of the legislative branch and the heads of departments or members of the Cabinet, or what are now so erroneously termed the members of the President's official family, would go far toward restoring the equilibrium that should exist between two great coordinate branches of the Government of the United States. The press would certainly turn its full attention and devote a larger space to such open, verbal, and officially responsible intercourse. The knowledge that the country, through the agency of the press, would be fully informed of such discussions, would have a decided influence on the character of the debates. The membership of the House and of the Senate would, jointly with the executive department, address itself directly and officially to the whole Nation, the constituency which now daily hears, in various ways, from the President alone.

With assurance of the highest esteem, I am,

Very sincerely,

PERRY BELMONT.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey presented petitions of sundry citizens of New Jersey, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a letter from the American Rights Committee of date March 22, 1916, and accompanying it a printed copy of certain resolutions adopted by that committee on March 13, 1916, in New York City, N. Y. I offer the letter and resolutions and ask that they be printed at length in the RECORD as an evidence of the kind of neutrality this association is in favor of. They invite direct cooperation with the allies at the proper time.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN RIGHTS COMMITTEE,
New York City, March 22, 1916.

DEAR SIR: We are inclosing with this the resolutions that were passed (by a vote of 3,500 yeas to 50 nays) at a meeting held at Carnegie Hall, New York City, on the evening of Monday, March 13, under the direction of the American Rights Committee. These resolutions have interest and importance as representing the opinion of a great group of the citizens of New York. Resolutions similar in purpose and character were passed some three weeks back (by a vote of 2,500 to 1) at a meeting held under the direction of the Massachusetts branch of the American Rights Committee at Tremont Temple, in Boston.

We are, yours, respectfully,

GEORGE HAVEN PUTNAM,
President.
L. L. FORMAN, Secretary.

AMERICAN RIGHTS COMMITTEE,
New York City.

Resolved, That we, the members of the American Rights Committee and their friends, in general meeting assembled, hereby pledge our hearty support to the President of the United States in his firm stand in defense of the rights of American citizens, as announced by him in his letter of the 24th day of February, 1916, to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and we condemn all Members of the Congress of the United States who are willing to surrender those rights under the pressure of German threats.

AMERICAN RIGHTS COMMITTEE,
New York City.

Whereas we hold that Prussian imperial militarism has brought about the subjection of the people of Germany to an ambitious and unscrupulous autocracy and the corruption of the ancient German ideals through a dream of world dominion; and

Whereas we believe that the success of the schemes of this Prussian autocracy means the crushing of friendly nations and the subjection of their peoples to a brutal and cruel military rule; and

Whereas we believe that, intoxicated with the military successes of 1864, 1866, and 1870, and by the wonderful development of the economic strength of the country, the ambitions of the Prussian leaders have expanded until they have culminated in a world war for imperial domination; and

Whereas this war has been conducted by Prussia and her allies with practices of unprecedented barbarity, including the killing, under official orders, of thousands of noncombatants, women, and children, and including the crowning atrocity of the Armenian massacres; and

Whereas we believe that the Monroe doctrine and even the territories of our own countries have been, and now are, an avowed aim of Prussian aggression, and that, in the event of the success of the Teutonic powers, the next attack would be made against the United States; and

Whereas, without undertaking to approve all the acts of the entente allies in the present war, we hold that the republicanism of France and the democracy of England are united in contending for those rights of the people and those ideals of humanity which are essential to the preservation of civilization; and

Whereas we believe that neutral nations look to the United States as the leading power that should maintain the principles of international law and defend the sacred principles of humanity, that the peoples of these nations are convinced of the righteousness of the allied cause but hesitate to declare themselves, and that action by the United States would have a potent influence upon hesitant neutrals and would tend materially to shorten the war, to save further sacrifice of human life, and to assure the more speedy triumph of law and justice: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the safety and honor of the American people and their duty to defend and maintain the rights of humanity require us to approve the cause for which the entente allies are fighting and to extend to these allies by any means in our power not only sympathy, but direct cooperation at the proper time, to the end that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth; and

Resolved further, That in spite of the unwarranted destruction of American lives there should be between the American people and the German people no enmity, and that when the Germans shall abjure, with the dream of empire, the pernicious ideals of their present rulers the Americans will rejoice to come again into fellowship with them in the work of advancing the true ideals of justice, humanity, and civilization.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth.

A bill (S. 5281) to reserve certain lands and incorporate the same and make them a part of the Cœur d'Alene National Forest Reserve; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 5282) providing for the equalization of the cost of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck Indian Reservations, in the State of Montana, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. I introduce a bill, which I ask be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 5273) to provide for an increased annual appropriation for agricultural experiment stations, to be used in researches and experiments in home economics, and regulating the expenditure thereof, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that at the first opportunity in the coming week I shall address the Senate on the bill.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12766) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

UTAH-IDAHO YELLOWSTONE HIGHWAY.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $75,000 for a proportionate share of the amount required to construct the Utah-Idaho Yellowstone Highway through the Targhee National Forest, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

JOHN A. MUSE.

Mr. SWANSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 150), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Whereas John A. Muse was appointed on the United States Senate rolls as a laborer January 16, 1897, at a salary of $720 a year, and assigned to the Maltby Building as a watchman; and

Whereas in the discharge of his duties the said John A. Muse was injured permanently and was discharged from the service of the Senate during the month of April, 1901: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said John A. Muse be paid the sum of $1,440 from the contingent fund of the Senate, or the equivalent of two years' salary at the rate of pay he received when injured in the services of the Senate.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13043) making appropriations to supply further additional urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1916 and prior fiscal years and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. WARREN conferees on the part of the Senate.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may resume consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from Arizona yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I have asked the Senator to yield with a view of having disposed of the resolution I introduced yesterday. It was laid over to be called up. I desire to ask if under the rules I may have it specifically set for Monday one week, as I desire to lay before the Senate some data and other Senators desire to be heard. I respectfully move, if it is consistent with the rules, that next Monday be set for the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be made a special order by a two-thirds vote of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I do not wish to supersede——

Mr. STONE. If my friend from Illinois will permit, would it not be proper to let the resolution go over informally for a week?

Mr. LEWIS. In view of the fact that certain Senators desire time in the matter, I will agree to that suggestion.

Mr. STONE. Not to be called up until the Senator calls it up.

Mr. LEWIS. I will take any course to accommodate Senators that will accord with their wishes. If the motion to let it go over for that length serves my purpose, that I desire to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no necessity for a motion. The resolution is over now, and there is no necessity for a motion. It can be taken up on motion at any time when the Senator can get the votes to take it up.

Mr. LODGE. It can be called up at any time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; the Senator can make a motion to take it up at any time.

Mr. STONE. Would there be objection to a request of the Senator from Illinois to let it go over for a week, retaining its present position?

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever.

Mr. LEWIS. That disposition is satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is not any objection, the resolution can go over for a week without prejudice. If that is satisfactory to the Senator from Illinois, it will go over for a week.

Mr. LEWIS. I accept the suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes over for a week, without prejudice, by unanimous consent.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10385, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10385) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. We were on certain appropriations last night, and the Chair is inclined to make a statement. There was a point of order raised as to the committee amendment under consideration when the Senate adjourned.

The Chair as now constituted knows something about the Salt River irrigation project, in the State of Arizona, and, after some considerable thought on the subject, the Chair believes that he either has an opinion or a very great prejudice, one or the other, about the expenditures of money in these irrigation projects. The Chair does not believe that under those circumstances the mental attitude of the Chair is such as to decide this question, and the Chair turns the point of order over to the Senate for decision.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have been authorized and directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs at a meeting this morning, and acting on behalf of the committee I desire to withdraw the amendment or amendments commencing in line 1, page 51, down to and including line 16, page 58. I have been authorized by the committee this morning to withdraw or to ask for the withdrawal of those amendments or this amendment, and I therefore withdraw them.

Mr. ASHURST. From line 1, page 51, down to and including line 16, on page 58.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That for the present takes out the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, having withdrawn those amendments or that amendment, I offer on behalf of the committee, having been duly authorized thereto this morning, the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. Commencing at the bottom of page 50:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana, $750,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator will allow me, I understand that the committee agreed to a number of amendments. If agreeable to Senators, I should like to have them all offered and let them go over until Monday that I may have a chance to read them.

Mr. ASHURST. It is very difficult to hear just what the Senator from Kansas says.

Mr. CURTIS. I say, I understand the committee agreed to, I believe, four or five amendments. I should like to have them offered and read and printed in the RECORD so that I may have a chance to read them between now and Monday. Of course if we could get through with the bill to-night so that we would be in a position to go back to them I would not object to going back to them later, but I should like to read them.

Mr. WALSH. I was about to state for the information of the Senate what the committee had done. Perhaps it would be better to act on that matter after the statement is made.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me present the additional amendments and have them read. I offer four additional amendments which I am directed on behalf of the committee to offer and ask that the whole five be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 50 insert:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana, $750,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

After that amendment insert:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in Montana, $100,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Also the following:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in Montana, $50,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Following that amendment insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $22,400, from any money now available for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana, in the purchase of lands embraced in the allotments of George W. Cook and David La Breche, described as lots 3 and 5, section 27, and lots 1 and 2, section 34, township 32 north, range 13 west, together with all the improvements thereon, in consideration of the relinquishment by the allottees of all their right, title, and interest in and to said lands and improvements, and of their right to select lieu land under the provisions of section 14 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 855, 859), and the release of all their claims whatsoever against the United States or the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians by reason of said lands being required for reservoir purposes in connection with the irrigation system on the aforesaid Indian reservation.

The work to be done with the amounts herein appropriated for the completion of the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck projects may be done by the Reclamation Service on plans and estimates furnished by that service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That not to exceed $19,575 of applicable appropriations made for the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck irrigation projects shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for official use upon the aforesaid irrigation projects: Provided further, That not to exceed $8,865 may be used for the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that not to exceed $1,500 may be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in order to expedite the consideration of this measure and to get rid of the point of order that has been made against the amendment first reported by the committee, which was under consideration on adjournment last evening, the committee has decided to withdraw that amendment and to offer in lieu seriatim the amendments which have just now been read. The three amendments embrace the appropriation solely—$50,000 for the Blackfeet project, $100,000 for the Fort Peck project, and $750,000 for the Flathead project—as in accordance with the estimate and as provided in the amendment which has now been withdrawn.

The fourth is the substance of an amendment to the amendment which was adopted on yesterday.

The fifth provides that the work shall be done under the direction of the Reclamation Service, and limits the amount of the appropriation that may be used for certain specified purposes.

The remainder of the amendment, Mr. President, I have incorporated in a separate bill, which I shall ask leave at this time, by unanimous consent, to introduce. I do so, Mr. President, because this portion of the amendment originally tendered was included in it upon the earnest insistence of the Indian Bureau. After a long series of conferences between them and the representatives from the State of Montana it was agreed that the provision should find a place in the appropriation bill in connection with the items that are now the subject of consideration. The representatives from Montana feel that in a way they are pledged to the Indian Bureau to secure the adoption of this legislation; and being denied by the point of order the opportunity to carry out that pledge exactly as it was made, they want to do the next best thing, namely, to use every effort that they can to secure the adoption of the legislation through the medium of a separate bill.

Mr. President, in justice to myself as well as to the Indian Bureau and for the information of Senators, I feel obliged to say a word concerning the essential features of the measure, which must now take the regular course of a bill and be subject to all the embarrassments and exigencies which ordinarily confront a measure other than a general appropriation bill.

Under the various acts by which these projects were undertaken—and all of them are far progressed toward completion, at the expenditure of very considerable sums of money in each instance, running into the millions in the case of the Flathead project, about $800,000 in the case of the Blackfeet project, and nearly or quite as much in the case of the Fort Peck project—under the legislation heretofore it was provided that so much of the expenses of conducting the work as was properly chargeable to the Indian lands should be paid out of the tribal funds.

Mr. President, the Indians on these various reservations in the selection of their allotments were at liberty to take land under the project or to take land outside of the project—land that would be in no way benefited by it. Accordingly, many Indians who would derive no direct advantage at least from the project, were burdened with the original cost as well as those who took their land under the project. That was manifestly unfair to those Indians, and it was a burden which ought not in justice to have been imposed upon them.

The Indian funds have, in accordance with that legislation, been resorted to for the payment of a large portion of this work. This bill and the amendment which has gone out provide that the general Indian fund shall not be subject to be resorted to for the purpose of reimbursing the Government on account of these appropriations that have from time to time been made; but, as in the case of the general reclamation law, the burden is by this proposed legislation put upon the very lands that are benefited.

In the case of the Flathead project and the Fort Peck project, some of the lands under the project are owned by the Indians and some have been entered by the whites. No whites have been allowed to take any land thus far under the Blackfeet project, that reservation not yet having been opened.

The legislation now proposed imposes the burden on the lands under the project, and relieves the lands outside of the project from any lien which may have been created by legislation heretofore enacted.

Speaking for my colleague [Mr. MYERS] as well as for myself, I am at liberty to say that if the legislation as it was devised by us, acting conjointly with the Indian Office, does not, in the opinion of any Senator, fully safeguard all of the rights of the Indians we shall be glad to unite with any Senator in amendments to the bill that will, to any extent whatever, so safeguard their rights.

But, Mr. President, in view of the request made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], I desire to say that there is nothing left in the amendments now presented which ought to require us to delay the consideration of those amendments, and I can see no reason why delay should take place in that regard.

The bill itself is intended to protect the rights of the Indians, and that will not now be here for consideration. Abundant opportunity will be given to study that bill. As the matter is now before the Senate, it is a sole question of whether the appropriation shall be made or shall not be made. I think the Senator from Kansas ought not to ask any time upon that question.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, while the Senator from Montana was on the floor I listened to him; I have also read the amendments, and, so far as I am personally concerned, I am ready to proceed to their consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the first amendment, which the Secretary will state.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator having the bill in charge to allow the amendments which have just been read to be printed and taken up for consideration on Monday? That would give us an opportunity to examine them. I do not know their full scope, although they may be all right.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that they are not new; they have been here before us all this time.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be true; but, as they were read from the desk, I could not follow them in connection with the amendment printed in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator that the language is identical. They are just taken out of the committee amendment at it stands, eliminating what is said to be general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They are plain appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is not a question of a point of order being raised against them. That question, I understand, has been entirely eliminated by the form in which the amendments have now been offered.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to make a suggestion, the amendments are very short and simple, comprising a few words each, and, if read from the desk one at a time, I think there should be no trouble about understanding exactly what each one means.

Mr. SMOOT. What amendment is now before the Senate?

Mr. ASHURST. Let the pending amendment be stated.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; let it be stated, and I will try to follow it in connection with the amendment printed in the bill and withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Following page 50, in lieu of the amendment withdrawn it is proposed to insert the following as amendment No. 1:

For continuing the construction of the irrigation system on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., $750,000, reimbursable, which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to that amendment, and I should like the attention of the Senate while I give a few reasons why, in my judgment, it should not be agreed to.

There are 2,302 Indians on this reservation. The Government has already expended $1,566,337 on this project; and yet last year there were only 950 acres of land under the project farmed by the Indians. The Government has been reimbursed to the extent of $440,000, leaving the amount expended and not reimbursed $1,126,000. Adding to that the $750,000 now proposed to be appropriated, will make $1,872,000; and the department says it will cost $6,000,000 to complete the project.

There were in the original reservation 1,700,000 acres of land. There have been allotted 226,000 acres, and there are 150,000 acres of surplus lands.

The Indians have on hand only $248,000; that is all the money that is left. Their total property is given as worth $7,000,000. That includes all their possessions—lands and properties of all kinds. Here is a project that would take every dollar of the money the Indians have, even if it only cost what the Government says it will cost, and yet there is a statement from the department that last year these Indians, with all this expenditure of over $1,500,000, only irrigated and farmed 950 acres.

Senators, this is the best case of the three cases presented to us for action, and, for the life of me, I do not see how this Congress can afford, in view of the showing made by the department, to continue this project. I should like to see the Senators from Montana withdraw all these amendments from the bill and confer with the department so as to see if some plan can not be devised to save this vast sum for the Indians, and, I think, at the same time save a vast sum for the Government, because I do not believe the expenditure will ever be reimbursed out of the money the Indians now have or out of their property.

As I said a moment ago, if you complete the project it will take every dollar of the Indians' money to pay for it. That is what is reported by the department. There has already been expended the vast sum I have indicated, and, as a result, as I have said, only 950 acres of land were farmed last year by the Indians. I repeat that the best showing is made as to this reservation of any of the three, and I do hope the Senate will refuse to continue these appropriations and this waste of money.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator said that there were only 950 acres of land irrigated by these Indians last year. Do the Indians lease their land to the white men, and, if so, how many acres are irrigated altogether under the project?

Mr. CURTIS. I regret that I have not the data at hand; but I think altogether some 10,000 acres were irrigated; I am not, however, sure about that.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. I want to ask the Senator whether the whole burden of maintaining this project rests upon the Indians and whether there is any other land under the irrigation system aside from reservation land?

Mr. CURTIS. The burden of putting in the project has been upon the Indians. The settlers under the project, in accordance with the law, are required to pay for their share of the project, but so far the reimbursement has only been $440,000.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Where is the water from this irrigation system to be used? Is it to be used entirely upon the reservation?

Mr. CURTIS. It is to be used upon the reservation and the surplus lands which have been sold.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Which were originally a part of the reservation?

Mr. CURTIS. Which were originally a part of the reservation.

Now, it seems to me that Congress, upon the advice of the department, has made a very serious mistake in dealing with these Indians. The Senate knows it is difficult to get the ordinary Indian to engage in farming, even when it is not necessary to employ methods of irrigation; and, of course, it is much harder to farm irrigated land than it is ordinary land, which does not have to be irrigated. On irrigated land one must understand how to use the water and he must have other information that is not necessary in the case of farming on land which need not be irrigated; and yet the attempt is being made to transform the Indian from an ordinary owner of ponies and of cattle into an irrigation farmer, and after all of his money has been spent. What is the result? In this instance the result is 950 acres of land farmed by the Indians.

Now, why spend all this money? If you are going to irrigate this land and want to sell it, sell it; but sell it for what it is worth for the benefit of the Indians.

I have not looked into the question, but the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] stated the other day to the committee that it was estimated that it would cost on an average of $30 an acre to put in the project to irrigate this land. He also stated that the Indian received on an average of $4.50 an acre for the land, and circulars are sent out from Montana that the minute this water is ready to go on this land the land will be worth $100 an acre, and yet the Indian only has $4.50 an acre for it, and the Indian's money was used to put the water on and the settler pays back his share for putting in the project, or about $30 per acre.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, may I make a statement there?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator may ask a question. I understand from the Senators—I want to be perfectly fair with them—that this new project or bill they are going to introduce will change that. I do not know whether it does or not. I have not had time to study the measure——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. And I do not know enough about the irrigation project to pass upon a question of this kind.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. CURTIS. But it does seem to me that rather than appropriate this money you should send this measure back to the committee, and let them agree upon and bring in here a proposition that will protect the interests of the Indians and that will save this money. I say to you that if you finish this project and expend this $7,000,000, there will not be 10,000 acres of it farmed by the Indians. I say to you that you never will be reimbursed from the fund. You will have to lose a part of the money. It seems to me, though, that you could agree upon a plan for turning this matter over and handling it and only giving the Indians the surplus lands—the grazing lands—or just 10 or 15 or 20 acres each to irrigate and farm, and then arrange for the sale, the money derived from the sale to be put to their credit to pay these expenses; not pay $4.50 an acre or $34.50 an acre, but pay what it is worth. That is what it seems to me should be done by the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly; I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. MYERS. I just want to state, in regard to the Senator's statement as to what was stated before the committee, that that was stated before the committee, it is true; but I think it is now established and recognized that the cost of putting this water on this land will be much more than $30 an acre; probably about $50 an acre.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, Mr. President, we should stop this business until we have some one at the head of it who can tell. It was stated upon the floor of this Chamber yesterday that $70,000 would be necessary for one project, and that that was all the money that would be required. I have in my possession this morning a letter written from the department stating that it will take about $400,000 more to complete it. If these Senators and the department do not know how much money it is going to require, then I think we ought to stop this waste of money until the Senate is furnished with definite information as to what the project is going to cost.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I dislike to interrupt the Senator in the course of his remarks, and I would not do so except that I know he is not familiar with the facts and he would not like to misstate them.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know anything about irrigation, and I do not want to misstate anything. If I have made a misstatement, I shall be glad to have it corrected by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator, perhaps, was not present when the information was given to the Senate that regardless of what these lands may be worth when they are watered they have all been sold—that is to say, they have all been entered already, under the provisions of the act—except a very small area. Not only that, Mr. President—I feel justified in speaking about this now; I will say something about it later—not only that, but they have been sold by the Government of the United States, and the money has gone into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians, under the promise to the persons who bought the lands that this irrigation project would be carried on. Now, the Senator proposes to repudiate that obligation to these people——

Mr. CURTIS. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. And to say to them: "The great Government of the United States induced you to come here and buy this land at the figure for which they offered it to you, under a promise that this irrigation work should be carried on; but now, having induced you to go there, we propose to repudiate the whole thing and abandon the project."

Mr. CURTIS. No, Mr. President. If the Government has induced the settlers to go there, if they have settled and taken up the land, I say keep the contract.

Mr. WALSH. That is what we are asking.

Mr. CURTIS. But let the Government pay the expense, if the Indians' money has been misused—take it from the Government and not from the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that never would have been done at all. There never was a time when the Indians' money was to be used to pay for irrigating the white men's land. I want to say this, sir, in vindication of the men who stood upon this floor and advocated this measure before I came here, and men standing upon the other side of this Chamber, too. This project was introduced and was urged by them and not by us. They asked you for this appropriation, and you gave it to them. It is to their credit; and I do not care to have anybody stand here and assert that they have asked this Senate for Indians' money for the purpose of paying for the irrigation of white men's lands. The law never did impose such an injustice as that; and I speak in defense of the men who are not here to speak for themselves.

Mr. CURTIS. The fact remains, Mr. President, that every acre of Indian land is pledged to reimburse this Government. The fact remains that every dollar received has been turned back. Can the Senator from Montana defend a proposition that expends $1,566,000, supposedly for the benefit of the Indians, when only 950 acres have been farmed by the Indians?

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. President; the Senator from Montana wanted to have legislation passed to correct that error, and the Senator from Kansas struck it out by reason of urging his point of order.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Kansas urged this point of order because he was not satisfied that the rights of the Indians were protected. I say now, as a member of that committee, that I am ready to meet with the Senators from Montana and the other Members and with the officers of the Indian Bureau and prepare, if we can, a measure that will save this money; but I am opposed, Senators, to continuing this project until we know that there is to be a sure return of the money taken to put in the project.

I have nothing further to say upon this subject. I want to discuss these other two amendments as they come up. I want to say to the Senators that the best showing is made here. The best amendment has been offered first. The others, I will show as we reach them, are not in anywhere near as good condition as is the Blackfeet; and yet they are insisting on going on and going on and providing that the Government shall be reimbursed, when they know that in the other projects there is nothing to reimburse the Government with.

If we want to give them the money, why, let us give it; but let us not take it with an idea that it is going to be reimbursed when we know that it can not be reimbursed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CURTIS. I yield the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish very briefly to refer to one point made by the Senator from Kansas.

The Senator asked: "Why do not the Senators from Montana have a full, free conference with the Department of the Interior?" Why, Mr. President, the legislation that is proposed is a result of conferences between the Montana delegation and the Interior Department—not one conference, but many conferences, lasting, I should say, from time to time for two years.

The Senate knows that in the Indian appropriation bill which passed the Senate, but failed in the House because the conference report was not agreed to, this legislation—not verbatim, but this plan of legislation—was agreed to by the Senate, after much discussion; and I think the Senator ought to know and the Senate ought to know that this proposed legislation was in the estimates for this year. The language was prepared by the Interior Department, and is the result, I repeat, not of one but of repeated interviews and conferences on the part of the Montana delegation with the Interior Department. I think I state the facts correctly.

Mr. MYERS. That is a correct statement.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate very long in what I have to say upon this amendment. I wish, however, to refer briefly to the committee hearings that were held last year upon this same project.

The Deputy Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Meritt, came before us and said that he hoped that by legislation which he would suggest we might prevent the great wrong which was being done to the Indians in the way of providing that they could make beneficial use of water so as to save in part the money that was being appropriated, reimbursable out of their funds. When that matter reached the Senate the very provision recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was stricken out, leaving the Indian so that all this money which is being appropriated, presumably for his benefit, might be an absolute waste, so far as he was concerned, because the beneficial use of the water, of which the Indian was supposed to avail himself, was going to be so far delayed that the white man would step in in advance and make prior beneficial use of that same water.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me just on that point?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has stated the matter correctly; and yet, if he will pardon me, he has only half stated it. That did not apply to this project. The Senator will remember that the provisions which the committee inserted in the bill, which the committee thought and I thought were necessary and were salutary legislation, went out on a point of order; but I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the provisions in the bill which failed last year with respect to the Montana project which we are now discussing were agreed to by the Senate. The language which the commissioner, Mr. Sells, and his assistant, Mr. Meritt, and Secretary Lane said was necessary for the adequate and complete protection of the Indian was the language agreed to, so far as this particular item is concerned, by the Senate. So the Senator certainly can not make the point that any language the Senate committee agreed to for the protection of the Indians in Montana was stricken out by the Senate, because the Senator wants to be accurate.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Arizona, I want to say that my recollection is quite distinct about that matter. It may have gone out on a point of order; but every feature suggested by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to protect the Indian's rights was wiped out either by the vote of the Senate or on a point of order, leaving him absolutely helpless, and leaving him, as has been well said here, with the right to make beneficial use of this water, but with no power on his part to do so. He has no money with which to purchase cattle, no money with which to purchase plows, no money with which to purchase any of the equipment which is necessary to make beneficial use of this water. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs in all of his recommendations last year for the Montana irrigation appropriation conditioned them absolutely upon the fact that the Indian was going to be safeguarded and protected by legislation suggested by him, to wit, that if the Indian was unable to seasonably make beneficial use of his irrigable water, he should not thereby be deprived of his rights.

I remember that in discussing this matter before the committee last year the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] made use of this language:

> Now let me remark, Senator, that nothing that our State can do can by any possibility take away from the Indians any rights which they acquire by virtue of any treaty.

The facts are that before Montana was admitted to the Union a treaty was made with the Indians which gave them the right to sufficient water to irrigate their lands. I think I am correct about that. I know that under what is known as the Winters case that point was decided in favor of the Indian; but that law is not regarded as good law by the Senators who come from the Indian States.

I want to read further what Senator WALSH said:

> I think you will appreciate that no matter how much we were disposed to do it, we could not do it. Now, what you mean is that although the Supreme Court of the United States decided in the Winters case that by virtue of that treaty the Indians were entitled to priority of right to the water of the Milk River as against the people who appropriated the water, and it was not necessary for the Indians to make any appropriation, they had their priority of right under and by virtue of that treaty. Now, those gentlemen still insist that the decision of the Supreme Court was wrong; that the only way that its effects can ever be obviated is by the Supreme Court reversing itself.

That matter, Mr. President, was discussed last year at length. I remember that my good friend from Arizona, Senator SMITH, took the position that the Winters decision was not good law. I think I am right about that. But if it is not good law, and if the Indians are putting in all this money, relying upon that decision for protection, may it not eventually turn out that the white man will step in and avail himself, by priority of appropriation, of the use of the Indian's water, and practically take away from him the very water which he is made to pay for by this appropriation?

As the junior Senator from Kansas has well said, we are taking the money which belongs to the Indians and investing it in a project from which, in my judgment, they are quite liable never to reap any fair return.

Here is a statement made by Mr. Meritt with regard to one of these projects. In answer to an inquiry by Senator CURTIS, "Is this a success?" he said:

> Senator CURTIS. Is this a success?
> Mr. MERITT. Yes, sir; it is a success, and the Indians as well as the white people under that project will get full value for the money invested. I can not say so much for the irrigation system on the Blackfeet Reservation. I have been on that reservation, and it is my personal opinion that it was a mistake ever to have begun that irrigation project on the Blackfeet Reservation. The Government has expended already about a million dollars on that project, and the Reclamation Service has estimated that it will cost approximately $3,000,000 before the project is completed as planned by them.

Mr. President, I believe that this legislation is in the interest of the whites and absolutely against the interest of the Indians, and I can not feel that I have any right to stand here and vote for appropriations which I think will eventually mortgage the Indians lands with no other idea than that if the project is a success he will get very little benefit from it, and if it is not a success he suffers the entire loss. As the Senator from Kansas has well said, if we are going on with this project let us not take the money from the Indian fund, let us not mortgage his land to pay for it.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PAGE. As soon as I finish the sentence. If we are to take that money, let us make it a gratuity appropriation; but do not let us take it from the Indian fund under a reimbursable clause, as we find it in this amendment.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Vermont has served upon the Committee on Indian Affairs for a long time and he is thoroughly informed in Indian matters and Indian legislation. If he thinks, as he says, that this appropriation is solely in the interest of the whites and entirely against the interest of the Indians, I will ask him how he would fix it in order to be fair to both whites and Indians? What change would he suggest? What course of legislation would be suggest?

Mr. PAGE. I would suggest that the interests of the white citizens of Montana be brought to the Senate and the question fairly placed before us, namely, shall we make a gratuity appropriation for the benefit of this project? So far as some of these irrigation projects are concerned, the Indian Department assures us almost unqualifiedly that they have been foolishly made, and that if we go on with them we shall spend three or four million dollars on them with very little benefit to the Indians.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator vote to take money out of the Treasury of the United States and expend it on this project as a gratuitous appropriation?

Mr. PAGE. When you ask me to take money from the Federal Treasury for that purpose I want an opportunity to carefully study and consider the matter. I would say, however, that if I were placed where I would have to accept one or the other, I would make a gratuity appropriation rather than take the money from the Indian fund, knowing, as I should, that the Indian was thereby going to be wronged.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator ever advocated that in the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. PAGE. I do not say that I now suggest a gratuity appropriation. If made, I would only make it on good grounds being shown therefor.

Mr. MYERS. I ask the Senator if he would suggest a gratuity appropriation?

Mr. PAGE. I will meet that question when we get to it, and meet it squarely. I simply say that the Indians are being wronged, in my judgment, in this great appropriation. More than $900,000 are taken from the Treasury under these three amendments. They are taken with the understanding that they are reimbursable from Indian funds.

Another word. Let me read what was said in answer to a question asked at a committee hearing by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]:

Senator CURTIS. I am told, Mr. Meritt, that these Indians are in a deplorable condition—the Blackfeet Indians—and I would like to know whether this legislation will enable them in any way to better take care of themselves in the way of producing more crops or encouraging them to go into the stock business, or something that will relieve them from their present unfortunate condition.

Mr. MERITT. This proposed legislation will not benefit the Blackfeet Indians to any great extent along industrial lines, unless they begin farming the lands that are now irrigable on the reservation.

Now, the facts are that the Indians are not in position to do this, and I wish to refer to a statement made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE]. He has been there and investigated this matter with a great deal of care. He says:

It would require three or four thousand dollars perhaps each to build their houses and barns and to furnish them plows and horses and harrows, and have enough left on hand to keep them until the crop came in. It is a country that is frost bitten at times, and only the hardier vegetables could be raised, and the Indian, unused to farming, if he went on the land, would have to have this capital, which he has not.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest that we are now considering an amendment for the Flathead project. The propositions are entirely different. We have not yet reached the Blackfeet amendment.

Mr. PAGE. All three of these amendments came to us as one. They are all substantially alike; they are taking the money of the Indian and paying it out for the benefit of the whites, in my judgment. I do not think the Indian is receiving a tithe of the benefits that come from this legislation. The white man, in my judgment, receives practically all of it; and it is wrong, it is robbery, and we, as Senators of the United States, have no right to stand here and see nearly $1,000,000 appropriated as a reimbursable fund when the universal verdict of those who have studied the matter seems to be that the Indian will probably be grossly wronged in so doing.

Mr. MYERS. That is not Mr. Meritt's testimony as to the Flatheads. He says as to the Flatheads that the expenditures of the Government have been all right.

Mr. PAGE. But it was the testimony of one who has been there, and I again refer to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE]. He says, "I have been there."

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Oregon has never been on the Flathead reservation. I will ask the Senator from Oregon if he was ever on the Flathead reservation.

Mr. PAGE. I know that Senator LANE's statement before the committee was that these Montana Indians, at least some of them, have nothing with which to purchase material so that they could make beneficial use of these irrigation projects. I will be very glad to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LANE. No; I do not want the Senator to yield. The testimony, as the Senator says, shows that the Flatheads are in a most deplorable state, but I did not personally investigate that matter. However, that testimony will not be successfully disputed.

Mr. MYERS. I say the testimony is that there are a few indigent and invalided Indians there in poverty on the Flathead reservation, just as there are some such Indians on every reservation in the United States.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think I do not care to say more. I do not feel that I can vote for this amendment, and I should like to put myself on record as opposing any measure that I think is so grossly wrong to the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I would not say a single word at this time if it were not for the statement made by Senators who are not advised about the facts in regard to this matter that ought not to go uncorrected upon the record. If the Senators present will give me their attention for a few minutes, I want to say a few things that will give a much more nearly correct view of the situation.

We are discussing the Flathead Indian appropriation. The Flathead Indian Reservation was opened under the provisions of the act of Congress passed in 1904. It contemplated that the Indians should select their allotment, and that the excess lands should be entered by the whites after their value had been appraised, and it also contemplated that there should be an irrigation system upon that land. The Indians were permitted to select their allotments under the project, and any allotments they did not select were then open to selection by white settlers.

Now, that original act—and I want it made perfectly clear—never provided for the payment of this work out of any Indian money. Appropriations were made from year to year, aggregating now $1,625,000, exclusive of the appropriation here contemplated. I am saying much of this for the benefit of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. The act provided that the white settlers who took that land should pay their proportionate share of the expense of the project. I say this because, Mr. President, the act was passed when neither I nor my colleague was here, when our State was represented by two Senators who sat upon the other side of the Chamber. I read, accordingly, from the appropriation act of 1908, as follows:

Provided, however, That the entryman or owner of any land irrigable by any system hereunder constructed under the provisions of section 14 of this act shall, in addition to the payment required by section 9 of said act, be required to pay for a water right the proportionate cost of the construction of said system in not more than 15 annual installments, as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, the same to be paid at the local land office, and the register and receiver shall be allowed the usual commissions on all moneys paid.

So, Mr. President, every dollar that has been thus far appropriated for this project is to be paid, so far as any part of it goes to the improvement of lands that were lands of the whites, out of those lands, and is to be paid back and reimbursed to the Government not out of any Indian money except so far as the Indian lands shall bear their just proportion, but by the white men who take the excess land. Now, if that matter is clear in the minds of Senators, I want to pass to another error industriously instilled here in the minds of the Senators, honestly enough, but by Senators who are not informed of the facts.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I want to see if I understand the Senator correctly. I understand the act providing for the opening of this reservation provided that the surplus lands should be disposed of to white settlers and it also, in effect, promised that an irrigation system should be developed under which the lands could be irrigated, and that whatever the cost per acre might be any settler who took a tract of that land should pay that cost himself.

Mr. WALSH. His proportionate cost.

Mr. JONES. Of course, if it was $30 an acre, he paid $30 an acre for his 80 acres or 160 acres or whatever he took. Was there anything in the act anywhere that pledged any of these Indian funds toward the payment of that sum?

Mr. WALSH. Not at all, except as far as it was chargeable against the Indian land.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to read right here for the information of the Senate——

Mr. WALSH. Just a minute.

Mr. CURTIS. Right on this point.

Mr. WALSH. I object to the Senator interjecting anything here. I am going to make my statement about this matter.

Mr. JONES. I merely wanted to get that point clear.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator desires to ask me a question, I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. JONES. If it is as I understand it, I can not see where there could be any objection to this amendment. This is the amendment appropriating $750,000?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. That the Senator says is reimbursable, but, as I understand the Senator, it does not mean reimbursable out of the proceeds that belong to the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Not at all. I will say to the Senator that the attendant legislation we have been obliged to excise made specific provision in respect to that matter, and it explains entirely the reimbursable feature. I hope that that legislation will go along with it, and if it does not, I will say to the Senator that it will be reimbursable in view of the past statute, which makes the part chargeable against the white men's land reimbursable by them.

Mr. JONES. There would not be any objection to placing in this amendment "reimbursable by the payment of whites for the land they occupy and out of the Indian moneys for the lands which they have the benefit of"?

Mr. WALSH. Not the slightest.

Mr. JONES. Then that would make it, it seems to me, perfectly clear right on its face.

Mr. WALSH. If there is any want of clarity about it, I would be very glad to have it made clear.

Mr. JONES. The impression I had when the amendment was read was that this sum will be reimbursable out of the Indian moneys, and I thought that that was the position the Senator from Vermont was taking; but when the Senator made his statement and read the section from the act it seemed to me that that was not correct, that it is not reimbursable out of the Indian money at all, but that so far as any Indian allotment is benefited he has to pay, and so far as any white man's tract is benefited the white man has to pay—not from the Indian fund at all.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. May I say for the information of the Senator that under the law as it has been heretofore the amount chargeable to the Indian land is reimbursable out of the whole body of the tribal funds, thus imposing the burden as well upon the Indian who takes an allotment above the ditch as upon the Indian who takes an allotment below the ditch.

Mr. JONES. I do not think that is fair or just.

Mr. WALSH. No; that is what we wanted to correct.

Mr. JONES. I think that ought to be corrected. That is not right.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I insisted, and we very readily joined with the Indian Department in the legislation which was designed to correct it.

Now, Mr. President, if I have made myself clear to the Senator from Vermont and the other Senators who do me the honor to listen I desire to go a little further.

Mr. JONES. I do not want to interrupt the Senator except that I want to get this clear. The Senator from Kansas has just called my attention to a statement from the department that I would like to have some explanation about.

Mr. WALSH. I would be very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Meritt says:

> Under existing law every dollar will be reimbursed out of the Indians' funds. It is reimbursable. The Government has been advancing funds for this project. The Indians' funds are held responsible for repayment to the Government, and we also hold the white owners on that reservation responsible for the charge for irrigating their land.

What does he mean by that?

Mr. WALSH. He means that the Indian lands are reimbursable out of the general body of the Indian funds, and so far as the white man's lands are concerned that portion is reimbursable out of them, and he wants the law changed with respect to the Indian lands. The language is perfectly plain and in entire conformity with the statement which I have made.

Mr. JONES. If that is correct, the statement of the Senator from Vermont is not correct.

Mr. PAGE. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. JONES. I can not see why he can make a statement of general language in that way unless there is something in the context or something that qualifies it to show what he really does mean.

Mr. PAGE. Let me say that not once but a dozen times——

Mr. WALSH. I objected to any argument by the Senator from Kansas, and I will be obliged to object to an argument by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. I will be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. PAGE. I will ask a question. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Was not the question asked many times of the commissioner during our hearings whether the Indians had the funds from which these appropriations could be made good, and did not he universally reply, "Yes; we have the funds, and every acre of land holden and every dollar of money holden to make good"? I ask the Senator if that was not the general language?

Mr. WALSH. I would not undertake to recall what was said about the matter. If any colloquy of that character took place at all, I am perfectly clear in my mind that the commissioner intended to say to the committee that the Indian lands, the allotted lands, will easily stand the charge, and that there is enough coming to the individual Indians in the way of tribal receipts and tribal funds to fully reimburse the Government for whatever portion of the expenditure is properly chargeable against their land.

Now, Mr. President, if I may proceed to another point, the Senator from Kansas wants this whole project abandoned and dropped—a million six hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars already spent in carrying out this project absolutely dismissed. He says the Indians are not making use of this project, and the Senator from Vermont is troubled very much in his mind, because he says this is an appropriation of Indian money for the benefit of the land of white men.

Mr. President, when that land was thrown open to settlement it was appraised under the provisions of the act. Of course, all lands under the irrigation project were appraised at a very high price—$10 per acre, exclusive of the water. The lands outside of the project were appraised at anywhere from $2.50 to $7 an acre. A settler had his choice. He could go and take land under the irrigation project, paying into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the Indians $10 per acre, or obligating himself to pay his proportionate cost of the expenditure necessitated by the project, or he could go outside of the project and take land that he could get for $2.50 an acre or $4 an acre or $5 an acre. A map was put upon the wall. The Indian Service, acting under the authority of Congress, laid out this project, set out upon the map the lands which were to be covered by water, and said to every comer, "Take your pick of these lands; take lands under the project or take lands outside of the project." Practically every acre of these lands under the project had been taken, and only 400 acres were left at the close of the year ending June 30, 1915. They had been taken at the appraised price; taken by those settlers under the promise of the Congress of the United States that, if they paid that $10 into the Treasury for the benefit of these Indians, the Government would carry on this project, so that their lands could be irrigated. Now it is proposed to let those settlers occupy those dry lands, worth not a dollar more than the lands above the project, which they could have gotten for two dollars and a half an acre; it is proposed to let them stay there, and to say: "Although we held out these inducements to you to take these lands under the project, although you paid two or three times the value of these lands, if it were not for the fact that they were under the project, and the Indians now have the benefit of this money, we propose to abandon the whole thing and to leave you high and dry."

Why, Mr. President, I am astonished that any Senator should so compromise the honor of the United States and of the Congress of the United States as to make such a proposition in this body. Do you recognize no kind of obligation to those white settlers who went there at your invitation and upon your promise that this irrigation work should be carried on and that appropriations should be made, so that it should be hurried to completion as rapidly as the circumstances would permit? I want to ask the Senator from Kansas, if he will do me the honor to answer, what would he do as to those settlers?

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I stated a few moments ago that I was not in favor of taking anything from the settlers. I would return this bill to the committee, and I would have the Senators from Montana and the other members of the committee meet with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and with the men in the Reclamation Service and prepare a bill that would protect the rights of all. Then I would bring the bill in here as a separate measure, put it through, and protect the rights of the white settlers, protect the rights of the Indians, and protect the rights of the Government. That is what I would do.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that is very honorable in the Senator from Kansas; that would be the right thing to do. Unfortunately he has not been here for two years; but that is what we have been doing for the past two years. Mr. President, this language is exactly the same as the language in the appropriation bill of last year, and it was tendered as an amendment in the appropriation bill of the year before. We have done just the thing which the Senator from Kansas wants us to do. Now, because, forsooth, the Senator has not been here for the last two years, he wants to push this aside and have us do the whole work over again, so that he may participate in the deliberations. I insist that his request is rather ungenerous.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not care whether I participate in the deliberations or not. What I desire is to see the interest of all concerned fully protected.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I want to supplement what my colleague [Mr. WALSH] has so ably said by adding a few observations, largely from what I personally learned and observed on the Flathead Reservation when I visited it last summer. I first, however, want to make a few comments on some of the remarks made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] in his usual earnest and vigorous manner.

I am greatly surprised that the Senator from Kansas should take the position which he now does in regard to this project. When the Senator from Kansas honored us with his membership in this body once before—up to three years ago, I believe it was—he was a member of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs. The same projects, involving the same annual appropriations, under the same circumstances and conditions, were then each year before the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, and he and I were both members of that committee. The Senator from Kansas at that time did not take the stand in regard to this project which he now does, and I thought he understood then just as thoroughly what he was doing and what the committee was doing as he now does. In fact, at that time and up to the time that the Senator from Kansas retired from the Senate, three years ago, I want to say that he was most helpful to me on the Indian Committee in behalf of this project.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. CURTIS. It is true that I was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs at the time to which the Senator from Montana refers, and it is true I did not then oppose these projects; but the Senator from Montana will remember that I expressed grave doubt as to the matter. However, because it had been recommended by the department, I was then willing that Congress might make the experiment. I think the experiment has failed, and it having failed, I think we ought to stop spending the money.

Mr. MYERS. I think the Flathead reclamation project had then passed the experimental stage; the appropriations had been made annually for several years at that time; but I remember that on one occasion—I think it was the last year that the Senator from Kansas served here before he retired—the Senator very ably and kindly assisted me, and very efficiently assisted me, on the committee in getting the appropriation for the Flathead reclamation project increased from $200,000, the amount which was contained in the House bill, to $400,000, the amount at which it was placed by the Senate committee, and in getting the appropriation through the Senate at the latter figure. I am surprised now at the changed attitude of the Senator from Kansas, although I do not doubt he is entirely conscientious about it. The Senator from Kansas must have understood what he was doing then as well as now. Therefore I am greatly surprised at his change of attitude. I am not surprised at the opposition of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. His opposition to the Flathead project is perpetual. He has always opposed it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. PAGE. If the Senator from Montana will convince me that the statement of his colleague [Mr. WALSH] is correct—that these payments are not chargeable to the Indians; that they are not absolutely reimbursable out of their property or their money—I will withdraw my opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary for me to convince anybody that the statements of my colleague [Mr. WALSH] are correct. If my colleague did not convince the Senator from Vermont by his very clear and lucid statement of the matter, then I would be hopeless of anything convincing him.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. PAGE. At the time we were hearing matters relating to Montana, the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] was very faithful in his attendance upon the meetings of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I will ask if he does not recall the fact that Mr. Meritt was asked in regard to the Flathead property and whether the money was sufficient, so that the tribe could reimburse the Federal Treasury if they were finally compelled to do so?

Mr. MYERS. I do not recall all that was said, but I shall be satisfied with whatever the RECORD shows.

Mr. PAGE. Here is what Mr. Meritt said in reply to a question:

> The Flathead Indians have tribal property worth $7,000,000. There is no question about the Government being reimbursed.

That is the statement of Mr. Meritt.

Mr. MYERS. I subscribe to that; I think it is correct. If there were any question about it, I would not be here urging this appropriation; but there is no question about it.

Mr. PAGE. That is the point of difference between the Senator from Montana and myself. If all these payments are chargeable against those $7,000,000 of Indian funds, then I say it would be doing the Indian wrong; but if, as the Senator's colleague has just stated, it is reimbursable only out of moneys received from the sale of the lands, I should say that you had removed a part of my objection.

Mr. MYERS. Has the Senator from Vermont ever read the law providing for the opening of this project to settlement? That is stated in that law. Has the Senator ever read the law?

Mr. PAGE. No; I have not.

Mr. MYERS. It is in the law, and I would advise the Senator from Vermont to read it, and he will be better informed. He will know more of what he is talking about.

Mr. PAGE. The plain, unequivocal statement of Mr. Meritt upon this matter is this:

> Under existing law every dollar will be reimbursed out of the Indians' funds.

Mr. MYERS. Every dollar that is expended for irrigating Indian lands is reimbursed to the Government out of the Indians' funds, and the white settlers reimburse the Government for expenditures made in placing water on their land. That is fair.

Mr. PAGE. I understand that if the project proves to be a success and there is money enough to pay out, the Senator is correct. But suppose it should be a failure, what then?

Mr. MYERS. Then, if the white settler does not pay, the Government still owns the land in trust for the Indians, and some other settler will come along and it will be sold to him; it will be sold to somebody eventually who will pay. The settler who does not complete his payments forfeits everything he pays; it goes to the Government. The land, however, is there; it is security; it can not get away.

Mr. PAGE. That is right; but I should like to know the meaning of the English language when Mr. Meritt says:

> Under existing law every dollar will be reimbursed out of the Indians' funds.

Mr. MYERS. In view of the plain provision of the law, I take it that Mr. Meritt must have been talking about money which is appropriated for irrigating Indian lands.

Mr. PAGE. He was talking about this provision of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. JONES. I think I see in the law a reason why the department makes that statement and why they take that position.

Mr. MYERS. I will be glad to have the Senator read the provision of the law.

Mr. JONES. I have it here, through the kindness of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], and it reads as follows:

> SEC. 14. That the proceeds received from the sale of said lands—

That is, all of the lands in this reservation appraised and disposed of—> in conformity with this act shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and after deducting the expenses of the commission of classification and sale of lands, and such other incidental expenses as shall have been necessarily incurred, and expenses of the survey of the land shall be expended or paid as follows:

Now, that takes in the money that comes from the surplus lands, from the settlers, and from anybody who pays any money—

> So much thereof as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable in the construction of irrigation systems, for the irrigation of the irrigable lands embraced within the limits of said reservation.

I take it that, under that language, the Secretary of the Interior, if he sees fit, can use every dollar, whether coming from white men or from the Indians, for the purpose of constructing these irrigation systems. As I understand, there is not now money enough to carry on the work, so that we are advancing the money. Consequently I think that under that law the department is justified in saying that this whole fund is a guaranty for the repayment to the United States of whatever money we appropriate for irrigating these lands.

I think we ought to change the law right here, if it is possible to do so, and expressly provide that for the lands the white settler has he shall be responsible for repayment.

Mr. MYERS. We tried to do that yesterday——

Mr. JONES. That is what ought to be done.

Mr. MYERS. But the Senator from Kansas made a point of order, which compelled us to abandon it.

Mr. JONES. I am sorry that he did, for that is what ought to be done——

Mr. MYERS. We wanted to do that. We are willing to do it.

Mr. JONES. And I think, if the Senator from Kansas really understood the situation there, he would not object to a proposition of that kind, because the settlers are going in there and irrigating the land, and we owe something to them.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] will allow me, as chairman of the committee I want to say that it took us two years to reach that. That is exactly what this legislation does. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs agrees that it does; the Secretary of the Interior agrees that it does; the Senators from Montana believe that it does; I believe that it does; and I feel quite sure that, after the faithful service the Senator from Kansas has rendered to his country, he would not want to step in, put up his hand, and stay the execution of a law that would protect the Indians. I assert that the proposed legislation which the committee reported will protect the Indians, and I think the Senator ought, in justice to himself, withdraw his point of order and withdraw his opposition. It is a brave thing when a man sees he is wrong to withdraw from a position which he has taken. I have had that to do when I saw I was wrong, and the Senator from Kansas is big enough and brave enough to do it, and he ought to do it now.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I will yield for a question, but not for a speech to be made in my time.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall address the Senate later on.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator wishes to ask a question, I will be very happy to answer it, if I can.

Mr. GRONNA. I will be satisfied to proceed in my own time, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator wants to make some remarks, I would rather he would proceed later; but if he wants to ask a question, I assure him I will be most happy to answer it, if it be in my power to do so.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Montana, then, if there is any doubt in his mind that the Indian tribal funds are all held responsible for the payment of the cost of this irrigation project?

Mr. MYERS. The Indian funds are held responsible for the payment of the expense of putting the water on the Indian's land, but for putting the water on the white man's land the white settler himself is required to pay the expense and the Government holds the white man's land as security for that payment.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true that the white man's land would be simply a collateral security; and, in the first instance, are not the tribal funds responsible for all the money expended for this irrigation project?

Mr. MYERS. No; because the land is the primary and principal security; it is there; and if you do not get the money out of the land that land goes to the Indians. It is very plain. The land of the settlers is held as security for the cost of putting the water on it. The settlers themselves must pay that. Their land is held for it. They do not get patents to the land—they get no title—until all payments are made for the cost of putting the water on the land. If they do not pay it, the land is held for it. That part costs the Indians nothing. The cost of putting the water on the land of the Indians is held out of the tribal funds of the Indians. That is as plain as I can make it.

Mr. President, I will conclude soon, and I would rather not yield further unless for questions. I do not want to take too much time on this matter. I now want to comment on a few of the statements made by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS].

The Senator from Kansas referred to the fact that very little of the Indian land covered by the water from this irrigation project is being farmed by the Indians. I want to say to him that a great proportion of that Indian land is leased to the whites. There is a ready demand for it. There are white farmers ready and willing to lease it at all times and to pay a good price for it under rules and regulations of the Indian Bureau; and if it be true that the Indians are not farming their land, the fact is that most of it is farmed by whites under leases, the Indians getting the proceeds. In that way they probably get more benefit from it than if they farmed it. The Senator from Kansas says we should get together and agree on some plan for the better protection of the Indians.

So far as getting together and devising adequate legislation is concerned, that suggestion is most discouraging. All suggestions of that kind are most discouraging. Some three years ago, I believe it was, the Indian Bureau under its present management began to object to the system under which appropriations were made for this project, although that system had never been objected to before. The predecessor in office of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs had never objected, but had pronounced the plan of the project fair. But about three years ago there began to be objection, and for the last three years the Indian Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, the members of the Montana delegation, and the Secretary of the Interior have labored on a plan of legislation to conform to what the Indian Bureau thought would be fair and adequate and afford protection to the uttermost limit to the rights of the Indians in this matter. The Indian Commissioner and his assistant, together with the Secretary of the Interior and their legal counsel, got up the very plan of legislation which was put into this bill this year; and the members of the Montana delegation were all consulted about it and agreed to it. We were only too willing and ready to agree to anything that might be considered fair to the Indians. Counsel approved of it, and I want to say that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, himself was personally cognizant of the proposed legislation which had been prepared and approved of it. I want to say, furthermore, that it went into the Indian bill last year in connection with these projects, and was actually adopted by the Senate, so that the bill was passed by the Senate last year containing the identical legislation of which I am speaking and which was put in the bill this year with our consent and at the request of the Indian Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior.

The Indian appropriation bill failed last year not because of failure to pass the Senate, but it failed in conference because the conferees could not agree upon some items that had nothing whatever to do with Montana, items relating to Oklahoma and South Dakota and other States, but not Montana; so that this identical legislation was approved and adopted by the Senate last year. We consented to it again this year, and now the Senator from Kansas meets it with a point of order that it is not permissible in an appropriation bill, and we are compelled to give it up. We are willing to adopt either one of two courses: We are willing to have the appropriation without the legislation and to have the legislation in a separate bill, or we are willing to have the appropriation and the legislation combined in the pending bill. We have done all we could in the last two or three years to get together, and if we have not gotten together and devised something fair it is impossible to do it. There would be no use of trying further. The Indians, under the allotment system followed, get the first choice of land. The land on this project was divided into dry land and irrigable land. If the Indians preferred to do so they had the privilege of going up on the foothills and benches and taking 320 acres of dry land, in no way subject to the costs of this irrigation scheme, and many of them did that. But the Indians who took irrigable lands down in the valleys and bottoms did it with their eyes open and knowing what they were doing, knowing it would be subject to irrigation charges.

I want to say right here that in my long and intimate connection with this project, covering now about five years, I have never yet heard of an Indian objecting to the prosecution of work on this project or to finishing it. I have been on the Flathead Reservation time and time again. Delegations have visited me at Missoula when I have been out there, and there never has been a word of objection coming from an Indian to the completion of this project. I have never heard a word from a Flathead Indian complaining that the plan pursued was not fair, right, and just to the Indians. There never has been an Indian from the Flathead Reservation down here at Washington objecting to the completion of this project. On the other hand, there was a delegation of Indians down here from the Flathead Reservation a few years ago which urged me and my colleague to secure an early completion of this project. They wanted the water on their lands and they wanted the money coming to them out of the lands from the whites. They were insistent on going ahead with the project. At Missoula a year or two ago a delegation of Indians from the Flathead Reservation waited on me and urged me to procure the early completion of this project.

No, sir; there never has been a word of protest from the Indians on the Flathead project against the completion of this project. All of the objection arises down here in Washington. It does not come from the Indians themselves. It comes from Senators who think they know better what the Indians want than do the Indians themselves.

There has been a good deal said about the value of this land. It was appraised, and practically all of it has been allotted to Indians or sold to white settlers. It has been disposed of. That is done for and past; but I want to say that before the water was put on the land the greater part of it was worth very little or practically nothing; a nominal sum, a dollar or two or three dollars an acre was a fair price for it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. Right in that connection I want to ask the Senator whether, when the appraisement of these lands was made, account was taken of the probability of the irrigation of some of the lands and lack of probability of irrigation of others and the appraisement made accordingly?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir. Those that were likely to be irrigated were appraised much higher than those that were not to be irrigated.

Mr. JONES. Can the Senator tell me the figure at which some of these lands that it was thought might be irrigated were appraised?

Mr. MYERS. Some of them were appraised as high as $30 an acre.

Mr. JONES. Some as high as $30 an acre without water rights?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. So that the settler who has gone on that land will pay $30 an acre, and then, in addition, he will be required to pay whatever the charge is for a water right?

Mr. MYERS. That is the status; yes, sir. He will pay what they are appraised at, and the cost of putting on the water in addition.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure, for a question.

Mr. LANE. What has been the average appraisement?

Mr. MYERS. Oh, I should judge about $5 an acre for irrigated land, probably; five or six dollars an acre.

Mr. JONES. What was the average appraisement of the other lands?

Mr. MYERS. One or two dollars an acre, I think.

I shall not have much more to say, Mr. President. I have been interrupted a good deal, and have yielded freely. I always like to impart what information I can and to be courteous to my fellow Senators; but I have some things I want to say. Last summer I visited the Flathead Reservation four times, and I was over the project extensively; I went over all parts of it. If the Senators could see the condition of the white settlers, the poor, struggling homesteaders, on that project, who were invited there by the United States Government, who were solicited to go, and who went there in good faith, accepting the word and the faith and the honor of this Government to fulfill its obligations and its promises, relying on the good faith and honor of their Government to deal justly and honestly with them; if you Senators could see the plight they are now in, as I have seen it, I believe that some Senators here would view this matter in a different light. My heart bleeds for some of those unfortunate people and their pitiable plight. They are good people, patriotic people; industrious, law-abiding, peace-loving, home-making citizens. They are of the bone and sinew of the country; the class of people who have made the great West what it is; the people who fell forests, blaze the way of civilization, break the prairies, erect school houses and churches and build communities. They went there believing they would get a square deal from this great Government, and they feel they have not received it. They are right. They have not. I know they have not. I know their treatment.

The land under this project was thrown open to settlement. It was the announced determination of the Government from the beginning to irrigate it. In the first place, ninety-nine one-hundredths of the land is unfit for cultivation without irrigation. It is not a dry-land farming country. You can not go there and make a success of dry-land farming. The nature of the soil is such, and the lack of precipitation of moisture is such, that you must have irrigation in order to make farming it a success. More than that, if you are going to try dry-land farming at all you must have at least 320 acres. You can not make a success of 40 or 80 acres at dry-land farming, either there or anywhere else.

So the Government determined that this would be an irrigated project in large part. It was segregated. The land that was not to be irrigated was either allotted to the Indians or sold to the whites, as the case may be, in 320-acre tracts, intended for grazing purposes. The land that was to be irrigated, either for the benefit of the Indians or the whites, was divided into 40, 60, and 80 acre tracts, according to value and circumstances, the tracts ranging from 40 to 80 acres. The land was thrown open to settlement and to entry at the United States land offices in the vicinity. It was advertised that it would be an irrigated project as to all except the bench land 320-acre tracts. The people were invited to come there and enter it as irrigated land, and the tracts were divided, in large measure, into 40 and 80 acre tracts for that purpose. People who came there were asked at the land office, "Do you want a dry tract of 320 acres up there on the bench or 40 or 80 acres in the valley?" Those who wanted irrigated lands took the 40 and 80 acre tracts.

To show good faith on the part of the Government, the reclamation project was actually started some six or seven years ago, and legislation to that effect was enacted after the Flathead Reservation had been thrown open to allotment and settlement. The Government started the reclamation work, made the surveys, had engineers on the ground, allotted a good sum of money with which to begin the work, and the settlers went there with every assurance that this reclamation project would be completed; that the work would be pushed expeditiously, and that water would soon be put on their lands; and they had every reason to believe that the work would be prosecuted with due diligence and completed at an early day in a businesslike manner. So the settlers went on there, paying the prices of irrigated lands—five, six, seven dollars per acre—and contracted with the Government to pay in addition the cost of putting the water on the land, and they broke the ground and built houses and went to farming, assuming that within a reasonable time, and at most two or three years, the project would be completed and water would be put on their lands.

That was about six years ago; and to-day, as to a large part of those irrigable lands settled by those poor white settlers, not a drop of water has ever reached the land; this, owing to the slow progress of the work and the parsimonious action of the Government in doling out a hundred thousand or two hundred thousand dollars a year, when the Reclamation Service was able to handle a million dollars a year and complete it in five years in a businesslike manner. It ought to have all been completed before now.

I was in the Little Bitter Root Valley, which is a part of this project, last summer. There never has been a drop of water put on any of the land in that valley. It is a big part of the project and a good part; and the poor settlers went there—honest people, law-abiding, patriotic American citizens, who are entitled to believe that they will get fair treatment from their Government, to which they give allegiance, and which they help to support by their services, their labor, and money. They came from Iowa, Illinois, Minnesota, Nebraska, the Dakotas, from eastern Montana, and some of them from the State of Washington to the West, and went there and took up land, believing that water would be put on it, and that they would be enabled to make a living. They believed their Government would keep faith with them. For six years they have starved and endured indescribable hardships there, some of them suffering for want of the necessaries of life for themselves and their families, for food and clothing, and for shoes for their children in the wintertime, just because the United States Government would not keep its plighted word of honor with them and complete this project and put water on their lands and enable them to make a living and pay for their land, as they were induced to believe would be the case; old soldiers, some of them, who fought in the Union Army during the Civil War and offered their lives for their country and preserved this country from destruction in the time of its peril and the hour of its distress; they are now begging for justice at the hands of their Government. Shall they have it? Will you give it to them or will you turn a deaf ear to their appeals?

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with great pleasure.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator how much money we have appropriated to put in this irrigation plant?

Mr. MYERS. About $1,600,000.

Mr. JONES. And what has been done with that?

Mr. MYERS. It has been expended on the project.

Mr. JONES. But what has been accomplished? That is what I want to know.

Mr. MYERS. Ditches have been put in, the main ditches, mostly. The laterals are yet to go in, mostly. Considerable of the land has been covered by ditches, but much has not been reached—not nearly as much as ought to have been.

Mr. JONES. Will the water for most of the land that is to be irrigated on this reservation be taken out in one main ditch, and then distributed in other ditches?

Mr. MYERS. Several main ditches; a system of canals.

Mr. JONES. Out of the stream?

Mr. MYERS. A system of canals, out of streams and reservoirs.

Mr. JONES. And you have to construct reservoirs?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. Has anything been done toward the construction of reservoirs?

Mr. MYERS. Oh, yes; a number of reservoirs have been constructed, and others are in process of construction, and there are plans for others.

Mr. JONES. And you have ditches now that will cover about how many acres of this land?

Mr. WALSH. Forty-nine thousand four hundred acres.

Mr. MYERS. That is correct. It is given in the latest report of the Reclamation Service.

Mr. JONES. How many acres are there altogether that it is expected to irrigate?

Mr. WALSH. One hundred and forty-three thousand.

Mr. MYERS. Yes; that is correct; about 143,000 acres. These figures are all found in the report of the Reclamation Service, which I have on my desk. Why, about one-third of this work has been done. Would you now stop it and throw away what has been done, and tell the settlers whose lands have not yet been reached by the irrigation system to get hence and look not to the Government to keep faith with them? What perfidy that would be!

Mr. President, I say it is a burning shame! Last summer I was in the Little Bitter Root Valley; and I want to say to you that three-fourths of the homesteaders' shacks in that part of this reservation are nailed up, the windows are boarded up, and the settlers and their families have taken to the road; have gone to some other part of the country to hunt for employment, where they could make a living, because their own Government has refused to keep its word with them, and has literally starved them out. I say that is not a fair way to treat citizens of our country. Three-fourths or four-fifths of the houses in the Little Bitter Root Valley are nailed up and the farms are deserted, because the United States Government would not keep its faith with the people who were drawn there through the representations of the Government.

It is pitiful. It is deplorable. It is a bunco game. It is not honorable conduct on the part of the Government. This land has practically all been taken up. There has been more than a million and a half dollars expended, and nothing is in keeping with good faith and fair dealing but to go ahead and finish this project. Why, if you should abandon it right now there would be hundreds more of settlers who would have to leave with their families and go out and face the world without a dollar. Some of them have sunk as much as $5,000 or $10,000 in their homesteads there, and they are not worth a dollar unless you go ahead and complete this project and put the water on the land. Others have put in a few hundred dollars, five hundred, a thousand, fifteen hundred dollars; their all, the savings of a lifetime. It is all to them; all is gone. They are now in desperate straits. They cry out for justice at your hands. Will they get it? Will they get simple justice? That is all they ask. For five long years they have waited for it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with pleasure for a question.

Mr. BORAH. I wanted to ask if there is any doubt about the practicability of this project, or of its being good agricultural land?

Mr. MYERS. None whatever. I am glad the Senator asked that question. I want to say that last summer they had an exceptionally rainy season, the greatest rainfall they have had in 40 years, and they raised crops there that will equal any in the United States—oats running as high as 100 bushels to the acre and wheat as high as 60 and 70 bushels to the acre—but they have not had before such a year in 40 years in that part of the country, and probably will not have another in 40 years to come. That shows what the land will do with water on it. It is rich land, wonderfully rich, but it has to be irrigated. These people can not make it pay without irrigation. With irrigation it will be a marvelous success, equal to any in the United States.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; although I am in a hurry to close. My time is nearly out.

Mr. PAGE. Before the Senator sits down I want to ask him a question.

Mr. MYERS. All right. I want to say that this project was started in good faith by the Government. It was conceived and started by former Senators Carter and Dixon, our predecessors here. They were acting in good faith when they started it, and we are acting in good faith in asking for its completion.

It is tiresome to hear the Montana delegation accused continually, year after year, of standing here and trying to rob the Indians for the benefit of the whites. Robbing somebody! We have no such motive, and I know that our predecessors had no such motive in starting it. We want to rob nobody. We want justice. This thing is thrashed over every year. There is the annual fight made on it by Senators who, it would seem, would kill this project, murder it, and turn the innocent settlers loose on the highways to become tramps on the face of the earth, they and their families.

I want to say that last year we received some very valuable aid and support from Senators on the other side of the Chamber, especially the Senators from Utah, the Senators from Idaho, the Senators from Wyoming, and other States which are represented on the other side of the Chamber. I do hope that their sense of fairness and justice will lead them to give us some help this year. Give us justice. Give us a square deal. That is all we want. We should have a million dollars this year, and will not be satisfied with less than three-quarters of a million.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if what he has said in regard to these projects is applicable to all the projects for which he has applied for an appropriation at this time?

Mr. MYERS. The same conditions largely prevail on the Fort Peck project, because it has been thrown open to allotment and settlement. They do not prevail on the Blackfeet Reservation, because that never has been thrown open for allotment and settlement.

Mr. PAGE. I was going to remark that you ask for an appropriation for the Blackfeet Reservation. I think it appeared before our committee that the Government had already expended about a million dollars on the Blackfeet Reservation, and that the estimate of the Reclamation Service was that it would cost $3,000,000 more in order to complete that.

Mr. MYERS. I will discuss the Blackfeet Reservation when we get to it. This amendment applies only to the Flathead Reservation.

Mr. PAGE. If the Federal Government has made any promises to Montana, I want to have it keep those promises. I have not the slightest objection to the Federal Government taking from its Treasury all that it ought to take to make good any pledge it has made. I do not know about those pledges. When they come up and are presented to us in a proper way I will consider them, and I do not know why I will not agree that a reasonable sum may be taken from the Federal Treasury as a gratuity appropriation. What I am objecting to is this: We have begun those measures, and many of them are said to be failures. When we spend a million dollars on a project, and it will cost $3,000,000 more to complete it, and confess that it is a failure, I want to know before we go on and appropriate, as we have under the proposals of this bill, over $900,000 this year, that the sums so appropriated are not coming out of the Indians in the end. Just convince me that their money will not be taken for this purpose and I think I will support any reasonable measure.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] that this money ought not to come out of the Indians. I think that under section 14 of the act probably the department is justified in holding all moneys that come into that fund as a guaranty of the payment or repayment of the moneys that may be advanced; but the situation appeals to me in about this way: I know something about irrigable lands. I know something about what they are worth without water, and I know something about what they are worth in my section with water.

Under the act that we passed for the opening of these reservations we held out to the people of the country that there were lands on the reservations that could be irrigated, and from the statement of the Senator from Montana this was taken into account when these lands were appraised. Lands that it was possible to irrigate were appraised at a higher price than other lands, some of them as high as $5, $6, $7, $8, $9, and $10 an acre, and, as he says, even as high as $30 an acre. The act provided then that the settlers on the land should pay this appraised price. When they took the land they had a right to expect that the lands would some day be irrigated.

There is not, however, any promise in the act that we would advance money out of the Treasury for the irrigation of that land. In other words, there is not any real promise from the Government of the United States that it would see to it that the lands were irrigated within any particular time, and not at all out of the Treasury of the United States. But the act does provide, in section 14, that of the funds received from the sale and disposition of these Indian lands the Secretary of the Interior may take such amount as he deems necessary for the construction of different irrigation works. So, taking it strictly, no settler has any ground of complaint against the Government that these lands are not irrigated unless there is something in the fund that can be used for their irrigation, and sufficient for that purpose.

But, as I understand it, we commenced several years ago to appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of carrying on this reclamation with a provision, I suppose, that it should be reimbursable. Practically, we have taken money out of the Treasury and put it into this fund for the purpose of irrigating these lands. Possibly many settlers have gone on the lands since we have begun that policy. I do not know whether that is true or not; it is very likely, however.

Mr. MYERS. They have.

Mr. JONES. I think it is very likely. So they had in effect the promise of the United States that we would irrigate those lands, and that promise was especially made by our action in appropriating money out of the Treasury and putting it in this fund.

Mr. MYERS. Undoubtedly they so considered it.

Mr. JONES. I think they have a right to consider it so. I think if the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] had been induced to go upon land, in the absence of any positive assurance but with the suggestion implied in the fact that he would have to pay more for this land because of the possibility of reclamation, and with a positive provision in the law that out of some certain fund the land should be irrigated, he would have a right to expect those lands to be irrigated; and if the person who induced him to go on appropriated money from some other source and put it into this fund for the purpose of hurrying the reclamation, I think he has a right to assume that obligation will be carried out, and that these lands will, as soon as possible, be reclaimed so that he will get the benefit of the money that he paid in the first instance for the land and is then required to pay for the water cost.

That seems to be the situation here. It may be a bad proposition; I do not know about it; but I doubt it. I have seen some of this land in the Bitter Root Valley; I have seen some things they do and can do there by irrigation and reclamation; and unless extravagance and incompetence are practiced in the development of this irrigation system, I am satisfied that ultimately these lands will repay every dollar that is necessary to reclaim them.

The terms, as I understand it, are about 15 years for the payment of the water costs, and I think under that provision they will be able to take care of it.

These lands without irrigation, as the Senator from Montana said, are practically worthless. If they are of the character of desert lands in my State that are irrigated they are absolutely worthless without irrigation, and the more sure the probability is of irrigation the more you can get for the lands before the water is put on. But without water, and without any insurance of water rights, the lands are worthless.

These lands were appraised, I judge, at a pretty reasonable value. That money will go into the Treasury, and, in my judgment, even though this may cost more than we expected, and more than we think it probably ought to cost, it seems to me we have gone too far now to draw back. We have spent a million and a half dollars, and there is not any chance of ever getting that back unless we furnish water and make it possible for men who have gone on the lands to make a living and pay it back. Then, if we should abandon this proposition we would work a very great injury to men who have gone in there innocently, and with a perfect right to assume that some day, at any rate, the Government would irrigate and reclaim the lands.

In my judgment, the Government of the United States can not afford to work such a hardship upon the individual because it may be afraid that it will lose a little bit of money. I doubt if it will lose any; but even if it should lose some it can better afford to lose it than the men who have gone on this land upon the inducement of the Government, who not only spent the money for the land itself, but who have put in valuable improvements which would be absolutely all lost and destroyed if the lands are not reclaimed.

There is the situation, and I think we ought to take care of it. I agree with the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas that the Indian funds should not be held as a guarantee for the money that we advance for the reclamation of this land. It is not fair; it is not just to the Indian, and we owe them something; but under section 14 of the law we passed I am inclined to think the department is justified in holding every dollar that goes in that fund for the reimbursement of any money that we may appropriate. So I would urge that we appropriate the money to carry on this project and put in a provision in our law that the Indian land which is irrigated belonging to the individual Indian shall pay its proportionate part of such cost, and that the land upon which a settler has located shall pay its proportionate part, and that we do not have the Indians guarantee that payment.

Mr. MYERS. That is just what we do.

Mr. JONES. I think that would be very easily covered by a provision something like we have in this same bill, put in by the House, in reference to the Yaquina Indian Reservation.

Mr. MYERS. That is just what the proposed legislation does.

Mr. JONES. I understand that, and I am sorry it was cut out; but I think possibly it might be done in a shorter way with a very simple provision. We ought to repeal that provision of the law which, in my judgment, really authorizes the department to hold all this fund and make it so that the Indian allottee shall be responsible for the cost of whatever water he gets for his land and the white settler shall be responsible for whatever water he gets for his land, and if anybody loses in the transaction it ought to be the Government of the United States instead of the Indians or the white settlers who have gone in there under the proposition as proposed by the law under which the land was reclaimed.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] how much the Indians receive as rental for this irrigated land?

Mr. MYERS. I could not answer that question now. The lands are leased on bids. They get whatever the bids may be.

Mr. LANE. The Senator may have an idea about it, how much an acre per year?

Mr. MYERS. No; I do not now recall.

Mr. LANE. There is one thing that must have attracted the attention of anyone who has listened to this argument, and I think it applies pretty generally down the line to the management of Indian affairs. According to the statement of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] the people who have gone upon these irrigated lands are in a bad state. They have had their confidence betrayed and they are hard up and starving and are an unfortunate people. The Senator made a pathetic appeal for them on that subject.

On the other hand, if you look around to the Indians and see the unfortunate aborigines you will find them in equally as desperate a condition. Millions of dollars are to be spent and mortgaged upon their property, and the Indians in many cases are haunting the rear ends of the residences of the white people searching for food out of the swill barrels, and humbly thankful and grateful to God for a good, fat swill barrel when he finds one of that kind and it is possible for him from its contents to select something to eat for himself and his children.

I have introduced a bill and I am going to use this argument as presented here to-day to aid its passage. It is a bill to free the Indian of all such bad management and get rid of a condition which has been going on for 60 years apparently with no improvement.

Now, there is another phase of this matter which has not been studied. These lands subject to irrigation are paid for by the white settlers at the rate of not to exceed $10 an acre, as near as I can ascertain. The most of them, I have been informed by the department, or representatives of the department, in the examinations we have had on the subject, probably go at an average price of, say, $4.50, $5, or $6 an acre.

The whites, on the other hand, claim that when the lands are under irrigation these identical lands will be worth a hundred dollars an acre and can be sold for that price. The commissioner, through his assistant, informed me they could be irrigated for about $30 an acre. Some one has since informed me that he has raised that figure.

The difference between the $4.50 or $10 an acre paid to the Indians for this land, plus the $30 or $40 an acre which it costs to put it under water, would leave a surplus of about $50 or $60 an acre, which does not go to the Indian. He does not get a dollar of that, not a penny of it. It goes to the white settler.

There is an injustice. If the lands are worth $100 an acre to the whites, who will pay for it only $35 to $45, the difference between that sum and $100 an acre should in justice go to the Indians and not to the white speculator, as it will under the present law. He is allotted about 80 acres of land. I will ask the Senator from Montana if that is correct?

Mr. MYERS. Of irrigable 80 acres and for nonirrigable 320 acres.

Mr. LANE. Eighty acres of irrigable land. It has been conceded by some one that unirrigated land is not worth a cent.

Mr. MYERS. No; I said not over $2 an acre.

Mr. LANE. The irrigable lands are the most valuable, but what happens? The Indian is allotted 80 acres of land. He has not a dollar to go out and spend upon the land, either to build a house, a barn, to buy a harrow or a plow or so much as a package of garden seed. He must go on it with bare hands. He has no capital. None of this surplus goes to set him up in business. It goes to the white man, and the Indian is left worse off than he was before it was made subject to reclamation and allotted to him, for then he could have gone out once in a while and killed a jack rabbit and ate it, or he could have killed a prairie chicken or a sage hen; but now he has not even that right left him. He is circumscribed, shut in on 80 acres, of which he can make no more use than he could out of a slice of the moon, for lack of money with which to improve it. He is unable to buy a bale of barbed wire to put a fence upon it, and it is expected that he shall show to the people of this country that when thrown upon his own resources he is equal to the white man and ought to become self-supporting. You might as well take him by the neck and drop him over the side of a ship in mid-ocean and tell him, "Here, there is good swimming and lots of it, and the water is full of fish." It is just about the same kind of a proposition. That is a part of the policy to which I object. They are a lot of poor, unfortunate, and helpless wards whom we have reached out for and grabbed by the scruff of the neck and then placed them under such conditions. The whole wretched business is a humbug and ought to be stopped.

I want to say to the Senators from Montana and to everyone else that if the Indian will not use his land and if the Indian can not use his land and the whites need it and must have it, let the whites have it; let them go and farm it. The Indians are not farmers. Those Indians were stockmen, and they are cut off even from raising stock. They have 320 acres of sagebrush land to raise stock upon. You can not do it. That does not pay; everyone who has ever tried it knows. If the whites need the land, let them have it; but, in the name of ordinary plain decency, let them pay the Indian its fair value for it. I do not see how a man who helps to continue the present condition can go out and look an ordinary burglar in the face without blushing. Let us get for the Indian what his land is worth and let him have a little of it to live upon.

It is a pitiable condition; it is a most miserable one. Here are those people with hundreds of thousands of acres of land, land that you can safely mortgage and raise $7,000,000 on, and many of them are eating, as I said before, the cast-out refuse of the white people who live in certain portions of Montana. We have a special appropriation in this bill, if my memory serves me correctly, to relieve them of a little of their distress. An Indian can do nothing with his 80 acres of land. The Indian will lose on it. There is no chance for him to make a cent anywhere out of the transaction.

From the representation made by the senior Senator from Montana that the white man is in fully as bad a condition, the whole thing ought to be thrown out in fairness to both, and it seems to me it would be doing an act of merciful kindness to let them both get out. But if we could get for the Indian some provision for his future, something which would even give him the bare hope of getting out whole some day, I would not object. The white man is a better farmer than the Indian. The Indian never has farmed. By the evidence of the Senator from Montana, and I know it to be true, he feels that even a large percentage of those men—a respectable percentage—in Idaho, Oregon, Montana, Arizona, California, and Nevada have failed under like conditions, and when an Indian who knows nothing of farming is forced to go up against that kind of a game he is sure to lose. That is what I object to.

There is another point. The Indian must pay for this irrigation $30, $40, $50 an acre, whatever it is. He must go on his 80 acres without a plow, without a harrow, without a horse, without garden seed, without a pick, a shovel, or a bale of barbed wire, and in 15 years pay back the cost of this irrigation and other expenses of establishing himself on the land, and no way on earth to get a cent of money with which to undertake the task. It is hopeless.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, just a minute. It is paid out of the tribal fund; that is, the Indian fund. He does not have to pay it.

Mr. LANE. Does he not have to pay a part of it?

Mr. MYERS. It is paid out of the tribal fund, whatever it may be.

Mr. LANE. He is one of the tribe and a part of the tribal funds belong to him. It is wrong.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I do not wish to do an injustice to the able Senators from Montana, nor do I wish to do an injustice to the settlers who have gone out West and are now occupying those lands. I believe that some legislation must be enacted. I believe that some relief should be given to those settlers who are now occupying these Indian lands. But I think it is a mistake not to change the present law and relieve the Indians from the responsibility of reimbursement, or, in other words, relieve the tribal funds from being convertible for the payment of this irrigation project after a large portion of the land has been sold to the white man.

The junior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], in reply to a question a moment ago, indicated that the Indian funds are not subject to or held in payment for this project. If the Senator will kindly give me his attention——

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. I read from the House hearings in 1914, page 183——

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to state to the Senator that the Senator from Kansas has signified to me that if this amendment were adopted he proposes to offer as additional amendments practically the whole of the amendment as it originally came before the Senate, and that will dispose of this whole matter. I will say for myself I shall be very glad to have the Senate adopt the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. I am very glad that some change will be made. My interest in the matter is to protect the Indian, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure of that.

Mr. GRONNA. But I wish to insert in the RECORD what the commissioner said in regard to this matter; and whatever disposition the Indian Office makes is final.

I quote:

The CHAIRMAN—

Speaking now of the Flathead Indian Agency—

Have they any money in the Treasury of their own?

Mr. MERITT—

Mr. Meritt is assistant commissioner, and, as we all know, a very able man—

They have some money in the Treasury, but it is largely hypothecated on account of work on irrigation projects.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it available for present use?

Mr. MERITT. No, sir.

Mr. President, I insist that the Indian money is being held for the purpose of repaying the Government of the United States for these irrigation ditches; and I am opposed to that. If anyone is to lose any money for these projects, then, sir, let the Government of the United States stand the loss and not these unfortunate Indians. I am in favor of an appropriation that will make it possible for the men who have gone out on these plains or these valleys to make their homes to get water and irrigate their lands; but, sir, I shall never submit to any proposition that will take this money out of the Indian fund and not out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from North Dakota pardon me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I wish to take a moment to announce the status of the bill. Within five minutes I expect to ask the Senate to lay aside the bill. I understand that the differences regarding this amendment have been composed. I was just wondering if we could dispose of the amendment before the hour of 2.30.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the able Senator from Arizona that I did intend to occupy the floor for a few minutes, but with the statement of the Senator I am perfectly willing to desist at any moment. I simply wanted to say what I have said, that I am friendly to any legislation that the Senators from Montana ask that will be in the interest of that great State and the people of that great State—the settlers who have gone on that domain—but it must not be done at the expense of the Indians.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think it would be better to let the whole matter go over until Monday. I should like to have a quorum here when this item is voted upon. I shall insist upon a vote upon each of the amendments, and I shall oppose each of the amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senator from North Dakota for having taken his time. I did not mean to take his time, but if the Senator does not wish to continue I will ask that the bill be laid aside. Does the Senator wish to continue?

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that I will make my speech at some other time, and I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying the bill temporarily aside? The Chair hears none, and it is laid aside.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE WITHERSPOON.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House on the death of Hon. SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON, late a Representative from the State of Mississippi, may be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions (H. Res. 157), as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions (S. Res. 151) and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of Mississippi.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended, in order that the Senate may pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States has set apart this hour to pay fitting tribute to the life, character, and achievements of one of the most excellent men and useful statesman that has occupied a seat in the House of Representatives since the formation of this Republic. In the sublimity of his character he is splendidly unique.

SAMUEL ANDREW WITHERSPOON, son of Dr. Elias Bourdenot Witherspoon and Mrs. Elizabeth Dowd Witherspoon, was born in Lowndes County, Miss., near the city of Columbus, May 4, 1855, and died at his home in Meridian on Wednesday, November 24, 1915. In his early youth he attended the common schools in the neighborhood in which he lived. His father died when he was quite young; after which his mother, who was in rather impecunious circumstances, in order that she might afford her children educational opportunities, with SAM and two younger brothers moved to Oxford, Miss., in 1872. Young WITHERSPOON entered the University of Mississippi as a student in the preparatory department in October, 1872, and was graduated with honors from that institution in June, 1876. After his graduation he was for a while assistant professor of Latin in the University of Mississippi, during which time he prosecuted his study of the law. In 1879 he moved to Meridian, Miss., where he resided until his death. By close application and intense intellectual effort he advanced rapidly in his profession and became one of the most accomplished lawyers at the bar of Mississippi. But the study of English and American law did not affect his mind as is sometimes the case with men who attain great prominence in that profession. He was never a slave to precedent, but his mind preserved its native originality, and the elasticity of his reasoning faculties were not hindered nor handicapped by what somebody else may have said, however great its antiquity.

With a delicate sense of justice and the power to make accurate discriminations, he approached every subject, and through all of his mental processes the end invariably sought was the truth. His mind never moved in a groove, but rather in the broad field of uncircumscribed research.

In 1910 he was elected from the fifth congressional district of Mississippi to the House of Representatives, and was serving his third term at the time of his untimely death. Mr. WITHERSPOON'S election to Congress in 1910 was due very largely to the peculiar political conditions which existed in the State of Mississippi at that time. It was the result of a campaign for civic righteousness and was an emphatic protest by the people of the State against conditions which had culminated in what appeared then to be, and which we now know to have been, a complete denial by those in authority of the right of the people to rule the State for the benefit of the people. The man and the occasion met, and he took up the work to which he was called with the ease that always characterizes the ordering of destiny.

His services in the House of Representatives were of short duration, but they were long enough to make a record that will live as long as heroism is a virtue; as long as independence of thought and intellectual honesty are regarded as attributes of real statesmanship in America; as long as fidelity to country, love of home, and adoration for God animate and glorify the human heart.

The majesty of his character consisted in the work he did, and the greatest ornament of his reputation was the dignity which characterized the doing. Though of modest demeanor and of a disposition to avoid all show and ostentatious display, his towering abilities attracted attention, and—

> As some tall cliff that lifts its awful form,
> Swells from the vale and midway leaves the storm,
> Though round its breast the rolling clouds are spread,
> Eternal sunshine settles on its head—

his name will live among the greatest and most useful men who have occupied seats in either House of Congress, and his fame will be cherished as a national asset.

I believe the most useful lessons are the lessons learned from other lives—from conduct and character. And I am also convinced that the real greatness of this Nation consists not in its unparalleled material riches, but rather in the moral qualities and intellectual acquirements of the men and women who compose its citizenship. Coming from a virile, rugged stock of clean-lived people, born and reared in the country, close to nature and to nature's God, with eyes trained to see things in their due proportions and ears attuned to hear the wise teachings of nature—by contact with men he became familiar with the wants, hopes, aspirations, and longings of the human heart, and his sympathy always went out to the silent toilers of the realm. His great heart was stirred to its profoundest depths by injuries wrought by unjust laws. He heard the howl of the wolf of Want at the door of Poverty, and from a distance the strains of music from the halls of mirth of the rich fell in melancholy cadences upon his sympathetic ears.

He was an omnivorous reader and broadly learned in the art of statesmanship, familiar with the forms of law, the history of peoples; he knew the causes that contributed to the building of great cities, the influences that wrought the civilizations, and the agencies which created the empires of the past; and he was also familiar with the influences that caused and brought about their disintegration and downfall and scattered the skeletons of bygone greatness upon the desolate shores of time.

A more splendidly equipped, superbly proportioned, patriotic character I have never known. He was gifted with a vision which enabled him to "dip into the future as far as human eye could see," and he saw the "visions of the world and all the wonders that would be." He possessed to as large degree as I have ever known that power which enables one to "hear the ocean in one shell" and see the "whole world's winter in one leaf." He was gifted with a rare power of speech, which often compelled men against their will. His logic was irresistible, as faultless and irrefragable as truth itself, and his devotion to the Constitution amounted to a religious zeal. When a question was presented to him he never sought for the popular or unpopular side—his only desire was to find the truth. If he determined that a certain course was the right course, he pursued it; his face was at once set in that direction, and no power beneath the stars, except the same cause that started him on his course, could make him change.

He was a Democrat after the strictest sect and devoted to his State. But above and beyond all, as high as the sun hangs above the earth, he was an American. I think the most beautiful trait of Mr. WITHERSPOON'S character was his devotion to the interests of the toiling masses. The great, silent, suffering, slow-thinking, toiling multitude, whose labor produces the wealth of the world—maintains its commerce in time of peace and fights its battles in time of war—these were the dearest objects of his heart's deepest solicitude.

He was brave and unyielding in his purpose. Like the "Hebrew children," who were threatened by the pagan king with death if they refused to bow to the golden god of infidelity, he answered the commands of predatory interests to bow to their behests by standing erect and declining to yield to any power or influence under the stars, save the truth. The fiery furnace of slander had no terrors for his heroic soul, and the detraction and vilification heaped upon him by the hired agents of the enemies of good government were brushed aside as inconsequential vaporings. The one god, the true god of duty, was the object of his adoration and the guiding star of his official course. He rather preferred to be right than popular. The approval of his own conscience and sense of justice were the end and object of his ambition.

I am reminded in this connection of an heroic incident of ancient history, which illustrates the habit of thought of Mr.

WITHERSPOON. It is said that when the Romans met the Volcians, Marcius inquired of Cominius in what manner the enemy's armies were drawn up and where their best troops were posted. Being told that the Antiates were placed in the center and were the bravest and most warlike, then Marcius replied, "I pray thee, place me immediately in front of them." Mr. President, that was always the request of SAMUEL ANDREW WITHERSPOON when fighting the battles of righteousness and defending the interests of the plain people of America, either in the Halls of Congress or on the field of politics. The furiousness of the conflict, the hardship of the campaign, did not concern him.

The more deadly the rain of shot and shell of misrepresentation, the fiercer the slander and detraction, the more truculent the opposition, the greater was his eagerness to be in the vortex of the contest. To do battle for the right was the consuming passion of his life. Armed with the truth, with an eloquence capable of charming the "wildest tempers" and moving to patriotic action the most sordid soul, absolute mastery of his subject, shielded with the armor of righteousness, and clothed with the consciousness of the rectitude of his own conduct and the unselfishness of his lofty purposes, these missiles of malignancy and hate fell harmless at his feet. From every conflict he emerged stronger with the people, more deeply intrenched in their love, and more highly exalted in their estimation than ever before.

I have seen him in the depths of pessimism, when the lowering cloud of doubt almost smothered his subdued soul, and then I have seen him come forth with an optimism as radiant as sunlight. Defeat gave him strength, and the righteousness of his cause always stimulated hope for the future of the Republic. He was—

One who never turned his back,
But marched breast forward;
Never doubted clouds would break;
Never dreamed though right were worsted wrong would triumph.
Held, we fall to rise, baffled to fight better;
Sleep to wake.

Pertinacity of purpose was one of the striking characteristics of his career. Really, it is the distinguishing difference between the truly great man, and the near-great man. Most men are capable of distinguishing between right and wrong—between the wise course and the unwise course—but very few men are willing to go the wise course if it happens to be unpopular or temporarily difficult of travel. Physical courage is a common attribute which belongs to the ordinary man as well as the lower animals, but moral courage is rare. And that is why all men admire it. Even the physically dauntless, moral coward, respects it. Mr. WITHERSPOON possessed that quality or attribute of character to a very large degree. He was in truth and in fact the sort of man described by Markham when he said:

Made of unpurchasable stuff,
He went the ways when ways were rough.
He, when the traitors had deceived,
Held the long purpose and believed.
He, when the face of God grew dim,
Held through the dark and trusted Him;
Braver soul that fought the mortal way
And felt that faith could not betray.

But like most men who live above the fog in conduct and speech, who refused to grovel with mere timeservers, he was misunderstood. Some people spoke of Mr. WITHERSPOON as a mere dreamer, an insubstantial idealist. He pleaded guilty to the charge; he was grateful for the compliment; and, to show his appreciation, he continued to dream, and from the coign of vantage of an uncommon soul he looked through the dim vista of the future and read the story of destiny. He realized that the man with a vision is the only safe leader, and that the vision itself is the one unfailing guide. He appreciated the fact that the practical man will clear away the forests, cultivate the lands, hold the offices, make money, and grow rich in the sordid things of life, but the dreamer is the protagonist, the pioneer who must blaze the way through the trackless wilderness. He was able to see himself in the perspective—to understand when he was right and, therefore, if he himself were misunderstood by others, he was willing to wait for the latest, best judgment.

He had a sustaining faith in the ultimate triumph of righteousness. He was intensely religious, but without bigotry. He knew by the witness of his own spirit that an "atheist laugh is a poor exchange for Deity offended," and when upon the rough sea of life, "tempest driven," with a "conscience but a canker," he realized that "a correspondence fixed with heaven is sure a noble anchor." He believed with all his heart that—

Out of the twilight of the past
We move to a diviner light,
For nothing that is wrong can last;
Nothing's immortal but the right.

There was more pleasure derived from the consciousness of duty well done than in the insincere applause which often accompanies ephemeral success. He would—

In spite of the stare of the wise and the world's derision,
Dare travel the star-blazed road, dare follow the vision.

He knew that it would—

Break like a hush on the soul in wonders of youth,
And the lyrical dream of the boy is the kingly truth.
The world is a vapor, and only the vision is real;
Yea, nothing will hold against hell but the winged ideal.

Flattery could not change his course. Defeat could not daunt him.

Tho' every leaf were a tongue to cry thou must,
He would not say the unjust thing was just.

Mr. President, I am a devout believer in the inspiration of the Scripture and the sovereign saving purpose of Christ's mission to earth. With all my heart I believe in the divinity of the Gallilean Carpenter. But I also believe in the divinity of every good man and woman who have lived and walked among men as the highest expression of God's love for "fallen humanity." To paraphrase the language of another:

We may all be saviours of the world if we believe in the divinity which dwells in us and worship it, and nail our grosser selves, our tempers, greeds, and unworthy aims upon the Cross, who giveth love to all, pays kindness for unkindness, smiles for frowns, and lends new courage to each fainting heart.

Never in the history of America was the need quite so great for men of Mr. WITHERSPOON's type as right now. The great issues which confront our people, and our manner of dealing with them, may be the crucial test of our capacity for self-government, our ability to preserve American institutions, and continue this Government for the people. Every national election in this country is a crisis in the life of the Republic. I believe that this time marks a turning point in the history of the Nation. The wave of hysteria, savored of blood lust, that is sweeping over the land seems to have destroyed the old landmarks and changed the viewpoint of men whose ability to guide the ship of state into the right channels has heretofore never been questioned. There is, I fear, a secret, silent, sinister influence affecting unconsciously the hearts and judgment of some of our bravest and best men.

Mr. WITHERSPOON's great ability would have served a noble purpose just now as an impregnable dike against the mad current of popular frenzy which runs through the present as an uncontrolled flood. Just why he should have been taken at the time he was is one of the mysterious dispensations of an All-Wise Providence. We can not understand.

Oh, why has worth so short a date?
While villains ripen grey with time,
Must thou, the noble, gen'rous, great,
Fall in bold manhood's hardy prime?

It is not ours to inquire why. But we know it is. In the hour of doubt, when question marks, like stars across the blue canopy of heaven, stand out before us, we can only wait. Our finite judgment tells us that his death was a national disaster; that his place can not be filled. He stood alone in the great work in which he was engaged. But in the darkness of doubt I am going to trust, I am going to draw inspiration from his life, which was to me a benediction. And it should be an inspiration, a beacon light to lead benighted men, blinded by selfish interests, into paths of rectitude and duty.

Such a life as his not only serves to mark the way to better living—a soul tonic to stimulate to higher endeavor—but it is also a rebuke to the timeserver, the sycophantic creature who would dishonor himself by "crooking the pregnant hinges of the knee that thrift might follow fawning." A truer, nobler, manlier man I have never had the honor and privilege of knowing. The world is better for him having lived in it. He contributed something to the stock of human goodness, and added to the sum total of human happiness—the highest accomplishment of all human effort. Peace to his sacred ashes and rest to his sublime soul.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am glad to have the opportunity to speak on this occasion, for the reason that I met Mr. WITHERSPOON under circumstances peculiarly qualified to give me an opportunity to know something of his real character. It was during the stormy days of 1904, 1905, 1906, 1907, when the cotton producers of the South revolted against the commercial system that had impoverished them, and was in a fair way to still further impoverish them and to perpetuate the disastrous conditions.

The Southern Cotton Association was organized for the purpose of stemming this tide of disaster. To organize for the purpose of protecting the weak and helpless producers against the greed and avarice of the unrestrained financial pirates, the call of the association was to every southern man who was willing to contribute what he might to the betterment of this intolerable condition. No vocation or avocation, profession or calling, was barred from membership in this organization. A great majority, of course, who joined were farmers. They were the actual, or, more properly speaking, the principal, sufferers. Quite a number of merchants joined, not so large a number of bankers, and a few lawyers. There was not so great incentive for the merchants to join as the farmers, though the merchants were indirectly dependent upon the products of the farmers' crops, the bankers to a degree dependent, and the lawyers to a very much lesser degree, if really dependent at all. Thus the lawyers who came to our relief, who rendered the service of their time and brain and money, did it, perhaps, with a more unselfish and patriotic purpose than any other members of the organization. Among these was Mr. WITHERSPOON.

As an official of the national organization, I came into close contact with him more or less during a period of three or four years.

Mr. WITHERSPOON was unquestionably a Democrat in the real meaning of that term. He was so constituted that I do not believe he could have enjoyed wealth and leisure and luxury while the masses of his fellow men were suffering the privations of poverty and its attendant burdens. He realized that the proper adjustment of our laws, both financial and commercial, would be to give to everyone, under the law, an equal opportunity. He knew, as all of us know, that men are not equally endowed with power to seize and improve opportunity; but he knew that the function of law in a democratic government should furnish like opportunity to all and place the burden of failure upon him who was either incapable of seizing and improving the opportunity or who squandered or neglected it.

We are often unfair and unjust in our criticisms of a fellow man, because we have not taken the pains to know his viewpoint, to study the problems that have been thrust upon him, and to realize with him the things necessary to their solution. Mr. WITHERSPOON realized the burdens and limitations placed upon the impoverished farmers of the South. He realized the acuteness of their suffering—a proud people, the purest Anglo-Saxon blood in America, the highest ideals, the last expression in virtue, chivalry, and bravery; victims of a conflict that had stripped them of the opportunity of realizing the circumstances they were so splendidly qualified to enjoy.

He was impatient and intolerable of any compromise of the rights of the masses of the people. He believed, and fearlessly spoke the belief, that those who produced the wealth of the country were entitled to have such legislation as to guarantee them the enjoyment of a legitimate percentage of the wealth they produced. Both as a member of the great southern organization and of the Federal Congress, he never abated one jot or tittle his zeal for his people, and in his death the South has lost a valient officer in her army of patriots.

In every great reform, in every human conflict, opportunity is given to test and to know the real value of the individual. The tragic experience of the South from 1860 until now have given peculiar opportunity to know the real value of the American's character. Mr. WITHERSPOON met the test and proved his worth.

When a man dies there seems to be but an eddy in the current, a moment's pause, and then the steady stream of human events flows on seemingly undisturbed and unaffected. But the influence of that life, its contributions to the solution of human problems, are borne upon the tide of events and are forever factors in the progress and uplift of the race.

I am glad of this opportunity to hear this testimony to the memory of SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON, to pay this tribute to his worth and character. In the vale of his character alone and the work he did, he has left a heritage to his family and loved ones that can never be measured in terms of silver and gold.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my acquaintance with Judge WITHERSPOON was somewhat brief. It had its beginning in the year 1913. We came into occasional contact only, but as time progressed our acquaintance ripened into friendship, and I am sure that if he had been spared we would have become intimate associates. His capacity, his convictions, and his views of public life were so completely in accord with my own that I was naturally attracted to him from the outset.

It so happened that in the month of February, 1913, I went to the other end of the Capitol upon an unimportant business errand. Upon entering the Chamber of the House of Representatives I noticed a group of interested and enthusiastic Members surrounding a gentleman who was engaged in the discussion of the naval bill of that winter. I joined the group and soon became enthralled with the absolute familiarity exhibited by the speaker, who was Judge WITHERSPOON, with every fact and every detail not only of the American Navy but of all the navies of the world. With a facility that bordered upon the marvelous, he discussed the number and caliber of guns, the complements of officers and of men, the vessels of our own and of other navies, making comparisons between and drawing contrasts concerning them with the ease and perfection of a master. I have heard many discussions, Mr. President, but never have I heard one proceeding from a man so thoroughly familiar with the subject to which his address related. Upon the close of that argument I requested an introduction, and that was the occasion of my meeting Judge WITHERSPOON.

It was said by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] a moment ago that the death of this most useful and well-informed public official at this time was a great misfortune. When I learned of his death that was the first thought that obtruded itself upon my mind, and I could not but contemplate the fact that in so many instances men are removed from their spheres of action in the very midst of usefulness and of need. I wonder, and have often wondered, why this should be so. It may be that, in the providence of God, the subsequent developments of time might operate to impair, if not to destroy, the splendid prestige which had reached or was approaching its meridian, and that, for reasons which will be in the great future disclosed to us, it were better that it should be so. But our poor human judgment protests against such conditions and fain would change them if it could.

Mr. President, the rarest manifestation of genius in this country is that which concerns itself with details, with the various facts and circumstances which underlie great propositions and great movements. It is, to my mind, the most useful because it is the most practical of all forms of genius; and it is genius, Mr. President, not only because of its rarity, but because of that peculiar mental structure the possession of which is essential to its exercise and development.

I venture to say that in the Congress of the United States to-day there are not 50 men capable of applying themselves to and mastering the homely, commonplace details of those great subjects and propositions with which we are called upon to deal, and thus become competent for the appropriate discharge of the duties devolved upon them. We differ in this respect from the Germans and the Japanese, where the prosaic, everyday, matter-of-fact affairs of life seem to appeal to the average intellect, in consequence of which the marvelous material progress of those two peoples has so long been manifest. When this country finds itself in possession of a public servant who has the will and the power, the industry and the inclination, to acquaint himself slowly, painfully, but thoroughly with every fact and every element affecting the subject matter to which for the time being he has devoted himself, his loss is a great public calamity.

I know of no man—although the occasion always produces the man—who is capable of filling the void made by the death of Judge WITHERSPOON. We are living, Mr. President, in parlous times. With the exception of the United States of America, every great nation in the world is engaged in a conflict which has no parallel in the history of civilization. We can no more escape the contagion of its influences than we can avoid the law of gravitation. Those influences manifest themselves in many ways, not the least of which is in the development of that hysteria which sees an armed enemy upon every coastline, and entertains visions of wars and rumors of wars which distract the judgment and unsettle the reason. At such times we are prone to magnify our dangers, and to rush into various schemes of protective legislation, some of which may be essential, but all of which may be condemned by the reflections of our more sober judgment. Hence, it was a sad day when, under circumstances like these, the Nation was deprived of the services of this great and most useful statesman, whose accumulated wisdom gave influence to his counsel and strength to his suggestions.

Judge WITHERSPOON's conceptions of duty were those prescribed by Edmund Burke, who said that every sense of public duty must be based upon a consciousness of public responsibility. He knew the responsibilities of his position; he observed those responsibilites, and was, therefore, animated by a sense of duty which, stimulated by the spirit of unquenchable industry, made him at all times an authority upon those subjects which fell to him and belonged to his peculiar province of legislation.

This man honored his people as their representative. They can not pay him too much honor by mourning at his bier.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, it is unfortunately but too often that this life at the Capitol of the Nation, so full of moving events, finds itself impelled to halt from its busy activities to pay tribute to a departed colleague and friend. This is one of these occasions. Perhaps it is mete that this halt should take place, that the mind of the Members should turn from the public business and the grind of details, incident to the life of a legislator, to commune within itself and to take its bearings upon the circumstances of the coming and the going of those forming this important branch of our democratic Government.

We are too busy from day to day to mark attention to anything beyond the excitement of contending sides, in their several efforts to enact or defeat proposed legislation. But for these halts unfortunate as are the causes which command them, deeply as we grieve over these causes, much as we mourn those who depart from our very midst to the eternal borne, yet when they occur, they furnish a wholesome lesson. They bring forcibly to our mind the destiny of all living things which our activities in this Capitol would otherwise cause us to entirely forget. They remind us of the uncertainty of life, of the necessity for that preparedness which is as essential to the soul, that it may live eternally, as nourishment is to the body, that it may escape early dissolution.

We have suspended the transaction of important business of the highest order to pay tribute to the memory of SAMUEL ANDREW WITHERSPOON, of the State of Mississippi, whose death occurred during the pending session.

SAMUEL ANDREW WITHERSPOON was born at Columbus, Miss., on the 4th day of May, 1855. The death of his father, when he was but a youth, left him to the tender care of a loving mother, who, besides him, had other children whose welfare she must look after. She must have been a self-sacrificing as well as a loving mother, for in 1872, when SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON had matured into young manhood, she realized the necessity of preparing him, so far as she could, for the exigencies of life. A proper education clearly was the first thing she thought of, and as an institution for higher learning was not in existence at her home, she that year moved to Oxford, Miss., so as to permit her son to enter the State University. SAMUEL WITHERSPOON graduated from that university, taking the degree of B. A. and subsequently, further pursuing his studies, took the degrees of M. A. and LL. D.

His education completed, and armed with authority to practice law, which his last diploma granted him, he cast about to find a location where there was prospect of advancement in his chosen profession. His eyes, scanning the many available places in Mississippi, selected Meridian as the proper field, and in 1879 he moved to that splendid little city. It did not require a long residence at Meridian for this ambitious young man, so well equipped under the loving guidance of a devoted mother, to build himself a position both socially and professionally. He was a good lawyer, lucid, logical, and forcible. I shall not speak much of this, because I did not have the pleasure of his personal acquaintance during the years to which I refer, and know of him during this period of his life only through hearsay. From my acquaintance with him, however, during the time when together we served in the House of Representatives, I can easily conceive of his power as an advocate in any branch of the law to which he directed himself. For he was possessed to a marked degree not only with the qualities which I have just described but he was one of the few really eloquent men that it has been my pleasure to listen to.

I first became acquainted with SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON in 1910, shortly after his election, and on the day on which he was sworn in as a Member of the House, to which body I then belonged. I served with him for two full terms and continued my acquaintance with him after having become a Member of the Senate. I soon learned to like him and then to admire him. I liked him because he was a scholarly man, kind, considerate, and of as lovable a character as can be said of any man. He was honorable to the utmost and in the extreme faithful and loyal to principle. But he did his own thinking, accepted orders from no one, was always willing to discuss the belief which he had in him, and was open to conviction, if facts could be produced to overcome any erroneous conclusions which he might have reached. But he was tenacious of his conclusions, and it required facts and logic to compel his attention and change his conclusion.

He was a Democrat in the broadest sense of the term, and when I use that expression I do not mean to say that he was a man who was a Democrat exclusively because of his regularity to a party's action, but a Democrat who could give a reason for his democracy, and doing so he was not easily moved to take a position purely upon assertions. It required that the matter at issue mensured up to a principle of democratic ideal.

His intellectual honesty was not less developed than his personal honesty. I can best illustrate that which I wish to convey with regard to that splendid trait of the character of SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON by calling attention to the fact that as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, believing, as he did, that a democracy does not rest upon the power of might but upon the principle of right, he was immovable from his purpose to hold down governmental expenditures to the smallest amount commensurate with his conception of the safety of the country. True, I did not agree with him upon that question, since in applying this principle he invariably voted for insufficient sums to meet the governmental needs, but I none the less admired the intellectual honesty of the man who could neither be cajoled nor threatened to abandon those convictions which to him, student of our form of government, as he was, appeared to rest upon unassailable conclusions.

I said that his intellectual honesty was as marked as was his personal honesty, and I can illustrate the thought which I had in mind with regard to the latter quality of SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON by calling attention to the fact that on entering upon the performance of his duties as a Representative, his first thought was to acquaint himself with the legal obligations, the legal powers, and the legal restrictions placed by the law upon the position he assumed. Investigation revealed to him the fact that there was a law on the statute books requiring that the absence of a Member of Congress from attendance upon the House on days of session without a legal reason deprived the Member of pay for that day's absence. This law has long been on the statute books, but is seldom applied. I even doubt, but for the fact that occasional resolutions are adopted in moments of emergency when public business is likely to suffer because of large numbers of absentees and a resolution is adopted directing the enforcement of this law, that Members of Congress generally are acquainted with this statute.

The fact that a resolution has to be adopted at times would indicate how dead that law would seem to be. I recall that at one time a great many Members were absent from the House attending to political campaigns in their various localities. It was hard to keep a quorum and the public business was threatened with suspension. Senator UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, was at the time the Democratic leader on the floor of the House, and, in order to insure the attendance of a quorum that the public business might be transacted, a resolution was introduced by him and adopted by the House requiring the Sergeant at Arms to withhold pay of absentees for days of absence while the House was in session. With the enforcement of this resolution, inquiry was made about the matter, and for the first time the membership of that House learned that SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON had religiously docked himself for every day's absence, when not on official business, from his very admission as a Member of the House of Representatives.

This incident describes the man's character better than anything that can be said. He followed the law, obeyed it in every respect, and never questioned others about him who looked upon it as a dead law. His personal integrity compelled him to obey the law regardless of the course of his neighbors concerning the same law.

It is a great pity that traits of character such as SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON possessed are not more universally prevalent. But there remains of such virtues the example which such conduct always compels for the guidance of surviving humanity, so that even after death these virtues serve their useful purpose. They enlighten and encourage those who remain behind to emulate them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, perhaps it is sufficient praise of the late Representative WITHERSPOON to say that he was worthy of the traditions of Mississippi. In the formative period of our growth, when government under the Constitution was in its experimental stage, Mississippi, although one of the newer States, wielded a powerful influence in the councils of the Nation. In her earlier days, in the first flush of the prosperity which the opening of her fertile lands produced, there were congregated in her borders bold and aggressive leaders. They adapted themselves to the spirit of the times and the conditions of a new State. Physical courage, enterprise, and energy were in the ascendant. Among her leaders, however, were men of brilliant intellect who have left their names in the annals of the law and of the Government. It would be invidious to name any of them without naming them all, and I will not undertake it upon this occasion. The State became a leader in all the issues of those times.

In the heroic days of the Civil War, when she constituted one of the brilliant galaxy of States which sought to establish an independent government of their own, she was alike distinguished. From the poverty and ruin of that war Mississippi gradually arose, weakened it is true, but with her spirit unimpaired. Patiently and courageously she reestablished her institutions. Her courts have been distinguished for their learning and ability. Her schools, colleges, and churches have preserved the best educational and spiritual standards of the land.

It was inevitable that the man who achieved great and permanent distinction in such a State and among such a people should possess exceptional merit. It was a great compliment to Mr. WITHERSPOON that, though the people who had chosen him from among all their sons to represent them in the councils of the National Parliament may have differed with him at times upon specific questions, yet such was their confidence in the purity of his character and in the general soundness of his judgment that at the time of his death there was no indication that he might not have remained in honorable public life for an indefinite period.

I had no special opportunity or reason to form the acquaintance of Representative WITHERSPOON, but his activities attracted attention, and I knew him well. The demands and exactions of congressional duties are such that many of us here in different Chambers of this Congress collaborate for years together upon the legislation of the country without becoming personally acquainted, and with little or no opportunity for individual personal and social intercourse.

Very shortly, however, after Representative WITHERSPOON's appearance in the House of Representatives his exceptional qualities of mind and character had so impressed themselves upon his associates that he became a man of marked distinction, even among the many distinguished men who sat with him in that Chamber. He very soon became a leader in the particular fields which he had chosen. In some positions which he took upon the difficult problems of the day I reached a conclusion entirely at variance with his, and yet such was his evident singleness of purpose, his love of justice, his tremendous thoroughness in what he undertook, that I formed a friendship and admiration for him.

I can not undertake with the limited opportunities I have had to give a complete analysis of his character, but I had many personal interviews with him, and deem it an honor and privilege on this occasion to pay a tribute to a man who I verily believe never had a thought in his public service but the public good; who loved justice and hated unfairness and oppression; who did his work thoroughly and well.

In the warfare of modern congressional life WITHERSPOON was a knight without fear and without reproach. He served his country well and left a stainless name.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, during the last 15 years the Congress has numbered among its membership no one more courageous in his official conduct or more decisive and independent in his views than the Hon. SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON, late a Representative from Mississippi.

There is a tendency to develop a spirit of indecision concerning public questions among Members which sometimes approaches insincerity, and which too often is destructive of that firmness which should characterize our convictions.

It is, of course, proper and desirable that legislators should be informed as to the views of their constituents. It is also true that due consideration should be given to public sentiment concerning all questions with which we are called upon to deal. It is right that elective officers should take counsel of those who choose them. We may differ as to whether and when a Representative should waive his own convictions or conform them to the sentiment of the people whom he represents. No one can doubt that all important legislative reforms either originate with the people or find momentum among them. One of the greatest impediments to the proper discharge of legislative duties is found in the abuse of this principle. The practice now frequently pursued by unscrupulous or unselfish interests of manufacturing or misrepresenting public sentiment to coerce or influence the conduct of officers is subversive of the true representative spirit, but it is, nevertheless, quite potent and often successful. Taking advantage of the power of public sentiment, unfair agitation is often conducted, and by means of inaccurate and one-sided information widely distributed the real public sentiment on an issue may be clouded and obscured, to the detriment of interests which in justice should be promoted and conserved. We all know how often stereotyped letters are devised for the purpose of having them signed by our constituents, who thus appear to assert an opinion which, in fact, they may not hold, but which, to oblige another, they may thus express. Prompted or inspired communications of this nature have little value in assisting the legislator to arrive at a correct conclusion. On the contrary, they are misleading and confusing. Sometimes a Congressman who has announced his position on a public question is besieged to change or modify it by appeals or threats from his constituents, who are induced to address him from no consideration of the public interest but through the activities of designing persons and organizations, whose ends and aims may deserve severest censure.

An executive officer is not charged with discretion in the enforcement of the law. His task is comparatively simple. The same is true in a different sense of a judicial officer. He sometimes finds great difficulty in determining what is meant by the law in a given case, but whatever he finds it to be he must declare it. The legislator, however, is concerned primarily with questions of policy and may rightly take into consideration the uncorrupted sentiment of the public concerning any measure presented. Few Congressmen are indifferent to public sentiment when fairly formed and expressed, and all are anxious to maintain the respect and confidence of the people whom they serve.

The late SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON, a Representative in Congress from the State of Mississippi, was in many respects an unusual and interesting man. The dominant trait in his character was independence of thought and loyalty to his convictions of public duty. He exercised his best conscience and judgment in determining the merits or demerits of a measure, and when he reached a conclusion promptly and frankly announced his attitude. No influence could shake him. Of all the men whom I have known in public and in private life, he was the most decisive in his views on public issues. Mr. WITHERSPOON rarely hesitated and never vascillated. He was cautious and deliberate in the study of a problem, but when he reached a solution he never doubted its correctness, and maintained it without apology.

Many Congressmen experience great anxiety and worry over their attitude on public questions, even when they have done their best to promote the right. Mr. WITHERSPOON never feared to meet any issue presented, and once having taken his stand, felt no fear of disapproval by others and yielded to no influence however great which sought to move him. He advanced aggressively to every legislative combat, strengthened and sustained by the conviction that his cause was just.

This attribute of true greatness, the ability to know his own mind, and to be true to it, was his most distinguished characteristic. Enjoying the advantages of a comprehensive education, trained in forensic contests by 30 years' experience at the bar, his services in the House of Representatives were of recognized and permanent value. Mr. WITHERSPOON engaged in many sharp contests and in some bitter controversies. He emerged from them all with the unqualified respect of his adversaries. However his associates in Congress may have differed from him on public questions, not one doubted his sincerity or questioned his ability. It is inspiring to contemplate the career of a man devoted always to his duty, fearless always of opposition. It is not a mere eulogy to ascribe to him unyielding loyalty to his conscientious convictions. We need not invoke the license which custom grants when men pay tribute to their departed friends. Mr. WITHERSPOON earned this tribute. He enjoyed this reputation while living. His acquaintances universally ascribe to his memory the honor and the devotion which courage and determination alone command. In the annoyances and uncertainties of political life which at times must be experieced, the will to do right in defiance of the powers that some times make us hesitate, may be an unfailing source of strength and happiness.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the grave is a great equalizer and silencer, not only of social and other differences of station but of all human passions and human feelings. In its presence everything else sinks into insignificance. Men are no longer Democrats, or Republicans, or Presbyterians, or Catholics, or Frenchmen, or Germans, or Christian, or Jew; they are simply men, and men who have passed away. By its open portal all old acts of friendship are revived and remembered and emphasized; all old enmities are annihilated in the minds and hearts of all gentlemen.

Upon this occasion I recall my first race for Congress in the State of Mississippi in 1892, now a generation ago, and I recall that among the useful and efficient friends who then advocated my cause, who then strove to advance it and imposed upon me a debt of gratitude, gladly recognized, was SAMUEL ANDREW WITHERSPOON, of Lauderdale County, Miss. Both of us at that time were young men; he was born on May 4, 1855, and I less than a year previously.

I recall with particular appreciation a speech made by him at a banquet given in the city of Meridian, in which he paid me undeserved but much appreciated compliment. In all my association with him, though we had differences of opinion later, I never forgot that occasion or the kind and entirely too partial words which there flowed from his lips.

There is a philosophy of life which takes in "a contemplation of death." I am, in my humble way, a disciple of that philosophy. Its central point is to remember pleasant traits about others and pleasant points of contact between one's self and other people.

Mr. WITHERSPOON was a man far above the average in learning, breeding, and intellectual attainments and in liberal culture. He graduated from the University of Mississippi in 1876. The faculty showed its recognition of his scholarship by making him a tutor in Latin there for three years afterwards. Having earned the degree of A. B., the degrees of A. M. and LL. D. were subsequently conferred upon him by that institution, which has given to Mississippi and to the United States so many men of whom Mississippi is proud.

There is something better in the world, however, than educational equipment and mental culture, and that is personal and intellectual integrity. Mr. WITHERSPOON possessed it. However much one might differ from him about questions of public policy, nobody, I think, ever doubted his sincerity or his personal honesty and courage of conviction. He was a good husband, a good brother, and a good father. Much more than that can not remain to be said of any man.

I have always regretted very much that I was not able to attend his funeral, in the city of Meridian, when he died. I live out in the country, and the news came too late for me to make the railway station in time to be there. I especially regretted it because he had disapproved of some of my public conduct and opinion, and I wanted his wife and his children and his kinspeople, and him himself, in the other world, to know that, so far as I was concerned, all differences were buried in his grave, and that so far as I was concerned no real enmity had ever existed in my heart.

Mississippi has adorned the pages of American history with some men of great intellectual force and eloquence. She has seldom disgraced those pages by sending to either House of the Congress of the United States or to the Cabinet or to the field of battle any man who was not honest and brave and true and loyal to the best traditions and to the loftiest ideals of the American Republic. I do not think that those who stood against the opinions advocated by Mr. WITHERSPOON would or could say that he had ever been otherwise than honest, personally and intellectually, and true to his conception of what constituted the best traditions and ideals of his country.

The name is an old one. It was borne by one who signed the Declaration of Independence and by one who was a Member of the Continental Congress. The name was not dishonored by SAMUEL A. WITHERSPOON during his lifetime, but was worn in honor.

Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 27, 1916, at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the immigration bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10384, the immigration bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, although I have but a few minutes at my disposal, I wish to pay some attention to the address of the distinguished Representative from the State of New York [Mr. BENNET] delivered on this floor some days ago. And in referring to that address I will repeat and adopt as my own the words of the New York Representative then used as follows:

And before I vote to keep a Hebrew or a Catholic out of this country on account of his religion I will resign my seat in this House, much as I value it.

And I sincerely trust, Mr. Chairman, that this sentiment is concurred in by every Member of this House of Representatives.

For myself I desire to state frankly and forcefully that I have no sympathy with the spirit of religious intolerance that has been so rampant throughout our land in recent years. Frequently we find important political contests waged on the narrow issue of religious antagonism, to the detriment of the communities where such contests occur, and it is to be regretted that this issue has been thrust into the debate of an important measure before this great lawmaking body. Such a spirit is in direct opposition to the American principle of religious liberty founded by Roger Williams in Rhode Island, adopted by William Penn in Pennsylvania, encouraged by Lord Baltimore in Maryland, and now permeating the institutions of our common country. [Applause.]

I am therefore in full and hearty accord with my friend from New York, in so far as the principle of religious liberty is concerned, and likewise in agreement with another New Yorker, the great Chancellor Kent, who in his treatise on American law, after reference to the so-called absolute rights of man as laid down by Blackstone, namely, personal security, personal liberty, and private property, continues in these words:

> The free exercise and enjoyment of religious worship may be considered as one of the absolute rights of individuals, recognized in our American Constitutions, and secured to them by law.

And this principle, in my judgment, is so firmly established in our institutions that when some of the other so-called but rapidly vanishing absolute rights have been materially lessened in importance as a result of present-day legislation, this right of religious freedom shall remain intrenched as a sacred if not an absolute right of an American citizen.

But while agreeing with my good friend and very desirable Member of this House, in so far as this principle is concerned, unlike him I am in favor of this bill. I remind the gentleman and the Members of this House that the Republican national platform of 1896, on which William McKinley was elected President, contained a provision demanding that the immigration laws be thoroughly enforced and so extended as to exclude from entrance to the United States those who could neither read nor write. This action on the part of the delegates to the convention could not have been based on information obtained later than 1895, and in that year the number of immigrants to this country from Europe amounted to 271,000 and more than 50 per cent of these came from Germany, the United Kingdom, Norway, and Sweden alone, so that the religious issue could not then have been involved.

I am in receipt of numerous letters, petitions, and resolutions from local labor organizations favoring this bill, signed in many instances, to my personal knowledge, by good and true Catholics, and I will not have it said on this floor without entering an emphatic denial that the religious question is involved in the consideration of this measure. Certainly it is not in so far as I am concerned, nor do I believe that it has any influence on any other Member of this body. Not only am I free from any feeling of religious antagonism but also from any racial antagonism, considering myself a child of the one great God and able freely and without restraint to extend the right hand of fellowship to the newcomer to our shores regardless of the country from which he comes or the religion which he professes.

The gentleman sought to strengthen his position by reference to a conversation with a representative of the Junior Order United American Mechanics, giving the impression—I think I correctly state his attitude—that the order referred to was favorable to the bill on religious grounds, and yet in that same conversation he tells us that the same representative of the order informed him that they had been fighting immigration for a period of 60 years. If this be true, then surely their opposition is not based on religious grounds, for I have already shown by reference to statistics as recently as 1895 that it has only been within comparatively recent years that the bulk of European immigration has been Catholic, and therefore the attitude of the Junior Order United American Mechanics being consistent with its position of former years can not be said to rest on any religious opposition.

Now, a word as to the merits of the measure. In these days, when our States have enacted compulsory education laws and child-labor laws, and this body, as recently as the present session, not only encouraging but seeking to force these laws on unwilling States by excluding certain child-made goods from interstate commerce, all of which has been done with a view to fitting the rising generation for the duties and responsibilities of a higher citizenship, and done in many cases at great cost and sacrifice to poor families, and especially to widowed mothers, it is but right and just and fair to say to those from without who seek the superior advantages of this country that they should at least put forth sufficient effort to meet the limited requirements of this bill.

Of course this is a departure from the established policy of this Nation, but it is not the only departure of recent times from the ways and methods of the fathers. Oh, that was a grand speech by a grand old man delivered in this House yesterday [applause], but conditions have changed in recent years and these changed conditions demand new laws. Who 20 years ago would have proposed in this House such taxation laws as are now enforced? Who would have advocated such pronounced Federalism as is now practiced by the professed followers of Thomas Jefferson? Who would have strenuously championed a national prohibition amendment? Who would have seriously advocated universal suffrage? Yet these things are being done and they demonstrate how far and how fast we are traveling from the ancient landmarks. Possibly we have reached a point at which we might well pause before traveling farther from tried principles of representative government; but I can not discuss this problem now.

Let me impress you with the fact that we are confronted with vastly different conditions that require some change in our position. A short time since we looked upon Europe with comparative indifference as she grappled with her great social problems, as we felt her problems could never be ours. But to-day we are not only face to face with those social problems but are fast being carried into European militarism, from which God grant we may be spared. [Applause.] It was Carlyle who said, in effect, I do not pretend to quote his exact language: You may talk of your America and the prosperity you enjoy, but the secret of your success is that you have a great deal of land for a very few people. Density of population has brought its problems to our doors, and to solve them prudence coupled with wisdom must be applied. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time—11 minutes—to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I hold that the justification of any legislation, of whatever character, must be found in a better citizenship. I do not believe that if we analyzed legislation we would find ourselves justified in passing any law, no matter what be its character, unless we could base it upon a civil reason, and that civil reason is to secure a higher grade of citizenship. If we look at this problem from that standpoint, I think we will find that our legislation on the immigration question in the past has been put upon that basis. There is a review in section 3 of the legislation on this question, and I find certain elements here. One is exclusive, another is restrictive, and another is selective. All of these elements have been employed in the past. We excluded the Chinese, we excluded the Japanese as far as treaty relations would allow us to do it; and I want to say right here and now that I would not vote for any measure of exclusion which I felt violated a treaty until the treaty was modified. This bill has an exclusive feature also with respect to the Hindu. I think that we are justified, Members of the House, on various grounds in enacting exclusive legislation. As a student of the future possibility of China, with a population of 425,000,000, with a possibility, as stated by men who know, that when China awakens what Japan has done in 50 years will be better done and more easily done by China, I think that the possibility of coming into competition industrially with that tremendous Empire is a most serious problem which every man must take into consideration in legislating. For that, as one reason, I think exclusive legislation is justifiable. Legislation has been also restrictive, and it is restrictive in this bill. Here is a restriction upon the mentally unsound, a restriction upon the physically defective, a restriction upon the morally delinquent, a restriction on the industrially vicious—those who will inevitably become a public charge upon the Government. I refer now to the beggars, to the vagrants, to the people with no standards of living, those who would come into industrial competition with our people, who could live upon what would starve an American. Our standard of living as we now strive to maintain it will be sustained only by such legislation. I think that admission to our shores of such peoples is industrially vicious, and for that reason I believe restrictive legislation in that respect is justified. There is also a restriction against the governmentally vicious, the anarchistic elements, those who are forcibly and organically and in organizations opposed to organized law and even government.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not that already in the law?

Mr. FESS. Yes. I am speaking of the past legislation, I would say to the gentleman. I am speaking of what we have already enacted into law. In other words, we have had legislation that is exclusive, also legislation that is restrictive, and now I desire to pass on to what this legislation means to be in addition to what we have had in the past.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. While the gentleman said correctly that our laws now prohibit anarchists from coming to this country, he admits, does he not, that in the law as at present there is nothing which excludes those who practice sabotage, a condition which we seek to write into the law through the bill under consideration?

Mr. FESS. Yes. In other words, this law is supplementary to what we have already. This proposed law is not so restrictive in its purpose as it is selective. I would not be so unkind as to say that those who are opposing this bill would oppose all legislation that looks to restriction. That would not be fair to many Members. However, that statement is fair with reference to some Members who have spoken upon this bill. There are those who believe absolutely that any restrictive legislation is wrong; and one of the Members, speaking from his place yesterday, said that the purpose of this bill is the restriction of immigration, as if that were an argument against it. As I say, the general principle opposing this bill emanates from those who believe, as I think, that it is a mistake to make any limitations. There is where I differ from my friends. I think that this bill, which is selective rather than exclusive or restrictive, but which looks to a better class of immigrants, is absolutely justified, not only by what we have done in the past but by present demands and by what we must see are the demands in the near future. My reasons are these: This bill is initiated for the specific purpose of making a better citizenship—the purpose of all legislation. It is not intended to exclude those who will add in any measure to the importance and to the value of our citizenship.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think the power to read a few words in any tongue or write those words will add anything to the test of the qualifications of the man—morally, physically, or mentally.

Mr. FESS. I believe, frankly stated, that a mere ability to read 30 words is not a real and conclusive test. I would not for a minute say that it is, but I do believe that those who can not read 30 words and who have not energy enough to learn to read 30 words are not desirable, and I do believe that those anywhere in Europe who can not now read the 30 words but who have energy to learn to read have more promise for our citizenship when they come than the one who can not do it, and for that reason I will vote for the literacy test, believing it is a suggestion of the ability to be a more useful citizen because of ability and energy to learn.

The literacy test will probably start many evening schools to relieve the limitation provided by this law. Against that class of foreign individuals this literacy test will not be final.

Mr. MADDEN. How many citizens on this floor does the gentleman think would be here if their antecedents were required to be able to read and write before being admitted to America?

Mr. FESS. I know that Members of this House might say that I probably may be ungrateful when I say to you a thing I did not suppose I would ever say publicly, that my mother, in the shadows of the evening of life, living in her home in Lima, never went to school a day in her life, can neither read nor write, and while my mother did not want her children denied the opportunity denied her, because she lived in a community in which there was no school, she would not desire me to stand on this floor and say that that is the reason or a reason why we should not have a better citizenship. [Applause.] On the other hand, my mother said to me: "I can not have the advantage of schools, but there is one thing that I will work my finger nails off for, and that is that my children shall have the opportunity to learn to read." [Applause.]

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. BENNET. Is the gentleman aware that the very praiseworthy attitude on his part toward his mother, which we all admire, expresses the attitude of the foreign-born parents who insist on education for their children in this country?

Mr. FESS. I cheerfully admit it. I do not think there is anything that gives greater pride than to see in your city the great ranks of foreigners waiting on the morning when the schools are to be opened to see whether their children are going to get in the schools and not be excluded; but they would not say that education is not a real value, as we have so often heard since this debate has opened. On the other hand, they want their children to learn to read. They would not urge that that is an argument for illiteracy, nor that our people should repudiate the value of education here. [Applause.]

This summation of reasons must be placed upon a legislative desire to insure a higher citizenship. The literacy test has been and is now indignantly attacked on many grounds. Those who favor it are stigmatized as narrow, bigoted, pharisaical, and as nativists with an old "know-nothing" flavor. These attacks should not be interpreted too seriously. It is most probable they would make them against restrictions of any sort, because they speak against any restriction. If we accept their statements for what they are worth, they plead the cause of ignorance rather than philanthropy. These men live in a country which has pronounced ignorance a crime, punishable under the law. Is it possible they declare it a crime for an American and a virtue for a foreigner?

We spend three-quarters of a billion dollars per year on our common schools in order to remove this incubus. We do it not so much for the youth but for the coming citizen of the country. If the American born must not grow up in ignorance because of the State, then why should the State admit the ignorant with open arms? Why should there be one standard for the native American and another for the foreigner?

I shall vote for the illiteracy test because it will select our immigrants. It will lift the standard of the foreigner. The one who comes to our shores should have a distinct purpose. If he comes to remain for a short time to take back his wages at a lower rate than our own labor, he does not help American conditions by breaking down our standard. If he can not read, he can not become a citizen. Why should we have a literacy test for citizenship and not for immigration unless we wish to encourage the coming here of the foreigners to remain as a foreigner until he desires to return? Note the 400,000 foreigners who returned to fight the battle of their rulers. Do we mean to encourage that sort of immigration? If so, why? Let those who favor such immigration contemplate its effect upon our standard of living among those who toil. Members of the House, whatever else we do to maintain our ideals of citizenship, our standards of living, we must not by law permit such an incubus to be fastened upon those who toil. Our purpose here should be to insure advance of these people, not retrogression.

While the literacy test, as I said before, is not a conclusive test, it is a step in the right direction. I have consistently stood for a protective tariff, as I said once before. I thoroughly believe in it. My chief reason is to prevent goods from cheap European labor competing with our goods of highly paid labor. Believing as I do in this protection of our labor, I can not and will not vote to indiscriminately bring in unskilled ignorant labor to compete with our labor. This is one of the chief reasons for my contention.

Mr. Chairman, to listen to some of the utterances in the discussion of this bill, where we hear Members compare the viciousness of some educated men with the virtues of some of those who can not read, we wonder in what land this discussion is carried on. How account for these encomiums upon ignorance and these invectives upon intelligence?

This bill demands that our standards of life shall not be lowered. It demands that our requirements for Americans must not be discriminated against in favor of immigrants. It demands that our unskilled labor shall not be too greatly increased. It demands that the problem of unemployment shall not be further confused by indiscriminate immigration. It demands a premium upon energy and intelligence.

This bill will not keep out the industrious and the energetic. Anyone who can not learn to read 30 or 40 words has not energy and industry enough to insure the country against his becoming a public charge. This bill will likely stimulate education in Europe as nothing else will—especially in those sections where the ignorant population live. This bill by this process of selection will not harm, but it ought to help, and I shall therefore use my influence to secure its adoption. Mr. Chairman, it may be again defeated, but, gentlemen of the House, you can do no more than defer it. You can not fight against the future. In this case time is on our side. This measure will become a law sooner or later. The judgment of the country demands it, and it must come, if not now then soon.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CASEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 13043) making appropriations to supply further additional urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1916 and prior fiscal years, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

IMMIGRATION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, my good, warm friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], has made the strongest argument that could possibly be made against the literacy test. [Applause.] I am opposed to this test, because I sometimes think that mother might have been born in Germany, in England, or in Italy and that she might have been unable to read. In that event, this bill being a law, some of us would not have had the opportunity to be citizens of the United States, and we certainly would not have become Members of the Congress.

It is the humane side of this question that has induced me since I first came into this House to oppose this feature of a bill that otherwise is not so objectionable. The humane side of this question rises far above the question of citizenship, as it has been described by my friend from Ohio. I am pursuaded that Jesus Christ on earth would not have included the literacy-test clause as it is here written. It is lacking those elements of that brotherhood of man which everyone of us in his innermost soul strives for, regardless of the country from which he hails. I agree with the proponents of this bill in this, that——

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have only nine minutes.

Mr. MEEKER. But will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MEEKER. I would like to ask, if on the subject of a program the gentleman is calling in the Master as a legislator, would He stand for compulsory education?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I venture to say that if the gentleman were preaching the doctrine of Jesus Christ he would not preach the preference of one set of human beings over those who have less favorable opportunities in the world.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would the gentleman in his spirit of broad humanity admit millions of Chinamen in the United States?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question of assimilation arises there——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Or people from Brazil?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As soon as Chinamen are willing to assimilate with the people of the United States we have another question. The difficulty with the gentleman is he will not assimilate with the Hindus and Japanese, and that gives some justification for the stand he takes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would the gentleman admit those from Brazil and Mexico?

Mr. MADDEN. This bill admits them from Mexico.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will have to secure me more time if he desires me to answer.

Mr. Chairman, I must proceed. I agree with the proponents of this bill that we should restrict undesirable immigration, but I can not agree with them that worthy and hard-working immigrants who can not read are so undesirable that they should be excluded. We have plenty of law to keep out immigrants who are criminal, insane, anarchistic, or otherwise undesirable, and if any of them slip into the country it is due to the administration of existing law rather than to the law itself. The pending bill in a great many pages reaffirms existing law. It excludes undesirable immigrants who are already excluded by law and imposes an additional head tax upon those who are admissible. It enters upon ticklish ground in its treatment of Asiatics, but the chief new feature of the bill is the provision which excludes immigrants who seek a haven in the United States for no other reason than that they can not read. This provision is insisted upon by the ultraimmigration restrictionists despite the fact that it resulted in vetoes by Presidents Cleveland, Taft, and Wilson, which vetoes were sustained in every instance by Congress.

The eloquent gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], who has championed this measure for many years, has indicated that its passage would correct many of our social and industrial evils, advancing his line of thought so far as to suggest it would stop the raids of Villa on the Mexican border. The confidence of the gentleman in this regard is as sublime as his faith in "our watchful waiting" policy in Mexico or the unthinkable thought that President Wilson, who vetoed this bill two years ago, will change his mind and approve it now. This bill will not stop the raids of Villa nor the smuggling of Asiatics nor the sneaking in of undesirables any more than any law will prevent murder or theft. If we were to adopt the thought of the gentleman from Alabama with respect to border raids or smuggling, it would be necessary for us to increase the Immigration Inspection Service to twice the size of the present standing army, plus the addition of the 40,000 men provided for in the Hay bill. For the sake of the present administration and in order that our overburdened Treasury may not be too speedily depleted it would be well for some political strategist to induce the gentleman from Alabama to eliminate the suppression of Villa from his immigration program.

My objection to this bill, Mr. Chairman, is due to the literacy test it proposes. Such a test is neither patriotic nor humane. It favors the worthless and designing immigrant who is capable of making trouble for this country and it casts down utterly the worthy toiler who struggles patiently and laboriously under the burdens imposed upon him by the strong and the heartless. Gentlemen in debate, spurred on by petitions and resolutions, dictated by expediency and without regard to the human side of the problem, have inveighed against the illiterate. Strange enough, many of these same gentlemen on other occasions have been the most persistent friends of the downtrodden and oppressed. It is not the criminal or the crook or the polished schemer they are after now; it is the man or woman who has the misfortune to toil on through the world without having learned to read. Not those who are scoundrels by profession but those who can not read must go back under this bill, back to the inferno of Europe, back to the hopeless gloom from which they came, denied even that ray of light, that hope of civilized living which was vouchsafed to those who now turn their hands against them. This literary test does not stop the anarchist, for he can read; it does not stop the Crones, who poison our food, for they can read; it does not stop the agitators who preach from the street corners, for they can read; it does not stop the artist or the lecturer who coins American dollars and spends them in Europe, for they can read. What this literacy test does is to stop the men who can not read, but who are willing to work under an American system until they themselves can earn enough not only to learn to read but to pay for the education of their children. The farmers of this land are now pleading for this class of untaught workers.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regret I can not yield.

This literacy test will bar the war-made widows of Europe for whom the housewives of America are now pleading. It will bar these widows and their orphans if they are so unfortunate as to be willing to work without stopping to read. This bill assumes to speak for American patriotism and labor by denying to the unfortunate who would come here to work the same right and the same opportunity that was held out to the oppressed people of the world when our forefathers founded this Republic. It proposes to reverse the order of history and tradition, destroy the universal belief in America as a haven for the oppressed or for those seeking relief from persecution or political or religious views by writing over our portals the inscription, "All hope abandon, ye who can not read." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. KENNEDY].

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Chairman, yesterday as the debate upon this immigration question proceeded I sat here and listened with great attention to the discussion indulged in by the advocates of this measure, hoping to hear some plausible argument fall from their lips in justification of the literacy test which this bill proposes.

Several of the gentlemen who whipped their minds into a torrent of enthusiasm for this literacy feature are careful to correct and revise their remarks, and, as a consequence, they do not appear in the RECORD this morning.

In the printed remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HOOD], a member of the Committee on Immigration, there appears a quotation from the speech of Hon. W. Bourke Cock-ran, of New York, a former member of this House, which the gentleman from North Carolina presented, as it were, in defense of the literacy test in this bill. The quotation is as follows:

It is true—

Speaking of the immigrant—that he crowds sometimes into a great city like New York, and it is also true that in more than one quarter of a great city you can find a population almost entirely foreign; signs over shops are in foreign characters, the language actually spoken is foreign, the habiliments of the people foreign, of the women especially, among whom that tendency to color so strong in certain European populations is very pronounced. As you see these aliens leading their lives according to habits that have grown up across the sea you might well wonder, as you go from one district to another, each inhabited apparently by people differing wholly from the others, if, indeed, there be not here a multitude of races beyond the capacity of even this Nation to digest.

[Applause.]

At the end of the quotation, the gentleman from North Carolina received some degree of applause, whereupon he proceeded to say that Mr. Cockran gave his reasons why this Nation can digest such conditions. The gentleman from North Carolina did not quote the reasons which he said Mr. Cockran gave, and I desire to read these reasons into the RECORD in order that the entire statement of the distinguished orator from New York may appear:

But this doubt can never linger in your mind longer than it takes to walk a single block. Because it is impossible to go more than that distance before you will see a solid building, unpretentious but simple, with a door at either end over one of which is inscribed the word "boys" and over the other the word "girls," and shortly after three every afternoon from these doors there pour out streams of boys and girls, every one of them speaking the United States tongue and whose greatest pride is that he or she is an American. To tell any one of them that he is an Italian, a "Dago," or an Armenian or a Scandinavian or a Hungarian, is the one offense that can be expiated only by a blow.

Mr. Chairman, the obnoxious literacy test in this bill has always been the head and front of its offending. Three times the bill has gone down to defeat because of this literacy feature. The fourth trial may finish it completely—a consummation devoutly to be wished.

Apart from the literacy test, the bill has many commendatory provisions; but this test so thoroughly vitiates it that it can not receive my support. I voted against it in the last and I shall register my vote against it in the present session of Congress.

So much has already been said respecting the literacy test that very little that is new can be offered. For the best part of 20 years it has been discussed in and out of Congress. Majorities in both Houses have favored it, but on every occasion of its passage it has failed of presidential sanction.

Whatever motives actuate the proponents of this literacy test, they appear to justify it on the ground that it will bar undesirable immigrants. My own belief is that it will exclude numbers of immigrants who can not read but who are in other particulars entirely worthy of admission. To my mind it is at once injudicious and unjust. It will welcome the degenerate, who is usually able to read, and repudiate the industrious foreigner. The accident of illiteracy is not a sound reason for shutting the gates of admission against an immigrant. Rather his health and strength, mental, moral, and physical, and his anxiety to earn an honest living in the exercise of his toil are warrant that no fear need ever be entertained that this country will be harmed by his coming here.

A literacy test provides for an aristocracy of immigrants, and is therefore discriminatory and un-American. It assails a class of immigrants who lack rudimentary education only because the key to obtain it has never been placed in their hands. This is not their fault, but their misfortune. Instead of keeping them out for the reason that they can not read it should be our purpose to admit them, if they are otherwise worthy, and endeavor to remedy the defect so far as it lies in our power. This, sir, is our present practice, and it makes for a more enlightened citizenship and is altogether compatible with republican institutions. We can Americanize the foreigner, and are doing so to-day by means of the splendid educational opportunities that this country offers. The children of immigrants are in many cases the unconscious agents of this transformation, for the influence of the school and library upon them, which is often transmitted to the parents, drives out many racial tendencies that otherwise might retard assimilation.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation lays down the proposition that an illiterate person is not fit to be admitted into the United States. The proposition is not only absurd, but it is subversive of every principle of justice on which our Government rests. We can not accept it unless we are willing to stultify ourselves and unlearn the history of all that the foreigner—the illiterate foreigner—has done in the marvelous development of our country. The millions that have come here at successive periods have done vastly more than increase the numbers of our population. Untaught by any teacher save the God of their fathers, unskilled and unschooled in any art or science, but depending wholly upon native muscle and sinew, they have struggled with the forces of nature, hewed down our forests, cultivated our fields, built our highways and railroads, constructed our canals, and thus transformed the entire country from its rude and primitive state to a land desired of all as a place of peaceful habitation.

I cheerfully accept the proposition that this Government should use every possible precaution to prevent vicious, immoral, and idle immigrants from seeking admission in our ports, for it is these classes alone that present the dangers that may arise from future immigration. This measure, however, does not accomplish the purpose, but rather sets up a standard which these classes are usually able to meet and which the honest, industrious, and God-fearing immigrant can not always attain. It presents a policy unworthy of the passive consideration of any real American, much less his active support.

If the presentation of this bill serves no other valuable purpose here, it will, at least, permit us to remind its advocates of what we owe to the foreigners who in the past have found a haven in our country. But for them the country would yet be struggling in infancy, its resources undeveloped, its soil unyielding, its marvelous wealth still hidden, and all the wonderful agencies of the land would not yet have arrived at their marvelous state of advancement; yes, even the buffalo and the beaver, with their hunter, the savage of the forest, would at this period of our existence, as they were in our early history, still be predominating inhabitants of a great portion of our country.

Notwithstanding the aversion manifested by the victims of alieniphobia who, no doubt, would be quite willing to shut off immigration altogether, it must be admitted that there is yet much work to be done in the future development of the country. Vast and varied resources we have yet remaining whose development depends upon unskilled labor, which the foreigner must furnish and which makes immigration an entirely practical, if not a necessary proposition. We need the immigrant and we welcome him because he is useful. But his usefulness can never be determined merely by a capacity to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. I have not time in which to yield.

Mr. Chairman, our wonderful institutions have been built up by our liberal policy of immigration. We have become a great Nation largely through extending an inviting hand to the sturdy sons of toil who have lived and struggled under a foreign yoke in the hope that some day they might be released from the shackles that bound them and be permitted to enter into and enjoy the blessings of a free country where labor is dignified and the spirit of freedom abides. Let us not now depart from that purpose by setting up a literacy standard, which is not the measure of man. Rather let us continue to make our selections on physical, mental, and moral grounds. Like Bassanio in the play—

Let us turn from the specious casket, which contains only the death's head and the fool's head, and fix our choice upon the plain leaden casket, which conceals the treasure.

Though very little enthusiasm exists at present for the ancient belief that this country must forever be a refuge for the victims of Old World oppression, it can not be that there still exists any trace of the spirit of other times, of days never to be recalled without a blush, days of dwarfish talents and narrow minds, the Know-Nothing days, so ably depicted and described by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the golden age of nativism in American life. If such a spirit yet lingers anywhere in this country and, masquerading under false colors, contributes its portion to this renewed and unwarranted opposition to the foreigner, let those who possess it remember that their predecessors were cured when they found that the immigrants who crossed the ocean in the steerage of a ship were soon called upon and promptly answered the call to assist in steering the ship of state. Then we find them in large numbers enthusiastically fighting the battles and courageously bearing all the vicissitudes of the Revolution; later, in greater numbers, we see them gallantly and with the intense ardor of real patriotism in the war of preservation in 1812 and in our struggle with Mexico, and when the climax came in 1861 and all were called to the support of the Union, whose integrity was in danger, bravely they stood, fought, and died for the preservation of that Union and its institutions and of that flag so eloquently apostrophized yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER]:

Every race and creed,
There was no question then of native land,
But love the flag and follow it till death.

Hundreds, yes, thousands, of them were unable to read their names on the lists of enrollment as they marched into the service or upon the honorable discharges they received as they marched out, but this defect in education did not detract from their capacity to serve their adopted country nor defame their integrity or the high character of their citizenship.

In the onward march of civilization in which this Republic has been for a century and a quarter enlisted, the most passionate worshipers of our institutions and our liberties have come from climes across the seas. Campbell, the poet, in his Pleasures of Hope, paid well-deserved tribute to a race of people many of whose numbers will be rejected at our ports if this bill should become a law, in the following lines:

Hope for a season bade the world farewell,
And Freedom shriek'd as Kosciusko fell!

The statue of this gallant son of Poland, who was thus immortalized as freedom's ideal, adorns a park in this city named in honor of Lafayette, another archetypal son of liberty, who valiantly contributed to the victory we finally achieved in the days of our early struggles for national being. Shall we in this day and generation make freedom shriek by adopting this un-American measure and thereby deprive a bold and sturdy manhood of opportunities toward which our fathers fled from cruel and tyrannical wrongs? I hope not. We live and believe in a democracy where freedom ever dwells, and we have always shared that freedom with the downtrodden races of the world. Our mission as a Nation is not to monopolize freedom and shut the gates of mercy on mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, in the course of the few minutes that I shall ask the attention of the committee I expect occasionally to use the word "Mexican," but I want to say at the outset that it is not my purpose to discuss any question in relation to Mexico that is now or can be a subject of diplomatic correspondence.

Down in the Southwestern States, those that border on Mexico, we employ the word "Mexican" to define a race rather than the nationality. I want Members to appreciate the fact that in colloquial speech in all the States that border on Mexico the word is used in that sense. There are Mexicans in my State, as there are, no doubt, in New Mexico, Arizona, and California, whose fathers and grandfathers and perhaps great-grandfathers were born within what is now the territory of the United States. Yet in colloquial speech they remain "Mexicans."

What I am going to say is in reference to a series of events that took place in Texas during the summer and autumn of 1915, serious and important movements resulting in conflicts with arms and in bloodshed. I have been amazed, Mr. Chairman, to learn that there are numbers of gentlemen in this House, in the present Congress, who never even heard that there was a deliberate and serious effort, supported by arms and fostered—at least, an effort made to foster—such movements by actual conflicts on the field of battle, although the engagements in themselves were insignificant and always resulted in one way.

It is about that, and because it has a direct and an important bearing on the bill that we are now considering, that I shall talk. I have endeavored, Mr. Chairman, to put into a 15-minute speech three or four months of very stirring history. I have endeavored to set it down in chronological order, and if the gentlemen will give me their attention for a few minutes I think I may be able to tell those who have not heard of it—of the revolution in Texas during the summer of 1915—of the conspiracy hatched in a foreign country, the government of which, in my judgment, was in no way responsible for it, but was attempted to be put into execution in the State of Texas.

In order that I may be brief and not discursive, and not take up more time than has been allotted to me, I shall resort to my manuscript and confine myself to it, and if any gentleman shall be moved to ask me a question I will say now that I regret that I will not have time to leave this paper in order to answer it. However, if after I shall have concluded I have a moment left, I will be happy to do what I can.

Early in August, 1915, the people of Texas who were going quietly about their business were startled to learn that they were living on a volcano. They learned that a revolution had been started within the State itself and that serious and violent efforts were being made to dismember the State and to reattach the separated parts to Mexico. It was proposed to take about 22,000 square miles of west Texas, and in addition, all of New Mexico, Arizona, California, and Colorado.

It was a large enterprise, and when I first heard of it I was merely amused, for I did not believe the Mexicans in Mexico or any of the Mexicans in Texas could be so stupid or audacious. Subsequent events proved that I underestimated their stupidity and audacity. At first these movements, all of which were characterized by murder and robbery, were thought to be nothing more than the activities of bandits. No one in Texas dreamed that they had any connection with a serious political movement. We were to learn better in a few days after they began.

Early in August there was an invasion of Texas. A party of bandits came into Cameron County on August 2. They stole a dozen or more horses and fired rifles at citizens of Texas. The next day, August 3, some of the men of Troop A of the Twelfth Cavalry encountered the invaders only 18 miles from the city of Brownsville. Private McGuire of the troop was killed, Private Curtis shot in the ear, and Texas Ranger Joe Taylor had half his saddle shot away. There were supposed to be about 50 of the invading Mexicans in the bandit organization. Just how many Mexicans were killed was not reported, but no Texan ever blushes at the score in these encounters.

On the same day a railway train was fired on and a trestle 235 feet long was totally destroyed and the telegraph and telephone wires cut.

On the 5th of August some of the raiders went to the village of Sebastian and captured A. L. Austin and his son while they were at work in their field and executed both. A 19-year-old boy by the name of Millard recognized five or six of the gang as residents of the Sebastian neighborhood. This fact was taken as evidence that the marauders from Mexico had the cooperation of Mexicans resident in Texas.

The store of J. T. Alexander, who was also the Sebastian postmaster, was robbed on the same day by the Mexicans.

The elder Austin had been the head of a law-and-order league and had busied himself with the task of ridding the community of certain well-known bad Mexicans, and this was thought to be the reason for the attack on him and his son.

I will say, in passing, that the San Antonio Daily Express, from which I glean these bits of information, published in its issue of August 8, 1915, an interview with the Chief of Staff, Gen. Hugh L. Scott, who was in Chicago on the 7th of that month on his way to visit one Francisco Villa, of whom you have heard. The telegram from Chicago said that Gen. Scott was confident that he would be able to bring the warring factions in Mexico together. The general was quoted as saying: "You bet I am optimistic. There is no place in this world for a pessimist. When I start out on something I usually do not quit until I have done what I started out to do."

"Are you going to read the riot act to Villa?" the reporter asked. "No; I would not say that," was Gen. Scott's reply. "I will say, however, that Villa and I have always got along fine together. He once told me that whatever he and I set out to do along the Mexican border we would accomplish."

They still have the same purpose in view but differ in their methods. Our Chief of Staff wants Villa to visit the United States, but they can not agree on the time nor circumstances of the visit. Villa prefers to travel at night and to make surprise visits.

Mr. Chairman, I will further digress for a moment to say that the most amazing thing I have observed in connection with the whole Mexican movement was the obsession about Villa, the belief in him, the impression that he was a sort of Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Jefferson, or George Washington, or combination of all, trying to lead his people out of the tyranny of subjection to the capitalistic class into pure democracy.

Such a leader may have been needed, but a hardened criminal, a creature who had been convicted of base crimes and guilty of others for which he had never been brought to trial, was hardly a fit person for such leadership.

The people on the border knew this creature and were never deceived by him or his promises.

But let me tell the story of the celebrated San Diego revolution in chronological order. On the 6th of August—always referring to the year of 1915—a fight occurred at El Paso Real, about 30 miles from Brownsville, between Texas Rangers and some of the bandits. The laconic report says, "Three alleged members of the gang were soon disposed of."

On the 9th the residence of the manager of the Norias ranch was attacked by 60 of the Mexicans, who appeared to be fairly well officered and organized and perfectly armed.

The ranch was defended by seven civilians and four United States cavalrymen. Four of the enemy were killed and six of the Americans were wounded. The published account of the fight is thrilling, but my limited time allowance in this debate will not permit me to give you the incidents that illustrate the high courage of Americans, even when fighting an enemy four times as great, from the point of view of numbers.

One of the wounded Mexicans, a citizen of Texas, captured on this occasion, gave the first reliable information of the real character of the raids. He said the purpose of all of them was to advance the revolution by which it was intended to detach from Texas all that part of the State west of the Nueces River and restore it to Mexico. Of course, he said that he had been forced to join the invaders.

I ought not to close this brief account of the very lively fight at the Norias ranch without saying that the negro cook at the ranch proved himself to be a real hero. No one fought with greater courage.

The report of the Norias fight made to the San Antonio Express contained these significant words:

> There is little doubt here now that disorders among Mexicans * * * are caused by their desire to return to Mexico that part of Texas lying between the Nueces and the Rio Grande. People here now recall the "Plan of San Diego," brought to light by the United States Government officials last winter when a Mexican was arrested on the charge of sedition. On his person a lengthy document was found which set out the purpose of a certain group of Mexicans to incite revolt in all the States bordering on Mexico * * * and to hand them over to Negroes, Japanese, and Mexicans.

All white males over 16 years of age were to be killed.

After the Norias fight and the confession of the captured Mexican, all considered in connection with the "Plan of San Diego," the real situation was recognized, and the movement was commonly referred to as the "revolution."

The Mexicans themselves referred to the invaders and their Texas-Mexican allies as "the army of liberation for Mexicans in Texas."

Near Mercedes, which is not far from Brownsville, in a fight on the 10th of August, the saddle pockets of a Mexican were taken, and in them some documents that shed light on the situation. One of these was a handbill in Spanish. Under the general heading, "Army of liberation of Mexico and Texas," was printed a brief address, which ran as follows:

> Mexicans! To-day we will accomplish a sacred obligation. The revolution has acquired in a few days gigantic proportions. We unite as brothers to expedite these fortunes of ours. In this solemn moment we will vindicate our rights and justice for all time. May the light shine upon us in all our undertakings, and may it crown our forces in all manners contemplated. This movement in Texas is of such consequence as to bring about the peace and justice we all long for.

By the time these things had happened, Mr. Chairman, the people on the Texas border were thoroughly aroused. Citizens who had the courage to defend their homes and who could look straight down a rifle barrel, with the assistance of the Rangers and the Federal troops began what the papers called a "silent, relentless, man hunt." The chaparral was full of bandits. Some of them never left the chaparral. From time to time there were encounters of more or less importance, the usual result being discomfiture for the enemy.

The Government in Washington had not yet become convinced that it was a real invasion, that the headquarters of the enemy was really south of the Rio Grande. At this juncture Mr. Garner and citizens of the Rio Grande Valley visited Gen. Funston and laid before him their reasons for believing that certain Mexican officials—and I now refer to officials of Mexico—were behind the movement.

Personally I do not believe that high officials of the Carranza government were associated with the raids, but that officers of lower rank encouraged them I do not doubt.

Gen. Nafarete, who was the Carranza commander at Matamoras, across the river from Brownsville, stoutly denied that his troops or any part of the Carranza army had any connection with the raids. Sometime we may know who was right, the American citizens headed by Mr. Garner or the Mexican general.

Raids from the other side of the river continued from time to time and there were occasional encounters with roving bands of Mexicans. That these invaders had the sympathy and active support of many Mexicans who were residents of Texas is certainly true. It is also true that even with the aid of disloyal citizens of our own country all such conspiracies against the sovereignty and integrity of our country and the State of Texas will fail. Such a project could only be born in a diseased brain, or be part of a deliberate scheme to create a condition that will facilitate plans for murder and robbery.

These raids into Texas continued into October. On the 18th of that month a train was wrecked and a number of citizens of Texas were murdered, among them a health officer of the State.

I will print as a part of my remarks, with the consent of the House, a story of the confession of one "Chano" Flores, who was arrested by the sheriff of Cameron County, Tex.

I will also print a copy of "The Plan of San Diego." This is a more important document, as it is a declaration of the purposes of the revolutionists and tells in some detail how their program was to be executed.

The lesson of this episode in the history of our country, Mr. Chairman, is that we can not be too careful about the character of people we admit to citizenship or even to residence.

It is proposed in this bill to regulate immigration to apply the same conditions for admission to Mexicans that operate as against people from Europe. The committee were, as I recall, of one mind on this point and confidently expect the House to agree with them. Disloyal people in the United States ought not receive recruits from any quarter. Against a class that has shown active disloyalty we should be specially on guard. [Applause.]

PLANS OF TEXAS INVASION BARED—MEXICAN UNDER ARREST TELLS OF PLANS FOR LOOT AND MURDER—BANDIT BAND HAS 500 MEMBERS—THEY ARE DIVIDED INTO COMPANIES OF 50 AND 60, AND OBJECT OF RAIDS IS TO SECURE INDEPENDENCE FOR MEXICANS IN TEXAS.

BROWNSVILLE, TEX., October 25.

A border bandit confession, claimed to have been received by the sheriff's department from a prisoner, not only admits participation in last Monday night's train wreck and murders near here, but involves several other Mexicans and leads the officers to believe they are on the trail of the chief offenders in the Texas border terrors of the past three months.

The Mexican who is said by the officers to have confessed is Chano Flores and was arrested Friday in the company of Luciano Chapa, another Mexican, who denies Flores's story. The sheriff's department is making arrests every day now, and has eight men suspected of complicity in the past week's depredations.

The supposed confession of Flores says that the prime object of the series of raids has been to "secure liberty and independence for Mexicans in Texas." Robbery and loot, it says, are of secondary importance.

TOOK PART IN OTHER RAIDS.

Flores is said to have confessed to taking part in a raid on a ranch at Sebastian, this county, several weeks ago, in which a father, son, and two stepsons were killed. After this, Flores's story takes him back to Mexico, where he says he remained, taking no further part in raids until the train wrecking near here last Monday night. The confession declares that Luis de la Rosa and Aniceto Pizano, reputed leaders of the "revolutionary forces," have been in Reynosa, Mexico, for several weeks, maintaining headquarters there.

Flores describes the so-called Texas revolutionary army as a force of about 500, divided into several companies, the one to which he belonged containing from 50 to 60 men. He has given the name of a man whom he charges was captain of the company which made the raid on the train last Monday night.

The companies which made the raids at Ojo de Agua, Progreso, and other points up the river from here were unknown to Flores, according to his statements, but that all are under the general leadership of De la Rosa and Pizano.

Flores is said to have confessed that on the night of the wreck some 30 Mexicans crossed the Rio Grande into Texas and were joined by 15 to 20 on this side. They then laid plans for wrecking the train, and he gave the names of three men who he said pulled the rail out just ahead of the engine.

HOW THE BANDITS ESCAPED.

Following the wreck and robbery, the members of the band who had horses struck out north through the Fresnos tract, 11 miles north of Brownsville, intending to go as far as Raymondville, 49 miles north of here, with the further intention of doubling south and recrossing the Rio Grande to Mexico in the vicinity of Mission, Tex. Members of the band who were unmounted went northeast into the section of country about the Rio Hondo, east of San Benito, and in the region where the troubles originally broke out, with the idea of hiding in the Sebastian district, 33 miles north of here.

Flores did not say why the bandits killed the soldiers and shot Dr. E. S. McCain and H. J. Wallis, but permitted other Americans on the train to escape unharmed. He said that he did not know what became of the money the bandits got from the robberies, but supposed it went to the leaders for the purpose of carrying on the revolution in Texas.

Apparently the members got little or nothing of the loot. He said if the bandits saw a horse, a saddle, pair of shoes, or anything else they wanted, they got them regardless of what acts were necessary to get results.

DIARY HELPS OFFICERS.

Flores and Chapa are good examples of nativity of the bandits, the former coming from Texas, while Chapa is from far in the interior of Mexico, according to the officers.

It is reported here that following the fight at Ojo de Agua soldiers in chasing a man said to have been the leader of the band that attacked the soldiers there early Thursday came across a Mexican house, where this man was said to have attempted to compel a Mexican woman to give him a horse. The man left in a hurry because of the fear of soldiers, and is said to have dropped a diary, now in the hands of the officers. This diary contained, besides many names, probably the roll of the band, the rules and regulations to be observed by members of the band.

The committee of citizens named at a mass meeting here Saturday to visit Austin and Washington to make an appeal to authorities for early relief on the border departed this afternoon. Four left Brownsville and will be joined along the railroad by committee members from Hidalgo, Willacy, Brooks, and Kleberg Counties. They expect to be in Austin to-morrow to confer with Gov. Ferguson in the afternoon.

The home of Private Herman E. Moore, infantryman, who died to-day from the wound received in the fight last night, is at Crystal, Ind., instead of French Lick Springs, Ind. The proper address was learned to-day through a letter from Moore's father, Aaron Moore, of Crystal. No orders have yet been received for shipment of the body.

Plan of San Diego is as follows:

CITIES WERE TO COME FIRST IN SAN DIEGO PLAN—SIGNERS OF DOCUMENT TO GIVE THEIR LIVES FOR CAUSE IF NECESSARY—WOULD KILL THE MALES.

The first conflagration for the faithful to the plan of San Diego was scheduled to be lighted on February 20 last, when an uprising of the Mexicans, negroes, Japanese, and Chinese in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, and California would have occurred. The plan was for a simultaneous outbreak resulting in the seizure of these States.

But this plan was nipped in the bud when former Deputy United States Marshal T. B. Bishop, of Brownsville, arrested B. Ramos, jr., at McAllen, Tex.

Ramos was charged with seditious conspiracy against the United States Government. He was tried in the Federal district court at Brownsville by Judge Waller T. Burns, but the Government's charge was not proven. Ramos was alleged to have been secretary of the organization.

PLAN OF SAN DIEGO.

A copy of the plan of San Diego was obtained by United States officials. It was in Spanish, and is as follows:

"Plan of San Diego, State of Texas, January 6, 1915.

"We, who in turn sign our names, assembled in the revolutionary plot of San Diego, Tex., solemnly promise each other on our word of honor that we will fulfill and cause to be fulfilled and complied with, all the clauses and provisions stipulated in this document and execute the orders and the wishes emanating from the provisional directorate of this movement and recognize as military chief of the same Mr. ———, guaranteeing with our lives the faithful accomplishment what is here agreed upon.

"1. On the 20th day of February, 1915, at 2 o'clock in the morning, we will riso in arms against the Government and country of the United States and North America, one as all and all as one, proclaiming the liberty of the individuals of the black race and its independence of Yankee tyranny, which has held us in iniquitous slavery since remote times; and at the same time and in the same manner we will proclaim the independence and segregation of the States bordering on the Mexican nation, which are: Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Colorado, and upper California, of which States the Republic of Mexico was robbed in a most perfidious manner by North American imperialism.

"2. In order to render the foregoing clause effective, the necessary army corps will be formed under the immediate command of military leaders named by the supreme revolutionary congress of San Diego, Tex., which shall have full power to designate a supreme chief who shall be at the head of said army. The banner which shall guide us in this enterprise shall be red, with a white diagonal fringe, and bearing the following inscription: 'Equality and independence,' and none of the subordinate leaders or subalterns shall use any other flag (except only the white for signal). The aforesaid army shall be known by the name of 'Liberating army for races and peoples.'

"3. Each one of the chiefs will do his utmost, by whatever means possible, to get possession of the arms and funds of the cities which he has beforehand been designated to capture in order that our cause may be provided with resources to continue the fight with better success, the said leaders each being required to render an account of everything to his superiors, in order that the latter may dispose of it in the proper manner.

MUST TAKE CITIES FIRST.

"4. The leader who may take a city must immediately name and appoint municipal authorities, in order that they may preserve order and assist in every way possible the revolutionary movement. In case the capital of any State which we are endeavoring to liberate be captured, there will be named in the same manner superior municipal authorities for the same purpose.

"5. It is strictly forbidden to hold prisoners, either special prisoners (civilians) or soldiers; and the only time that should be spent in dealing with them is that which is absolutely necessary to demand funds (loans) of them; and whether these demands be successful or not, they shall be shot immediately, without any pretext.

"6. Every stranger who shall be found armed and who can not prove his right to carry arms shall be summarily executed, regardless of race or nationality.

"7. Every North American over 16 years of age shall be put to death, and only the aged men and women and children shall be respected. And on no account shall the traitors to our race be respected or spared.

"8. The Apaches of Arizona, as well as the Indians (red skins) of the Territory, shall be given every guaranty, and their lands which have been taken from them shall be returned to them, to the end that they may assist us in the cause which we defend.

"9. All appointments and grades in our army which are exercised by subordinate officers (subalterans) shall be examined (recognized) by the superior officers. There shall likewise be recognized the grades of leaders of other complots which may not be connected with this and who may wish to cooperate with us, also those who may affiliate with us later.

"10. The movement having gathered force, and once having possessed ourselves of the States above alluded to, we shall proclaim them an independent republic, later requesting, if it be thought expedient, annexation to Mexico, without concerning ourselves at that time about the form of government which may control the destinies of the common mother country.

"11. When we shall have obtained independence for the negroes we shall grant them a banner, which they themselves shall be permitted to select, and we shall aid them in obtaining six States of the American Union, which States border upon those already mentioned, and they may from these six States form a republic, and they may therefore be independent.

"12. None of the leaders shall have power to make terms with the enemy without first communicating with the superior officers of the army, bearing in mind that this is a war without quarter; nor shall any leader enroll in his ranks any stranger, unless said stranger belongs to the Latin, the Negro, or the Japanese race.

"13. It is understood that none of the members of this complot (or anyone who may come in later) shall upon the definite triumph of the cause which we defend fail to recognize their superiors, nor shall they aid others who with bastard designs may endeavor to destroy what has been accomplished with such great work.

"14. As soon as possible each local society (junta) shall nominate delegates, who shall meet at a time and place beforehand designated for the purpose of nominating a permanent directorate of the revolutionary movement. At this meeting shall be determined and worked out in detail the powers and duties of the permanent directorate, and this revolutionary plan may be revised or amended.

"15. It is understood among those who may follow this movement that we will carry as a single voice the independence of the negroes, placing obligations upon both races, and that on no account shall we accept aid, either moral or pecuniary, from the Government of Mexico, and it need not consider itself under any obligations in this, our movement.

"Equality and independence."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I have only one more speech on this side. I will ask the gentleman to use the rest of the time.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] I think is ready to proceed.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, against the immigrant numerous offenses have been charged, which, when examined, immediately fade away the same as ice melts under the rays of a July sun. Some gentlemen have harped on the fact that the immigrant lacks patriotism and loyalty to our country. Facts should be our guide and not mere surmise.

Last year the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] gave a dinner to the Army Reservists of Class B. No doubt we are interested in knowing whether any foreign-born citizens were in that party that gathered around his table. I had a personal investigation made. From it I learned that 11 were foreign born, 6 were native born, and that the remaining 7 can not at present be located, but the names indicate that more than half were foreign born.

Mr. MEEKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. No; I have no time. My friend knows it.

Mr. MEEKER. I was asked to yield to him. Will he yield or not?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will not yield. I am sorry.

Let me recall to you a scene in New York City which occurred on May 11, 1914. As far as the eye could see the streets were packed with people. You hear the muffled drums and the soft, sweet, never-forgotten strains of Saul's Death March. Our boys are passing by. Yes; some of them on foot, but a number of them have passed to the far beyond and are coming home, escorted by the President. On each coffin you see our glorious flag. Across the Brooklyn Bridge the procession slowly winds its way and enters the gates of the navy yard. Tenderly each coffin is brought to the space before which a large stand has been erected. The roll is called and the names that are read off are as follows: Louis Frank Boswell, Gabriel Defabbio, Francis P. DeLowry, Frank Devorick, Elzie C. Fisher, Louis Oscar Fried, E. H. Frohlichstein, Dennis J. Lane, George Poinsett, John F. Schumacker, Charles Allen Smith, Albin L. Watson, Daniel Aloysius Haggerty, Samuel Marten, Rufus Edward Percy, and Randolph Summerlin. [Applause.] The President speaks, and in his speech he says:

"Notice how truly these men were our blood—I mean of our American blood, which is not drawn from any one stock, which is not drawn from any one language of the modern world; but free men everywhere have sent their sons and their brothers and their sisters and their daughters to this country in order to make that great compounded Nation which consists of all the sturdy elements and of all the best elements of the whole globe. I listened again to this list of the dead with a profound interest because of the mixture of the names, for the names bear the marks of the several national stocks from which these men came. But they are not Irishmen or Germans or Frenchmen or Hebrews or Italians any more. They were not when they went to Vera Cruz; they were Americans, every one of them, and with no difference in their Americanism because of the stock from which they came. They were, in a peculiar sense, of our blood, and they proved it by showing that they were of our spirit—that no matter what their derivation, no matter where their people came from, they thought and wished and did the things that were American; and the flag under which they served was a flag in which all the blood of mankind is united to make a free nation."

Were these soldier dead loyal to their country? Yet the majority of them were either immigrants themselves or the sons of immigrants.

Reference has repeatedly been made that the newspapers published in foreign tongues in this country do not render material assistance in instilling patriotism in the minds of the newcomers. Their advertisement reads as follows:

"Many flags—one patriotism. Many papers teaching one Americanism. Many tongues uttering one word—'loyalty.' The 750 foreign-language newspapers exhibited here, with a combined circulation of over 8,000,000, though differing in language and creed, stand united for one country, the United States; one aim, to help preserve the ideals and sacred traditions of this our adopted country, the United States of America; to revere its laws and inspire others to respect and obey them; to strive unceasingly to quicken the public sense of civic duty; in all ways to aid in making this country greater and better than we found it."

All men concede that the greatest flow of immigration here has been during the past 20 years. Where is the man who will say that during the same period of time that unions have not made their greatest progress, that wages have not increased, and that the hours of labor have not been shortened? Where is the man who can say that wages have not steadily increased, child labor been practically abolished, and eight-hour laws promptly enacted where the immigrant has chiefly settled, as in States like New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois? Is it not, then, a most remarkable fact that those States which have practically no foreign-born population are the very ones where child labor is encouraged, longer hours for workingmen tolerated, and where unions have made practically no progress in either obtaining legislation or increased wages for their members?

During the past three years it has been the custom to refer to a letter written by one Frederick A. Pope, prosecutor of Somerset County, N. J., which stated that the foreigners produced an extraordinary large number of criminals in his county. I went to Somerset County and made my own investigation. I will throw the mantle of charity over the gentleman and mildly say that the statements contained in his letter must have been made by him when his imagination held full sway. Returning to Washington, I wrote the following letter to the present prosecutor of Somerset County and received the following reply:

Hon. A. M. BEEKMAN,
Prosecutor, Somerset County, Somerville, N. J.

MY DEAR MR. BEEKMAN: In accordance with my conversation this morning, would say that I inclose you herewith a copy of letter which Mr. Frederick A. Pope sent to President Taft on or about February 8, 1913.

Being a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, could I ask you to furnish me with the following information:

No. 1. Whether under the statutes of the State of New Jersey defendants who are found guilty of criminal offenses or plead guilty to criminal offenses are required to be asked whether they can read or write any language.

No. 2. Whether to your knowledge it has been customary in criminal courts in the State of New Jersey to make such inquiries, and whether the answers so received, if any, have been recorded.

No. 3. Have any official statistics been kept as to the number of illiterates who have been found guilty or pleaded guilty to criminal offenses in the county of Somerset, State of New Jersey?

No. 4. Have you found that defendants in the county of Somerset who were charged with criminal offenses to have been, as a rule, illiterate?

No. 5. Of the men charged with homicides during the year 1915 and up to date in your county, have they been illiterate?

No. 6. Can you state as to whether there has ever been 114 criminal cases of alien illiterates tried or disposed of in Somerset County in any two years?

No. 7. Can you state as to whether the alien residents in your county are making any effort to receive an education, and as to whether their children are making any effort to receive an education?

Thanking you for the trouble that I am giving you, I am,
Very sincerely, yours,

ISAAC SIEGEL.

OFFICE OF THE PROSECUTOR OF THE PLEAS OF THE COUNTY OF SOMERSET,
Somerville, N. J., January 19, 1916.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL, Member of Congress,
Congressional Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SIEGEL: I will answer the inquiries contained in your favor of January 17 categorically, as near as possible.

Question No. 1.—A. There is no requirement in this State that defendants pleading guilty and found guilty upon trial shall be asked whether they can read or write any language.

Question No. 2.—A. I have not tried any criminal cases outside of my own county, but have tried a number there, and since April 1 last have been prosecutor of pleas. I have never observed any custom in any of the courts of this State requiring criminals to be questioned as to their ability to write and read, and I know of no county where such record is kept. It is purely a local custom.

Question No. 3.—A. No official statistics have been kept in the county of Somerset from which the number of illiterates could be obtained.

Question No. 4.—A. My experience is that most of those who are charged with crime have been able to read and write some language. There is a percentage, however, unable to do so.

Question No. 5.—A. All three of the men charged with homicides during the year 1915 were able to read and write. Two were American born, one a naturalized citizen, and one a colored man.

Question No. 6.—A. There is no record from which such an assertion can be disputed. One hundred and fourteen criminal cases does not appear unusual for a period of two years, but as to the percentage of illiteracy I can not state.

Question No. 7.—A. According to my observation, the alien residents in Somerset County make diligent efforts to have their children educated. Such exceptions as occur are due to a child-labor system and the incident temptation to place the children at wage-earning employments. Some of the best and most serious-minded students in our public schools are the children of foreign-born parents.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

A. M. BEEKMAN.

Men have said that this bill is aimed at the Italian. I propose to insert into the RECORD a letter I wrote to Secretary Daniels on January 12 and his reply to me, dated January 18.

DISCRIMINATION AT ANNAPOLIS.

JANUARY 12, 1916.

Hon. JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SECRETARY: Approximately one-quarter of the people of my district are residents who came from Italy or who are their descendants.

In New York City they have made steady progress in all the professions until to-day numbers of them are holding public office, both on the bench and in the Legislature of the State of New York.

We never hear in New York City of any discrimination of any kind or description, either in the administration of our civil or criminal law or in treatment accorded them in our schools, high schools, colleges, or universities.

The two midshipmen who heretofore represented the twentieth congressional district of New York at the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, have been from amongst them, and following my idea of the best manner of filling such vacancies, namely, by holding preliminary competitive examinations after due notice to all the residents of my district, I find a disinclination on their part to go to Annapolis, basing their refusal on the ground that those who have come from Italy or are their sons would never be permitted to graduate from Annapolis on account of social ostracism and unfair treatment.

To remove the impression, I would like to obtain the information from you as to whether there is any basis for any such conception as to what actual conditions are at Annapolis, and as to whether there has ever been any graduate from Annapolis amongst those who came from Italy, or their sons, and as to whether there are any such midshipmen now at the academy.

It is needless for me to refer to the fact that Italians have fought most gallantly, both on land and sea, and that many Italian officers have won the world's recognition for heroism and undaunted courage in times of war, and I would, indeed, be most surprised to learn that there is any discrimination of any kind at the present time at the Naval Academy against Italians, as I personally know that you would not permit same.

As I have set the examination for the 25th of January, could I ask you for an early answer to this letter?

Sincerely, yours,

ISAAC SIEGEL.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 18, 1916.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SIEGEL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of January 12, and hasten to assure you that there is no discrimination against midshipmen who are of Italian descent.

A glance at the names contained in the Navy Register will show you that descendants of persons belonging to the principal nations of the world are officers of the United States Navy.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

I may not know conditions in other parts of the country, but I must say that I have repeatedly and frequently met a large number of Italians, and I know of my own knowledge that they are a hard-working, honest, and conscientious people, badly and unjustly maligned, but striving very energetically to earn a livelihood and making every effort to educate their children. Corroboration of this fact is found in the New York Times of December 19, 1915, wherein Dean Frederick P. Keppel, of Columbia University, says:

I should say now that three out of five of our boys are New Yorkers in a real sense, although, of course, many of these are of foreign parentage.

Some of these foreign strains are very interesting. I think the keenest among them at present is the Italian. In earnestness and accomplishment the Italian boys are surpassing even the Russian Jewish boys, and that not only means that they are of high intelligence but that they are hard workers. They get on very well with their fellows of all races, too. We never have a Phi Beta Kappa election which does not result in the choice of from three to five Italians.

The great strength of the American university, and especially of Columbia, lies in the fact that the population from which students are drawn is made up largely of those who still are rising—of those who have not yet "arrived" at that ultimate of achievement which is likely to produce lethargy and a dulled ambition.

This is especially evident among New York Jews.

If there were any means whereby I might ascertain how many of our students from other parts of the city, especially from the Bronx, Brownsville, and Jamaica way, come from families who once were residents of the down-town east-side section, I am sure that very interesting figures would develop.

Are the aliens coming here endeavoring to become citizens? Let us take a glance at the statistics. For the year ending June 30, 1910, there were 39,206 certificates of naturalization issued; 1911, 53,329; 1912, 69,965; 1913, 82,017; 1914, 102,558; 1915, 91,288.

The reason that there is not a greater number admitted to citizenship at the present time is because of the great difficulty in being reached on the calendars of the courts in New York City. It requires at least three days' time, besides taking away the applicant and his witnesses from their work. The courts hold one session a week instead of meeting daily, and I am now engaged in correspondence and consultation with the proper officials here so that arrangements can be made for making the time required to be spent in obtaining such citizenship less.

It has also been contended that the aliens produce in New York a very large number of insane patients. For the year ending September 30, 1915, we find that native-born patients committed numbered 3,276 and foreign-born patients 2,916, showing a tremendous decrease in the number of insane patients of foreign birth. Although there are thousands of native-born insane patients in private sanitariums and hospitals in the State of New York, the exact number is unknown, so that the public records do not give us full or accurate statistics on this very important subject. No record has been kept showing how long any of the foreign-born patients have been here, and we have a right to assume that they must have been here for more than three years, otherwise they would have been deported.

I read the following letters, which show conclusively that educators and others are opposed to this bill because the illiteracy test is a mere subterfuge:

NEW HAVEN, CONN., January 16, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. SIEGEL: I have your letter of January 11. I have not changed my views in the matter of the Burnett immigration bill since I left the Presidency.

WM. H. TAFT.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HUNTER COLLEGE OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
January 13, 1916.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
Representative from New York, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I regret that I have no accurate statistics concerning the percentage of students in Hunter College who are either immigrants or the daughters of immigrants. An estimate, however, made by one of our officers, fixes the percentage roughly at 60. It may be more, but I can not say.

As to my views upon the matter of the literacy test, I do not believe in it as an effective means of excluding undesirable people. Illiteracy is, I think, more often the result of a lack of opportunity rather than the result of choice or of indifference. This is shown to a great extent by the eagerness with which so many immigrants take advantage of the educational opportunities offered in this country.

Very truly, yours,

GEORGE D. DAVIS, President.

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, CITY OF NEW YORK,
January 12, 1916.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I have yours of the 10th and write to say that I have never been convinced that the literacy test is a judicious one to apply to immigrants. Those who know certain parts of Europe best say that some of the most desirable immigrants from these particular lands would be men and women who, by reason of the situation there, have never had opportunity to learn to read or write, but who are earnest, industrious, hard-working, and right-minded people.

Faithfully, yours,

NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER.

THE COLLEGE OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
January 14, 1916.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SIEGEL: No immigration bill I have had the opportunity of reading provides a literacy test which seems to me satisfactory and free from unwise discrimination. I can understand that it is very difficult to draw up a satisfactory literacy test, but unless this is done, I should not think it best to pass such a bill.

We have no data on the question with regard to which you write gathered later than a year ago. This information shows that in this college 25 per cent of our students are foreign born, that the parents of 80 per cent were both foreign born, one parent of 6½ per cent was foreign born, and that the parents of 13½ per cent were both native born.

Hoping that this information may be of service to you, believe me,

Very sincerely, yours,

S. E. MEZES.

Among the others who are opposed to the bill are George McAneny, formerly president of the Board of Aldermen of the City of New York; William Dean Howells, dean of American authors; Dr. John H. Finley, commissioner of education of the State of New York, and one of the dearest and closest friends that Grover Cleveland ever had; Thomas W. Churchill, president of the board of education of the City of New York; Jane Addams, foremost settlement worker of the United States; Bishop David H. Greer; Seth Low, ex-president of Columbia University and ex-mayor of the city of New York; George Kennan, author of "Darkest Russia"; Roger W. Babson, well-known economist; Charles W. Eliot, leading president emeritus of America; Albert Sheels, director of reference and research of the department of education of the city of New York; Andrew Carnegie; Grace Abbott; Dr. G. Stanley Hall, president of Clark University; Dr. D. E. Jenkins, president of the University of Omaha; Dr. Thomas McClelland, president of Knox College, Galesburg, Ill.; Dr. William H. Maxwell, superintendent of schools, city of New York; Dr. C. J. Bushnell, president of Pacific University; Dr. Edward B. Craighead, president of the University of Montana; Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, president University of Chicago; Mr. Edward Cummings, president Spring Hill College; Dr. Lyon G. Tyler, president College of William and Mary; Dr. George Lewis Mackintosh, president Wabash College; Bernard J. Otting, S. J., president St. Louis University; Dr. James A. B. Scherer, president Throop College of Technology; Dr. John Cavanaugh, president University of Notre Dame; Dr. Winthrop E. Stone, president Purdue University; Dr. Herbert L. Stetson, president Kalamazoo College; Dr. Stephen M. Newman, president Howard University; Dr. George S. Davis, president of the Normal College of the City of New York; Dr. David R. Boyd, president University of New Mexico; and Dr. A. W. Harris, president Northwestern University.

In the bill we find among the excluded classes "persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority," and apparently the distinguished specialists on insanity have been permitted to add a new disease, in terms which the ordinary layman can not understand, but which undoubtedly will require their services to be made use of constantly by the Government. I do not know whether these gentlemen are going to volunteer to perform this work gratuitously; but if they are to be paid, the Government will have to expend extraordinary large sums to employ these gentlemen at each port or station of arrival. We are asked to add a new kind of class to be excluded, when the meaning can not be comprehended or understood by one who is not a specialist. I believe that I am not disclosing any confidence when I say that even the members of the committee had to rush to their dictionaries for the purpose of obtaining the meaning of this phrase or term, and even then there was a dispute as to what the term really meant to convey. Perhaps the experts will be able to explain the term in the same manner as they were able to decide on the insanity of Harry K. Thaw. Juries and others, however, have always, as a rule, been their own experts, but, unfortunately, our system does not provide for juries to hear the expert opinion in immigration cases.

Let me call your attention at this time to some additional statistics showing that crime is not greatest where the immigrant is the chief inhabitant:

The very men who are in favor of this bill are the very ones who are opposed to properly preparing this country against a foreign foe by reasonably increasing our Army and Navy.

The Washington Post of February 9, 1916, had the following in its columns:

FARMERS OPPOSE DEFENSES.

Representatives of the National Grange, headed by L. J. Taber, of Barnesville, Ohio, opposed Army and Navy increases on the ground that they meant a burden of taxation that might really be a weapon in the hands of an enemy. He said the farmers were as patriotic as any other class of people and believed in efficient police protection, but not in creating the greatest Army and Navy.

President Dornblazer, of the Farmers' Union of Texas, and representing, he said, farmers' organizations of 22 States, including those in every Southern State, joined with the others in opposition to compulsory military service, opposition to any large increase in expenditures; a demand for economy in congressional appropriations, and approving only a "reasonable outlay" for coast defense by submarines or similar means.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, on February 9, said the speakers against preparedness "Were John B. Lennon, treasurer of the American Federation of Labor, and others."

Indiana has a population equal to one-quarter of New York, yet Adelaide S. Baylor, Indiana State supervisor, stated on February 22, at Detroit, that one out of every 140 inhabitants in the State of Indiana is an inmate of a charitable or corrective institution, and that the States cares for an average of 20,000 inmates. Surely it will not be claimed that Indiana is any worse than the average State in the Union, and yet the State of New York, with its large foreign population, has a better record in proportion.

The argument has heretofore been advanced that we have a surplus of unskilled labor, and that therefore immigration must be restricted. No pretension can be made that we have with us this year more unskilled labor than we can use. If you pick up the daily newspapers you will find the general complaint that unskilled labor can not be had, and that in the entire East it is impossible to obtain a servant girl. The New York Tribune of February 20, 1916, contained an article, "Why we can't get a new maid." The servant-girl famine did not start right after the war began; we had hard times then, you remember. It was the prosperity, added to the war, that has done it. If they should suddenly troop in here, tens of thousands of them, I do not believe we would take long to find them places."

This bill deserves defeat, because it makes no provision for the admission of those who may suffer from political oppression. The commission recommended such an exception. In the work "Immigration Problem" Messrs. Jenks and Loucks say:

In the judgment of the commission, as well as of most other enlightened citizens, the United States should remain in the future, as in the past, the haven of refuge for the oppressed, whether such oppression be political or religious, and any restrictive measure should contain the provision making an exception of such cases.

Are we to overthrow all the traditions of this country, and are we to close the doors to the politically oppressed of the world? Shall we forever forsake the very principle upon which this Government was founded and under which we have made the greatest progress as a Republic that the world has ever seen? The foreign population in this country to-day is not larger in percentage than what it has been during the past 100 years. Each decade has seen an effort made to bar from this country men of a different race, who, when they first come here, have performed the hard manual labor which those who have come in previous years had finally declined to do. Is there any person who can truthfully and honestly say that the children of the immigrant are not making as great progress, if not greater, in education and in every walk of life as are the children of the native born? Is there a man who will say that the foreign-born citizen of this country and his children have not been as loyal, good, and law-abiding as the native born? If such there be, let me remind them of the degradation of the elective franchise only a few years ago in Adams County, State of Ohio, and of the regrettable incidents accompanying the exercise of the rights of the elective franchise last year in the State of Indiana. I say to you that wherever the immigrant has settled greater prosperity has come. I could perhaps allude to certain particular States in the Union where such a fact is more than noticeable. Where the immigrant has not been received with cordial treatment he has proceeded to another State, and contributed by the sweat of his brow toward its prosperity. In every fight for good government the immigrant can be found on the side seeking to better conditions.

Show me, if you will, better men than those who are foreign born or of foreign parentage in the city of New York. Mr. Justice Hughes is one of them. So are John G. Milburn, Oscar S. Strauss, Frederick R. Coudert, Morgan J. O'Brien, Mr. Justice Greenbaum, Samson Lachman, Arthur von Briesen, and numerous others.

I might call your attention to the fact that 3 judges of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, 19 of the supreme court justices of the first and second judicial districts of the State of New York, and at least 30 per cent of the last constitutional convention of the State of New York are of the same descent.

"Let us proclaim to the world that in this country, at least, we are all American citizens of equal rank, character, and quality, equal in right and equal in duty and obligation, whether that citizenship be recently acquired or whether it be by nativity," and that we welcome to our shores those who are physically, mentally, and morally capable of becoming citizens of the same type as I have just referred to, prepared to make every sacrifice that the Nation may ever require in defense of our flag and country. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I voted against this bill twice, and I voted to sustain the veto of President Taft, and would have voted to sustain the veto of President Wilson had I not been sick and absent.

I fail to understand the logic of the gentlemen who advocate this kind of legislation. I think it has the stamp of darkness, the blight of prejudice, and the curse of selfishness.

I took up this morning's RECORD and looked in it, but in vain, for that wonderful speech that was made yesterday by that grand old man, the Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois. [Applause.] He ought to have a great deal of wisdom in his head after his many years of service in the House and after his great experience in the world. Unfortunately I was not present when he delivered that speech. But in looking over the RECORD this morning I found the speech of a gentleman who had supported this bill yesterday, and one thing about it that struck me particularly and forcibly was the statement therein that this Nation of ours, as he said, would survive "because it is a Christian Nation." The gentleman was contrasting this Nation with the old nations of the world, citing the decline and fall of Rome and of some of the old Grecian States. He said this great Nation of ours will survive and work out a splendid destiny "because it is a Christian Nation." And behold this bill—a sample of our Christianity. We are urged to stand at our ports of entry and say to the poor man who can not read a few words, "Because we are Christians you can not come here. You may be honest, manly, strong, rugged, God-fearing, with the hope of a new life in your soul, and anxious for the work of common citizenship in this great country, but we, being Christians, do not want you, because you can not read." Shades of the Pharisees!

That is the way it is proposed we shall follow the teachings of the lowly Nazarene, who took unto himself the lowly, uneducated, illiterate fishermen and bade them go forth to teach the world his gospel. [Applause.] That is the Christianity that we are going to indorse in this legislation.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] challenges my statement about the fishermen being illiterate. Here is my proof (Acts iv, 4):

Now, when they beheld the boldness of Peter and John and had perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled.

We notice a remarkable circumstance when we consider the votes of some men in this House and compare them with their professions. Here we have men, when the opportunity is given to them to do something for humanity, to do something in a broad, liberal sense for the people who will make the citizens of the future, the children who work in the factories and in the canneries, when we propose to legislate to relieve them, these gentlemen not only vote against that legislation but stand here to justify their conduct and their voting. The remedy is in our own hands, and is not the foolish educational qualification which would bar needed laborers. Let us legislate for the children; let us legislate to take the burden from the women who toil; let us translate social justice into law, so that the man who works and toils will be given a fair wage and an honest return for his labor.

And in this particular instance let me remark: The great South, which is pictured here so beautifully by her orators—what a wonderful country it is; of what development it is capable—and lo and behold, the crying need of it is labor; and here the Representatives of the South are voting to keep out the very people they want. I can not understand their logic; and I ask myself, What is the "negro in the woodpile"?

Mr. Chairman, I read in the Providence Journal of yesterday morning an editorial which I think is very pertinent to the present discussion. It is entitled "Making better citizens." I read:

MAKING BETTER CITIZENS.

Every industrial corporation will find it good business to follow the plan of the Brown & Sharpe Manufacturing Co. for the instruction of foreigners in the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship. The United States needs patriotic men, and there is much good material in the aliens who come here because of the advantages offered by this country. The object of the local manufacturing company to encourage the taking out of naturalization papers and at the same time to explain the meaning of an oath of allegiance to the United States is a most praiseworthy one.

The plan for giving instruction in English to those who do not speak the language of this country insures a good groundwork for further education in the laws and customs of the United States. The next logical step is assisting the men in carrying through the naturalization process. Employers of aliens who take this course, besides obtaining more efficient workmen, render the Nation an invaluable service in raising the standard of citizenship.

That is the place to apply the educational test—when men come looking to be naturalized; no hurried grind of the mill; no perfunctory admission to citizenship, but a rigid examination on the part of the judge presiding, in order that the men may be qualified to discharge their duties as citizens. [Applause.]

President Wilson, speaking at Philadelphia to a body of newly naturalized citizens on May 10, 1915, spoke beautifully and encouragingly to those men. Let me quote him:

I certainly would not be one even to suggest that a man cease to love the home of his birth and the nation of his origin—these things are very sacred and ought not to be put out of our hearts—but it is one thing to love the place where you were born and it is another thing to dedicate yourself to the place to which you go. You can not dedicate yourself to America unless you become in every respect and with every purpose of your will thorough Americans. * * * A man does not hope for the thing that he does not believe in, and if some of us have forgotten what America believed in, you, at any rate, imported in your own hearts a renewal of the belief. That is the reason that I, for one, make you welcome. If I have in any degree forgotten what America was intended for, I will thank God if you will remind me. I was born in America. You dreamed dreams of what America was to be, and I hope you brought the dreams with you. No man that does not see visions will ever realize any high hope or undertake any high enterprise. Just because you brought your dreams with you, America is more likely to realize dreams such as you brought. You are enriching us if you came expecting us to be better than we are.

By this legislation we deny to the honest toiler, seeking a field for his enterprise and a land to realize his dreams, the opportunity for which he hungers. A cruel law, as I said before, with the stamp of darkness, the blight of prejudice, and the curse of selfishness. What is ours we would deny to others, and we prate about the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

I am proud of my citizenship in this great Republic and deeply grateful for the opportunities this land has given me. It was fashioned after the dreams of centuries by men who knew the sweetness of sacrifice. It was evolved through the genius and the sword of Washington and his brave followers, conspicuous among whom stand the names of La Fayette, Rochambeau, De Grasse, d'Estaing, and other Frenchmen whose services to America should never be forgotten. France aided us to independence with men, money, and ships. Her services have been summed up by an American writer in the following words:

> But the instincts of the French Nation were right; they assisted a people to gain their freedom, they took part in one of the great crises of modern progress, they helped the world on its onward march. * * * The reward is not to be found in more vessels sailing laden with wares, * * * but in the consciousness of the unselfish performance of good work, of assistance rendered to the cause of freedom, and to the improvement of man's lot on earth.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] in his address to the House yesterday questioned the patriotism of the foreign-born citizen.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MEEKER. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning contains every word that I uttered yesterday, and the gentleman can not find any such statement in my speech. I want to say that in no place in my remarks did I question the patriotism of any foreign-born citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. I am pleased to hear the gentleman make that statement. Therefore I take it for granted that he did not intend to make any such insinuation. Foreign-born citizens have demonstrated time and time again that they are loyal and patriotic, that they love the country of their adoption, and that they are willing at all times to protect the flag which is their flag, and the only flag under which they desire to live. [Applause.]

The history of foreign-born Americans is a history that speaks for itself, and one of which we may all be proud. [Applause.] Time does not permit me to enumerate the splendid work done by foreign-born citizens to build up our Nation.

Within the next few minutes the chairman of the Immigration Committee [Mr. BURNETT], my colleague and my friend, will in a passionate address again appeal to the House for the passage of this bill. The main reason that he will assign is that the laboring people of this country demand it, and that he feels it to be his duty to protect the American wage earner. Mr. Chairman, if it were true that this bill tends to protect the American wage earner I would not stand here to-day in opposition to it. I would rather lose my voice than oppose legislation which I knew to be for the wage earner. My record speaks for itself at all times. I have supported and advocated measures in the interests of labor, and I regret exceedingly that some gentlemen, misinformed and under the pretext of wishing to protect labor, are favoring this measure.

It has been said that we must protect the standard of the American laboring man. Within the past 20 years, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the immigration to this country was larger than ever before; but notwithstanding that large immigration the statistics show and prove that the conditions of laboring men have improved, that wages have been increased, and that the hours of labor have been decreased.

A few representatives of railroad employees are strenuously urging the passage of this bill. I wish to say to these men that the immigrants who come to this country do not and can not take the place of any engineer, fireman, conductor, or other trainman; and in spite of the large immigration, which some people fear will beat down the wages of American labor, I wish to say that within the last 12 years the wages of railway enginemen have increased 29 per cent, the firemen 32 per cent, the conductors 35 per cent, and of other trainmen 37 per cent. And what applies to railroad employees applies to all our laboring men of this country, showing clearly that immigration does not beat down the wages of the American laboring man.

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER of West Virginia. Will the gentleman tell us how much the cost of living has increased in the last 8 or 10 years?

Mr. SABATH. That is not due to immigration. The increase in the cost of living is due to the manipulations of trusts and monopolies, which some of you gentlemen on the other side have been aiding and assisting. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that any man who comes here from foreign shores participates as much in the cost of living as any native?

Mr. SABATH. There is no question about that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He spends just as much in proportion.

Mr. SABATH. In fact he pays a higher price for everything that he buys and consumes.

But the increase in price of labor applies not only to the railroad men, but it applies to all other classes of labor in the North as well as in the East. Therefore I can not understand, in view of these figures, how any man can maintain that immigration is detrimental to American labor. The immigrant performs the coarse and common labor which produces the raw material, and thereby creates a higher class of labor and a better wage follows. The man in West Virginia who works in the mine provides employment for thousands of others, the same as the man who works in the forest and the quarry. He produces the raw material which is worked into a product that creates a continuous demand for higher-paid and more skilled labor. This succession creates work for the skilled laborer, which is placed in the hands of the American laborer. This conclusively proves that the immigrant does not replace and put out of work the American laborer, but, on the contrary, furnishes him with a greater field to practice his art of skill.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, some of these gentlemen are attempting to make the House believe that they are favoring this bill because the immigration of the present day is not the same kind of immigration that we were getting 30, 40, or 50 years ago. If you will investigate the records, my friends, you will see that the same objections were then raised against the immigrants from Scotland, from England, from Germany—in the forties, the fifties, and the early eighties—as are being raised to-day against the present immigrant. I wish to assure the House that the immigration of the present day measures up to the immigration that we have been receiving heretofore. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, has the time of gentlemen on the other side been consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired except that of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, it is strange that when gentlemen come to discuss this question, instead of discussing it dispassionately so many of them undertake to make flings at the chairman of the committee and the section of the country from which I hail. Gentlemen have animadverted on the literacy conditions in my section of the country—the South. Those conditions have been deplorable, but that was not of the seeking of the people in my country; and was not and is not what is left of the South's illiteracy due to our unfortunate illiterate immigration? An immigration of illiterate, servile labor? Therefore ought not the South qualify as an expert with reference to illiteracy in immigrants?

My memory goes back to the sixties and the early seventies, when I knew how hard the struggle was for my people to keep the wolf from the door. I know that every boy or girl who could lift a hoe handle or follow a plow was requisitioned for the purpose of aiding in the support of our starving people. I know the conditions of their schoolhouses, because I attended those schools when in the cold blasts of winter the winds were whistling through the cracks of the log-cabin schoolhouses of my native State.

It was amid such conditions, Mr. Chairman, that many grew up who are now adult illiterates. But conditions are changing, and changing rapidly, and even those poor men and women are learning to read and write in those localities where illiteracy so long prevailed.

But, Mr. Chairman, instead of that being an argument against the literacy test in this bill, it seems to me that with the large number of illiterates whom we already have in our country we certainly do not want the millions of illiterates of other lands and other climes, to whom we owe no obligation, to come here for the purpose of adding to our illiteracy and depriving our people of an education. We of the Southland feel we have all the illiteracy that we can struggle with for years to come. [Applause.]

Gentlemen have elaborated on the education that the second generation of these aliens get, and on down to the third generation. Well, Mr. Chairman, is it right for men who toil, women and children who are dependent on the laboring men of this country, to suffer starvation in order to wait for the second generation? It is the first generation, Mr. Chairman, that is bringing about the trouble all over this land. It was the first generation at Youngstown a few weeks ago that brought about that riot that the distinguished Member from that district has spoken of. It was that generation that drove out thousands of Americans, native and naturalized. Surplus men were kept there by the steel barons, and as was stated by the industrial commission in this city, two men were kept for every job. Men, heads of families—and we have the records here—worked for $200 a year and had to support a family on that small amount. Sanitary conditions brought about by such a low standard of wages and low standard of living thus set up were such that it drove out the toilers, with the result that property was destroyed, men were murdered, riot ensued. Over 71 per cent of these people being from the southern part of Europe, practically every one of this surplus of cheap, servile labor this literacy test would have kept out of the country and thus tended to prevent such an awful state of affairs.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COADY] said he had a contempt for men with foreign names who had written letters and signed petitions to him to keep out those of their own race. Mr. Chairman, he has rather a peculiar name, the name of COADY, and I wish the gentleman were here, in order that I might ask him if some of his kinspeople from the other side of the water were to come into his home and take the bread and meat out of the mouths of his children, if because they were his ancient cousins he would allow them to consume that for which he was toiling and suffering. [Applause.] If he undertook to put them out, as we want to keep that class out by this bill, according to the logic of the gentleman they could say to him, "Mr. COADY, we are your cousins, and therefore we are entitled to come in and take the bread from your children." That is the argument of the gentleman.

Before our Committee on Immigration appeared a gentleman who pretended to be a representative of the United Garment Workers of America. He held no commission to speak for them. Their officers have sent to Members of this Congress letters and petitions from the United Garment Workers of America—Jewish people, many of them, I have no doubt. I hold here a letter signed by Mr. Barger, general secretary of the United Garment Workers of America, saying:

> We are firmly convinced that this bill means much to the United States and its citizens. As a result of our present law of immigration we find growing up in our country colonies the members of which never become Americanized and are under the influence and power of a foreign Government. We feel unrestricted immigration is a menace to American living standards and can not but result in disaster, not only to the workingmen but to the small business men as well.

[Applause.]

There are numbers of these letters from labor-union officials. Seven hundred thousand workmen in Massachusetts—the State from which certain gentlemen from Boston come, where they assemble themselves in a little coterie and imagine that Boston is all of Massachusetts and most part of the United States, so far as this question is concerned. [Applause.]

These are the workingmen of the country; and we hear the same thing from the gentleman's [O'SHAUNESSY] State of Rhode Island. He represents a certain class there, but the workingmen, the toiling men, whose labor is being beaten down and whose standards of living are being undermined, are praying for the passage of this bill.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I can not yield to the gentleman; I have not the time.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The gentleman said something about Rhode Island and I wanted to correct him.

Mr. BURNETT. When I speak of Rhode Island I speak the truth.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I want to say that my constituency is a complex one——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I object to the gentleman's making a speech in my time.

Now, let me read what the Immigrants' Review says about them and their condition. I have here the Immigrants in America Review, and on page 14 of that review for March, 1915, published in the city of New York, it says:

> In regard to the schools, there are 2,565,012 foreign born in this country 21 years of age and over that can not speak English and only 35,614 are attending public schools presumably to learn.

Only 35,000 out of more than two millions and a half are trying to learn to speak English. Mr. Chairman, they are the ones—the illiterates—that have congested the labor market in the coal fields of Pennsylvania, and yet the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] talked with crocodile tears in his eyes about the poor foreigners being driven back to their native lands by this legislation, but he never said a word about the poor Americans that the foreigners were driving out and whose places they were taking and whose families were being made to suffer by such ruinous cutthroat competition. [Applause.]

I can disagree with my Republican friends on the question of the tariff, and I can see where they may go to the laboring man and contend that the high tariff is for the good of the laborer. On the other hand, I can consistently argue that it is not that way, but how a man that favors a protective tariff to protect the products of labor of the factory or mine in which laborers work can favor an open door to those who come here to beat down the price of labor and to directly compete with the labor itself is something that I can not understand, and such a protectionist can not explain or reconcile. [Applause.]

They are the men who in the gentleman's State advertised a few years ago "Laborers wanted; Poles and Italians preferred." Why? For the same reason they preferred them over there at Youngstown—just as the railroads preferred the illiterate Mexicans in Kansas, when the letter of the railroad attorney was written to the Kansas delegation two years ago asking them to oppose the literacy test, because it was said the literacy test would keep out the Mexicans, 90 per cent of whom were said to be illiterate. They wanted these illiterate foreigners to beat down the price of labor.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield. I stated at the beginning I did not have the time to yield, and I decline to yield, because I have only a short time in which to reply to all these innuendoes of gentlemen who are from the Steel Trust districts where they want a surplus of servile cheap labor from abroad to beat down American wages and standards of living. [Applause.] I never heard the gentleman utter a word in the interest of the boy or the girl of the American working for the Steel Trust in his State, not one. Gentlemen, who favor this bill? Great organizations of farmers in the North as well as in the South. I have here the last declaration of the Grange, with more than a million dues-paying farmers as members in the North, declaring, absolutely and distinctly, in favor of this bill.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I decline to yield, and I hope the gentleman will respect my declaration.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I wish——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the protection of the Chair and has a right not to be interrupted.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I know that the "galled jade" winces, and I intend to apply the spur where it ought to go. [Applause.] Here is the declaration of the farmers' organization:

> While recognizing that ignorance is not a badge of dishonesty and crime, we are satisfied that the higher the average of education among our people the better it is for our happiness and prosperity and stability. When the war now raging in the East is over and peace restored, Europe will unquestionably dump untold numbers of undesirables upon our shores. The better elements from these countries will not be permitted to leave if such a thing can be prevented. Right now is our accepted time for action.

That is the National Grange or Patrons of Husbandry of the North, Mr. Chairman. Then there are the great Farmers' Union of the South; the great Federation of Labor, with 3,000,000 toilers; the railroad brotherhoods, with over 500,000 members, which have indorsed it. Then there are the patriotic organizations that gentlemen have attempted to decry, which have indorsed it. And in attacking those organizations gentlemen have undertaken to inject a religious prejudice into the matter—it has come entirely from and been by those opposed to the bill—knowing that it is the song of the dying swan. One man undertook to pose as a Presbyterian elder and represent the great Catholic communities of the country. I answer that by reading from the declaration of a Member of this House who is himself a Knight of Columbus and a Roman Catholic. I read now from the speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], criticizing a man named E. L. Scharfe, who perambulates around this Capitol and the House Office Building claiming an ability to deliver the Catholic vote, but who has been expelled from the Knights of Columbus and been repudiated by the church officials. Congressman BEN JOHNSON said on this floor:

In that connection he, E. L. Scharfe, also said that he was a Knight of Columbus, and through that organization he could surely and certainly deliver those votes to me. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I am proud of being both a Catholic and a Knight of Columbus, and I emphatically deny that this man can do anything of the kind.

And further, on February 3, 1914, this distinguished gentleman from Kentucky said in this House:

It is not pretended by anybody that any provision of this bill is aimed at Catholic France, or at Ireland, or at Holland, or at Germany; neither is it aimed at England, where there is a union of church and state. Those who favor this bill out of apprehension of a union of church and state in this country are without argument, while those who oppose it simply because the others are for it are not sufficiently broad, and do not search for potent and substantial reasons beyond those fallacies.

Now, let us dismiss the goblin feature of this discussion and turn to serious questions.

In arriving at a determination to cast my vote for this bill, I have looked beyond conditions of to-day, although I believe that the present demands its passage.

The rich everywhere—all the world over—can take care of themselves. That is the case in the United States. It is the poor who should have our solicitude. The poorest of our fellow men are those who have to do hard, manual labor for a daily wage in order to support their families. They must have employment, and their earnings must not be minimized by those of other countries who have our sympathies. Every nation first owes support to its own deserving poor and assistance to its own struggling wage earners. Our country must observe that rule.

Gentlemen, it looks to me as though there was a lot of the right kind of religion in that as well as a lot of good sound common horse sense, uttered by that distinguished gentleman who has often been honored by his people—his people who honored themselves when they honored him. And his splendid service here for his country and his people is well characterized in the words of President Woodrow Wilson, who declared a year ago that Congressman BEN JOHNSON was "a terror to crooks and grafters."

Away back yonder in time the statement was made that he that provideth not for his own household had denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel, and at the same time was asked the question, How much better is a man than a sheep? To-day that question comes ringing down through the 2,000 years and is asked of those gentlemen who want to protect the great industries of the country and yet are not willing to protect the men who toil in those industries—how much better is a man than a sheep? [Applause.] Oh, these gentlemen from Bosting, I want to read just a little extract from Hon. Henry J. Skeffington, the commissioner of immigration at Boston. This United States official says in his official report for 1915:

One of the notable effects of our present immigration policy is seen in the gradual change of the character of population. The unrestricted inflow of immigrants directly tends to drive out the native stock, which obviously is unable to compete with those maintaining a lower standard of living. In Massachusetts the proportion of native stock gradually has diminished, in part through emigration to other States, but largely by failure on account of economic causes to reproduce itself. A similar decline has begun among those races that made up the bulk of our immigration during the greater part of the last century.

The foreign element of the population of Massachusetts, according to statistics, constitutes more than 60 per cent of the total population. These figures suggest the price that is being paid for unrestricted immigration.

Because we see the necessity of restricting immigration we hope the literacy test or some equally effective measure will be passed by the next Congress.

And among other things he mentions a condition which this bill would remedy when he says:

Evidence continues to accumulate in favor of higher and higher standards of medical inspection of immigrants. Of 334 alien residents who were reported by State officials in New England as public charges on account of mental or physical conditions existing prior to landing, very few received medical certificates of any sort at the time of arrival. These public-charge cases related largely to conditions "whose demonstration at the time of arrival calls for careful time-consuming mental examinations or organized laboratory work," facilities for which have been conspicuous by their absence.

And here is an editorial from the Dedham Transcript, of Dedham, Mass., of February 12, 1916:

AFTER THE WAR COMES THE DELUGE.

President Wilson and former President Roosevelt are strongly urging the need of preparedness. In this matter they have behind them the best sentiment in the country. The United States must not lag behind in this matter and so find itself in an awkward position to defend its people and their interests when the emergency arises. Free America should be ever ready to maintain the integrity of free Americans.

Not alone should we be prepared to face our enemies and a possible invasion of our shores by foes from lands across the sea, but we should be prepared to meet the great problem that is sure to be ours when the great European war is ended—the problem of immigration.

With the ending of that bloody contest there is sure to be an unprecedented rush to this country of the peoples in the lands now at war and from others not yet engaged in the murderous struggle. In 1914 the immigrant aliens to seek sanctuary on our shores numbered 1,403,081, but in 1915 the number dropped to 434,244. War put up a barrier last year and that kept the number down, but once let that bar be removed, as it would be by a declaration of peace, and our country will be flooded by an army of undesirables.

Now is the time for our Nation to act. Now is the accepted time for it to close the gates to a horde whose coming to our shores will swell the masses of illiterates already here and create panic conditions in our marts of labor. The quality of the peoples who will come to our shores after the war will be very poor. On this point all who have given the matter any study agree.

At least let us keep out the illiterates, and this can best be accomplished by the passing by Congress of the Burnett bill.

"After the war comes the deluge." Gentlemen, there is no question about that. I have not time to read from the strong logical statements of President Gompers two years ago and Secretary Morrison last year and this year before the committee, and the statement of Prof. Jenks, who was a former member of the commission, calling attention to previous wars; but when the flags are furled and some great nations are defeated, who doubts that the best of those people will stay at home and the worst will be sent here? Mr. Chairman, I saw that condition in our own Southland. Those who were among the best stayed during the Civil War, and many of those who were not the best left for other sections. After that war was over—after the Stars and Bars was furled forever—those who stayed were the ones who rebuilt and who rehabilitated my desolated and ruined country. So, Mr. Chairman, it will be on the other side after this terrible conflict there. The patriotic people who love their homes, who love their families, moved and inspired by the spirit of true patriotism and love of country, will remain there; but the slums of the cities, the crippled, the defectives, the dependents, the despirited, and delinquents will be dumped upon our shores, and far worse conditions, I fear, will prevail than any of us can imagine. We should prepare for such a possible and probable emergency. No wonder every mail, gentlemen, brings you protests from men who labor, getting good wages now, it is true; but they can look into the future, a year or more, and see confronting them millions from those desolated foreign lands—from portions of southern Europe—sent over here. The profit-making foreign steamship companies will renew their activities and gather them in throughout those countries in order to make up for the transportation charges that they are not getting now, and then your working people will rise to condemn the man that now treads upon those asking relief.

If the deluge does not come, gentlemen, no harm can come from this legislation. If I am correct in my prophecy, and I believe I am, then certainly there could be no better time for the passage of this law than the present time.

Now, what are the facts in regard to crime? Gentlemen, here is a statement by Charles Overlander, one of the commissioners of State prisons in New York, in which he says:

That our records in county and State will show that foreign illiterates have committed at least 75 per cent of the entire crimes.

That is from Buffalo, N. Y., where the gentleman lives, and he is a member of the New York prisons commission. Gentlemen, you will find it that way. Why, gentlemen say, oh, it does not keep out the crooks, it does not keep out the educated rascals. Gentlemen, this bill tightens up and strengthens far more than our laws have ever been tightened and strengthened along that line. But suppose that were true, and we do not claim that the literacy test will keep them out. It is not proposed as a substitute for tests for keeping out educated criminals, literate insane, and other admittedly undesirables. The bill keeps them out, and, gentlemen, the reading test would keep out hundreds and thousands of illiterates who are such easy tools and pliant dupes in the hands of the literate Black Hand leader, under the padrone system, under the boss in the coal mines, and the corrupt ward heeler. If you defeat this bill and desire to take the consequences, then you can take the sweet unction to your soul that you have thrust a dagger in the vitals of the men who toil. Talk about men not being in favor of a literacy test and protecting labor by this legislation and yet having labor cards in their pockets and believing in the principles of organized labor!

My friends, when they say that the people of northwestern Europe will not do the work they ought to do—since when? Since they were driven out by a lower standard of wages, by inferior and lower conditions of living. It has not happened in the South, nor in the West. I heard my good friend, Mr. HELGESEN, from North Dakota, while a member of my committee a few years ago, resent the imputation that the splendid Scandinavian citizenship throughout the West would not do the work. He said they did do it until some boss of cheap foreign laborers came and established a standard of living and a condition of wages that no decent white man could compete with. That is what happened. You talk about the textile mills all over the country, and child labor. Go with me to my home—and, by the way, gentlemen have sought to inject the child-labor question. Gentlemen, I have always been in favor of laws in that regard. I was specifically paired for the child-labor bill recently and I voted for the bill creating the Children's Bureau. I voted for the child-labor bill last Congress. Why, when I was but a boy, as a member of the State legislature, in 1884, when we passed the first child-labor law that any State in the Union had [applause], people came from Massachusetts and asked to establish cotton mills at my town, and asked me to sign a petition to the Alabama Legislature to repeal it. I said, "No, gentlemen; I helped to pass that law and I am not going to help repeal it." Go with me to the textile mills of my State and I will show you there girls and women—many of them with hearts as white as the untrodden snow, every one of them speaking the English language and many of them toiling their lives out in order to aid some stricken father or mother or child. I realize some of you gentlemen are unfortunate and feel in a middle of a fix. I have heard some gentlemen say, "I believe the bill is right and I wish I could vote for it, but I can not do so on account of the foreign citizenship of my immediate community." [Applause.]

Now, is not that an unfortunate condition! I thank God, gentlemen, it has not come to the South yet, and I hope the time will never be when it will come to our country. I thank God that the great and boundless West has, at least, not yet been invaded with that class of immigration. We are not striking down the Irishman and it does not touch one of them. It does not touch the Scotchman or the Englishman or the German or the Frenchman or the Hollander or any of the Scandinavian people, or the Swiss up in the midst of God's snowy mountains. They are not the men whom we are after because our doors are wide open, and when I was with the Immigration Commission at Hamburg I said to some of those great German people, "Why do not more of these good people come to our country?" They said, "One reason is that we are prospering greatly. Another reason is because you are getting too many of those people from along the borders of the Mediterranean and our laboring people will not stand competition with them. We do not want our families raised in such surroundings and subject to such contamination." [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, in regard to the Jewish people the law is even more liberal than before——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the word "alien" wherever used in this act shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States; but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed or citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States. That the term "United States" as used in the title as well as in the various sections of this act shall be construed to mean the United States and any waters, territory, or other place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, except the Isthmian Canal Zone; but if any alien shall leave the Canal Zone or any insular possession of the United States and attempt to enter any other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, nothing contained in this act shall be construed as permitting him to enter under any other conditions than those applicable to all aliens. That the term "seaman" as used in this act shall include every person signed on the ship's articles and employed in any capacity on board any vessel arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place.

That this act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the General Government thereof designated by appropriate legislation of said Government.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, on page 1, which carry the first definition in the bill, which provides—

That the word "alien" wherever used in this act shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States; but this definition shall not be held to include Indians—

And so forth.

This is a new provision, Mr. Chairman, and I am of the opinion——

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 3 to 7, inclusive, strike out the following language: "That the word 'alien' wherever used in this act shall include any person not a native-born or naturalized citizen of the United States; but this definition shall not be held to include Indians of the United States not taxed or citizens of the islands under the jurisdiction of the United States."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection that this law should not apply to all the immigrants, but the tendency and aim is that it should apply to all aliens. Due to our lax naturalization laws we have in this country thousands upon thousands of residents of the United States who are not as yet American citizens, and therefore it matters not whether they have been residents for 5, 10, or 20 years, if they have not been naturalized, and they are obliged to visit the old country, perhaps for the last time, to see their parents or a dying brother or sister, they can not reenter unless they are subjected as an immigrant will be, if this bill passes, to the same rigid examination and inspection that this bill provides for. The hardship will not be so great upon the male citizens as upon the female, because they have no reason to apply for citizenship.

And certainly we have a great number of splendid women who have resided here for many years who are not American citizens, but who are residents and make this country, and have made this country, their permanent home.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman has overlooked that provision at the foot of page 10, which allows aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens and aliens returning from a temporary absence to an unreliquished United States domicile of seven consecutive years to be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. SABATH. I have not.

Mr. GARDNER. Is not that the objection the gentleman has made?

Mr. SABATH. I have not overlooked that provision. But how many women will go and make application or file declarations to become American citizens? The gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. GARDNER. It does not require that.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman will allow me to read it, it says:

That aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens, and aliens returning from a temporary absence to an unrelinquished United States domicile of seven consecutive years, may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor and under such conditions as he may prescribe.

The two classes will be admitted—aliens who declare their intention to become citizens and aliens returning after temporary absence.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I understand the provisions. They must first be residents of this country for at least seven years. But if in between that time they might have visited their homes, as many of these girls and women do—within the seven years—and will try to visit their homes again within the next seven years, they will be subjected to the provisions of this act. And for that reason I believe that that distinction should be eliminated and that the law should apply to the immigrants whom you are desirous to legislate against.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, this is merely a definition of an alien. Certainly that is the correct definition; it is a commonsense, logical definition, and, not only that, it is the definition of the Supreme Court of the United States itself, as it has virtually announced in a certain case. They are protected all the way through the bill. There is nothing in the world in the suggestion of the gentleman that it denies any protection whatever; and therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be now closed on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that debate on this amendment be now closed.

Mr. GARDNER. On this paragraph?

Mr. SABATH. No; on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question or two in regard to the insular possessions.

Mr. BURNETT. The insular possessions?

Mr. MANN. The bill for the first time provides that an alien living in one of the insular possessions of the United States, in going to any other insular possession or into the United States, shall come under the terms of this act. First, may I ask, under that definition is Hawaii an insular possession——

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Or an integral part of the United States?

Mr. BURNETT. Well, it is a Territory now, as I understand.

Mr. MANN. I understand it is a Territory. Still, I ask, as I suppose the gentleman is informed, if under the construction of this bill Hawaii is an insular possession or not?

Mr. BURNETT. It is a part of the United States and the people there are regarded as citizens of the United States, and are so recognized.

Mr. MANN. Of course, this language does not apply to anyone except an alien. It does not apply to a citizen of the Philippine Islands or a citizen of Porto Rico. But this is what I wanted to get at: I am not certain about Hawaii, but I am quite certain about Porto Rico. Will all people coming from Porto Rico to the United States, that board a steamship, be required to declare whether they are aliens or citizens in the same manner as they are required to declare when coming from a foreign country to the United States?

Mr. BURNETT. I understand that citizens of Porto Rico would not have to declare. Aliens coming from Porto Rico would have to do so.

Mr. MANN. Does not everybody have to declare now?

Mr. BURNETT. From Porto Rico?

Mr. MANN. In coming from any place.

Mr. BURNETT. Declare what?

Mr. MANN. Make some declaration so as to know whether they are covered by the terms of the bill or not.

Mr. BURNETT. The manifest, you mean? Certainly there has to be a declaration on the manifest kept by the ship companies.

Mr. MANN. How do you ascertain whether a man is an alien or not when he comes on board the steamship?

Mr. BURNETT. He has to state it.

Mr. MANN. He has to be asked, then, does he not?

Mr. BURNETT. There are forms of questions asked him.

Mr. MANN. Do you not have to ask everybody?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is what I say. He has to declare whether he is an alien or not?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What I want to know is whether everybody who comes from Porto Rico and Hawaii is going to be put to the manifest nuisance each time of making a declaration of whether they are citizens or not, there being very few aliens who travel between these countries.

Mr. BURNETT. My understanding is, so far as Porto Rico is concerned, that they would, but they would not if they came from Hawaii and the Philippine Islands.

Mr. MANN. Of course I can see the reason for applying it to the Canal Zone, because they are not restricted when they go to the Canal Zone. But where you provide as to Porto Rico, for instance, that an alien can not go there except under the terms of this bill, I confess I can see no reason why you should subject everybody that travels between the United States and Porto Rico to the annoyance of making a declaration each time that they are citizens of the United States. People do not like it, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. Well, I know it is a nuisance.

Mr. MANN. If there were many aliens traveling, that might be a good thing, but there are not.

Mr. GARDNER. Is it not true that every time I cross the border to Canada or back I have to make that declaration?

Mr. BURNETT. No; an arrangement is provided.

Mr. GARDNER. I have to make it.

Mr. BURNETT. No. I thought the gentleman meant those coming over to this country.

Mr. GARDNER. There is no greater hardship in coming from Porto Rico.

Mr. MANN. Nobody likes it coming from Canada, and unless there is reason for it I can see no reason why they should be subjected to the annoyance. Now, are the people who go to Porto Rico required to come within the terms of the act?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I can see no reason why, having made the application going to Porto Rico, you should bother them again coming from Porto Rico to the United States, and traveling back and forth. It is a new thing in the bill. I do not know who got it up.

Mr. BURNETT. The trouble is Porto Rico has been used so often as a stepping-stone from other countries, to come from there, and it was thought best by the department to make that requirement.

Mr. SABATH. And for statistical reasons and purposes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] a question.

Mr. BURNETT. There is nothing pending, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, yes; I am opposing the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I understood it was withdrawn.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that it is not permissible to discuss a pro forma amendment in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SAUNDERS). Of course, the motion to strike out the last word and the debate on it pro and con are matters of convention here. If the rule is insisted upon, of course, any amendment in the Committee of the Whole must be debated on the merits of the amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 13 to 15, on page 2, for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Alabama a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out lines 13 to 15 on page 2.

Mr. BURNETT. What lines did the gentleman say?

Mr. BENNET. Lines 13 to 15, on page 2; that is, in the committee print. In the Union Calendar print those lines are 10 to 12, on page 2.

The question I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama is this: That language in lines from 10 to 12 is substantially, I think, taken from section 6 of chapter 453 of the act approved February 6, 1905. It was in the first bill for the regulation of the Philippine Islands, and under section 38 that language is exempted from the repeal clause. On page 21 of the bill, lines 23 and 24, it is provided that "this act shall not be construed to repeal, alter, or amend section 6, chapter 453, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905." That is, that the provisions of this section—section 11—shall be exempted.

This is rather an important matter, as it governs the enforcement of the laws of the Philippine Islands; and what I wanted to ask the gentleman from Alabama is, what would be the effect if this law passes in the form in which it is—exempting that particular law by section 38, reversing that in part by section 11, and substituting, under section 1, a portion of the language? I would like to ask the gentleman about that. I see he has not only his own large ability, but he has active assistants. I ask him what the situation would be?

Mr. BURNETT. That would not change it, I think. It would go on just as it was before. We have had the law that the gentleman speaks of for some time. I do not think this would affect it. That is the information I get.

Mr. BENNET. I recognize, I will say to the gentleman, that the Philippine act is still in force, having been exempted from repeal by the act of 1907; but as any lawyer, I think, would be, I am a little bit anxious as to the effect upon an act which is in existence, which is exempted from repeal in one part and then as to which there is elsewhere this curious language, which I never saw in any other statute, "and the provisions of this section shall be excepted from that portion of section 38 of this act"——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from what page he is reading?

Mr. BENNET. Page 21.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And what line?

Mr. BENNET. Line 21, in the regular Union Calendar print of the bill, No. 36. It is not the committee print. The language is:

> And the provisions of this section shall be excepted from that portion of section 38 of this act which provides that this act shall not be considered to repeal, alter, or amend section 6—

And so forth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that you can do such a thing as repeal a law for one purpose and then continue it for another. I never saw it done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimou consent, Mr. Chairman, for two minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Section 6 is the passenger act, as the gentleman will remember.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. If the gentleman will turn to his own bill, on page 62, line 11—not the committee print, but the calendar print, No. 36—he will see that this act is there referred to as "Section 6, chapter 453, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905." Then there is this further language, "or the act approved August 2, 1882." And then, if he will go back to page 21, he will find the same language: "Section 6, chapter 453, third session Fifty-eighth Congress, approved February 6, 1905, or the act approved August 2, 1882."

Now, what I want to get at is the legal construction, because the question of immigration into the Philippines is a very important matter, and I agree with the gentleman as to the exclusion of some people that are now being excluded from the Philippines, and we do not want to do anything that will hamper the exclusion from the Philippine Islands by those people on whom is cast the duty of the execution of the laws. The gentleman will know that the most technical part of the enforcement of the immigration law is the Chinese portion of the law, and it is the Chinese that would not take the thirtieth part of a second to see any loophole that might be afforded them. If the gentleman has no objection, I would be glad if he would agree to pass over that section until we can pass upon it. I frankly say I am not prepared to pass upon it now.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. It is provided in section 1:

That this act shall be enforced in the Philippine Islands by officers of the General Government thereof designated by appropriate legislation of said Government.

It is provided in section 6 of the Philippine act:

That the immigration laws of the United States in force in the Philippine Islands shall be administered by officers of the General Government thereof designated by appropriate legislation of said Government.

Now, this specifically says that the bill shall be enforced in accordance with the provisions of the act, so far as the Philippine Islands are concerned. Two years ago we put in at the end of the bill, in the repealing section, a provision excepting section 6 of the Philippine act from repeal; but when we came to the matrons and surgeons on board ship, in section 11, which the gentleman has recently been reading from, we made an exception to the exception.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman is quite in error. Section 11 is the one that relates to epidemics, and not to the matrons and surgeons.

Mr. GARDNER. That has been changed from section 11 as it was.

Mr. BENNET. I also call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his other statement, that they put it in two years ago, is erroneous. It is a part of the existing law.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes. The gentleman is right. I was looking at the wrong section of the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. I suggest to the gentleman that this matter be passed over temporarily.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent that it be passed over temporarily for the purpose of looking into it. I am not captious about it.

Mr. BURNETT. I make that request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this section be passed temporarily, to be returned to on his motion. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $8 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted as provided in this act, entering the United States: Provided, That children under 16 years of age who accompany their father or their mother shall not be subject to said tax. The said tax shall be paid to the collector of customs of the port or customs district to which said alien shall come, or, if there be no collector at such port or district, then the collector nearest thereto, by the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States, or by the alien himself if he does not come by a vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance or vehicle or when collection from the master, agent, owner, or consignee of the vessel, transportation line, or other conveyance, or vehicle bringing such alien to the United States is impracticable. The tax imposed by this section shall be a lien upon the vessel or other vehicle of carriage or transportation bringing such aliens to the United States, and shall be a debt in favor of the United States against the owner or owners of such vessel or other vehicle, and the payment of such tax may be enforced by any legal or equitable remedy. That the said tax shall not be levied on account of aliens who enter the United States from the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Republic of China, or the Republic of Mexico for a temporary stay, nor on account of otherwise admissible residents of any possession of the United States, nor on account of aliens in transit through the United States, nor upon aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory, and the Commissioner General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of Labor shall issue rules and regulations and prescribe the conditions necessary to prevent abuse of the exceptions: Provided, That the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, by agreement with transportation lines, as provided in section 23 of this act, may arrange in some other manner for the payment of the tax imposed by this section upon any or all aliens seeking admission from foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That said tax, when levied upon aliens entering the Philippine Islands, shall be paid into the treasury of said islands, to be expended for the benefit of such islands: Provided further, That in the cases of aliens applying for admission from foreign contiguous territory and rejected, the head tax collected shall upon application, upon a blank which shall be furnished and explained to him, be refunded to the alien.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BELL: Amend, on page 2, line 14, by striking out "8" and inserting "10."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. BENNET. I move to strike out "8" and insert "6."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and myself have always agreed on three things in connection with aliens: First, that they ought to be well treated after they get here; second, in relation to strict naturalization laws; and, third, that a high head tax ought not to be imposed for restrictive purposes. Now, I want to call the attention of the gentleman, the chairman of the committee, and the Committee of the Whole to the situation. We are committed to the policy of supporting the immigration system through the head tax, and I know that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] does not desire to raise a dollar more than is necessary for that purpose, and does not desire a high head tax for restrictive purposes. Now, what does our head tax do? If you will look at the report of the Commissioner of Immigration for this year, on page 34, you will find that he says that up to the end of this fiscal year there has been collected over $9,000,000 in excess of expenditures; and in the expenditures are included every building at Ellis Island, every building at Angel Island, every building in the port of Philadelphia, every building in the southern ports and everywhere. The cost of all those buildings has been paid out of the head tax, and still we have an excess of $9,000,000 that we have collected from these immigrants.

Now, I dissented from the report of the Immigration Commission, of which the gentleman and I were members; but I said then, and I stand by it now, that I thought there ought to be more of a restriction placed on unmarried male aliens or married aliens not accompanied by their wives and families. Now, I want to put it very frankly to the gentleman from Alabama. Neither he nor I can prove, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL] also can not prove, that any such sum as $10 per head is needed for the support of the establishment. If the gentleman from Alabama is correct in his belief, and if we are going to have a flood of immigration after the war, a million or twelve hundred thousand, then we shall collect in one years $10,000,000 under the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL], and the expenditures of running the bureau are less than $3,000,000.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. I wonder if the gentleman has forgotten that his statement is exaggerated, because the head tax is not collected on children under 16 years of age?

Mr. BENNET. I acknowledge frankly that the gentleman from California is correct. I had forgotten that for the moment.

I am in sympathy with that part of the bill which attempts to put a higher head tax on the bird of passage, and I am glad to see the part of the bill which exempts children; but the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and myself being on the same ground on this amendment, I want to say to him, until there is proof that we need more than $6, do not let us go up any higher. I am willing to go as high as $6 for the purpose of paying the expenses of the administration of the law. I offer the gentleman a fair bargain, an even division between what he suggests and the amount in the present law, and I do not believe that in his heart he favors either $10 or $8.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated that the head tax is entirely removed from children under 16 years of age.

Mr. BENNET. It is only removed from children under 16 years of age who come in with their parents.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; who come in with their parents. Now, I do not know what the average family is, or how many children usually come in with the head of a family.

Mr. BENNET. I do not know.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I doubt if the $8 tax will yield as much revenue to the Government as the $4 tax on all the family.

Mr. BENNET. I will say that if it does not, we have $9,000,000, which will run the department over three years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, the gentleman from New York is conspicuously active in encouraging expenditures and opposing the raising of revenue, and we will need all that to meet the bills the gentleman wants to contract.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, the gentleman is without foundation for that statement.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not the gentleman for practically unlimited expenditure for the Navy and the Army; and if the Government has got more revenue from this tax than is needed for the Immigration Service, we will need it to apply to his purchases.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman and I voted the same way on the military bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. We were not together on all the votes in relation to it.

Mr. BENNET. I was an earlier convert than the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I think the tax should be left as it is. If the heads of the family should be permitted to come in for $8, I doubt if the Government would get as much revenue as it gets now; all except the men without families, the birds of passage, as the gentleman called them awhile ago, and there is no reason why they should not pay $8. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. AUSTIN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Tennessee rise?

Mr. AUSTIN. I want to get into the debate in a parliamentary way.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been one speech in favor of the amendment and one against it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. And I ask for unanimous consent to speak for five minutes afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection to these requests?

There was no objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would really like to have an opportunity to vote to increase rather than decrease this head tax. I can very well understand, in view of the position of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], that he is in favor of any proposition that will aid in the increase of immigration to this country. In 1913 there landed in this country over 1,400,000 immigrants. The literacy test would have reduced that 300,000, leaving 1,100,000. In 1914 there landed 1,200,000, and the enforcement of this proposed measure of literacy would have reduced it to 900,000.

The governor of New York, I think the last Democratic governor of the Empire State, issued a call for a conference of the various governors of the States to provide for meeting the enormous expense to the taxpayers of New York and other States on account of caring for the foreign immigrants who are filling their asylums and other public institutions, causing a very large expenditure, I think, of $4,000,000 annually for this additional burden on the taxpayers of the State of New York alone. The great State of Pennsylvania had an additional burden of about two and one-half or three million dollars on account of caring for the sick, helpless, and insane dumped on the shores of America by a greedy, avaricious foreign steamship trust. So if we can increase the head tax and reduce immigration and keep down this enormous expense to the Empire and other States complained of by the late Gov. Dix, we will be doing a great and patriotic thing.

When the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] computes the amount of the present head tax collected at the various ports, there is another side of the question as to what their landing means in the way of caring for those aliens in State institutions in New York, Pennsylvania, and every other State where there is a large number of them living, either permanently or temporarily. So if we have a large amount over and above the necessary expenses of the Immigration Bureau, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], instead of devising a scheme which will add additional burdens to his people in caring for this expense, should offer an amendment which will transfer some of the surplus to the State of New York, which is now appealing through a Democratic governor for aid throughout the country, and thus help New York and other States to meet this additional burden.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. If I have the time.

Mr. SABATH. Is the gentleman speaking for the great States of New York and Pennsylvania, and has either of the States made any request for a part of this fund to be turned over to them?

Mr. AUSTIN. The governor of New York, as I stated a few minutes ago, and I thought I made it plain, wanted a conference of the various governors of the States to devise means for coming to the relief of the people of New York and other States who have this extraordinary burden as the result of unrestricted immigration.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, if I can have a minute and a half I would like to answer that.

Mr. BURNETT. I am willing that the gentleman should have the time.

Mr. BENNET. I think it is true that Gov. Glynn did issue a call, as the gentleman has stated, and then he ran for reelection and was beaten by 175,000 majority. So the State did not indorse his call. Of course, we have insane people in our State, as they have in Tennessee, but we put ours in asylums. [Laughter.] But the number of aliens in the insane asylums in our State is not out of proportion.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. My time has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. I want to say that speaking of the governor of New York coming up for reelection, one of the most faithful opponents of the immigration bill was our friend Mr. Goldfogle, who was also defeated at the last election.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; Mr. Goldfogle was defeated because he was charged with not opposing the immigration bill to the best of his ability. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, these statements are foreign to the proposition, and, in fact, the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] would be foreign, because if it were to amount to a hundred million dollars I would not vote for a cent of it going to support the alien insane in New York or any other State. I am supporting this $8 proposition. The bill as I introduced it called for $6. The committee in its wisdom thought, and after deliberation and discussion decided, that on account of the fact that since the law now is that every member of the family has to pay $4 head tax that there would be a great reduction in the funds and that this fund ought to be at least self-sustaining. Not only that, but I concur with the view that while, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has said, I do not believe in bringing about any great restriction of immigration by an excessive head tax—and I never have favored that proposition—at the same time I do think and the committee felt that people coming here and bringing but little with them, coming to a ready-made civilization, to ready-made favorable conditions, ought to contribute something to paying the expense of the Government in admitting them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did not the Supreme Court sustain the head tax, rather indicating that they did it because the Government had the right to levy a tax that would cover the cost to the Government of enforcing the immigration law?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; that was some years ago, when the 50 cents was first put on; but since that time this Congress has diverted this fund from the immigration fund and it now goes into the General Treasury. In the first place we required all except $2,500,000 to be covered into the Federal Treasury, but in some way it was gotten through Congress on an appropriation bill that all should go there.

Mr. MANN. Where it went would make no difference. The theory of Congress in levying the head tax was that it was doing it for the purpose of paying the expense that the Government was put to by reason of immigration.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And I think that is what the Supreme Court held.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I think it has never been questioned since that time. While the Supreme Court so held, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], it has never been questioned that the money could be used in other ways, especially since the Congress itself diverted it. It seems to me that the reduction of the number of people who have to pay the head tax will take off a great deal of money, and then we believe that the enforcement of the literacy test will reduce the number of immigrants by some 200,000 in normal times. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] insists that there will be much less; that there will be no immigration.

If his contention is correct, certainly there ought to be a very great increase made. I am not for the $10 proposition offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL]. He was once a valuable member of the Committee on Immigration, always rendering great service, and his contention has always been in favor of a head tax for restrictive purposes. I have not concurred in that opinion, but do believe that now, on account of the increased expenses, it is necessary to somewhat increase the head tax. There is no doubt that under this bill, outside of enforcing the literacy test, there will be a greatly increased expense in enforcing this new immigration law on account of policing the Canadian and Mexican borders. Then, too, we have tightened up the law in regard to smuggling in such a way that it is going to cost a great deal more to enforce the law. For those reasons and others the committee believed it ought to be increased to $8. So far as I am concerned, I would not have been averse to the proposition the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] suggested of letting people who come here without their families bear the greater part of the head tax, but if we put that to where it would be restrictive it would hurt a lot of mighty good people whom I do not want to see kept out. I am not an A. P. A. I never have wanted to cut off the people who come here with the intention of becoming bona fide citizens and who have the will and the ability to build up the prosperity of the country and become permanent citizens. Of course most of our people from northwestern Europe come with their families, but at the same time it would be so restrictive, if it were put high enough, to keep out good people whom I do not want to see restricted, that I could not support it.

Mr. HAYES. In addition to the reasons suggested, is it not also true that the bill as drawn has enlarged and perfected provisions in regard to the insane that will necessitate a large increase of facilities for the enforcement of the law?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; and there are quite a number of other provisions that are for the benefit of the alien himself.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The present law is $4?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. And this is $8?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. And the present law applies to all members of the families?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. And this only to those who are above 16?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; that is, children under 16 coming with their father and mother are excepted.

Mr. FESS. Have you any way of estimating what $8 under the reduced number would amount to?

Mr. BURNETT. No. I submitted that question to the Commissioner General of Immigration, and he thought, just as an off-hand guess—and it was just a guess—that it would perhaps leave it just about where it is now, or was in normal times; but we can not arrive at it definitely.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman himself has shown by his bill when he put in his $6 provision that that would do it.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman did not disagree with me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is it not the hope that a more rigid enforcement of the immigration laws will take place on the border, and is it not further understood that carrying out further provisions of the bill in regard to matters other than the literacy test will cost more money?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Making $8 necessary?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. I desire to say in response to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the report of the Commissioner of Immigration shows that last year out of 326,000 immigrants 52,982 were under 14 years of age; consequently there will be about 15 per cent, and we are increasing it 100 per cent.

Mr. BURNETT. There is one other suggestion I want to make, if I may be permitted to do so. There are a number of provisions in this bill in the interests of humanity to the immigrants themselves. For instance, there are two inspectors instead of one; there are two doctors instead of one, and various other things, but I just happen to think of those that are for the benefit of the immigrant himself. That is going to be an additional expense, and I think the $8 is very reasonable.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Does not the gentleman believe it would be a humanitarian move to spend this money to build stations in which to house these immigrants compared with some of the places in which they are now housed?

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to say that some are horrible——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. I would like to have about one minute more.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman be given three minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, whenever it comes to furnishing good conditions under which the aliens are to see our country for the first time every gentleman who has followed my course on this floor knows, as my good friend from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] does, that I have always been extremely liberal in all these matters.

Mr. GALLAGHER. And further, in face of the fact we are exacting upward of a million dollars a year more than necessary to carry out the provision of this law, and we are turning that money into the General Treasury; should not some of it be spent for suitable accommodations——

Mr. BURNETT. I agree with the gentleman; there ought to be; there is no doubt about that. The Bureau of Immigration, Mr. Chairman, has been cramped and handicapped by reason of the fact that they have not had proper accommodations for their work, but we have now a new immigration station at Baltimore and one started at Boston, and I believe, about completed. It has always been my desire to furnish the very best accommodations for these people who come to our land, and I believe we ought to make that provision; and I think the committee was wiser than I was when I introduced the bill at $6, and I believe that the increase of $8 ought to stay.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendments be again reported.

The amendments were again reported.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a point of information on that amendment to the amendment. Does not the amendment read to strike out the figure 10 and insert the figure 6?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment to the amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BENNET), there were—ayes 14, noes 60.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this has closed.

Mr. GILLETT. There has been no debate on the amendment itself; it was on the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Perhaps the gentleman is right. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I favor this amendment and will favor any amendment, pretty nearly, that will restrict immigration. I state frankly I vote for this increase not as a revenue measure, but I will be glad to vote for it even if it should decrease revenues if at the same time it decreased immigration. I get many protests against the literacy test. With many of them I entirely agree. I recognize that it is not a fair or ideal test. It admits many whom we would like to keep out and excludes many whom we would like to let in. But this is the only bill which can pass and which the majority will allow to come before us, and I vote for it now, not because it is the bill I would like, but because it does restrict and lessen immigration. I will vote for almost any bill which does that. I would go a great deal further than this bill; I would restrict immigration much more. I am not sure I would not vote to prohibit it entirely for a term of years except as to relatives of those now here until we can judge of the industrial effects of the present war. That would, to be sure, be a temporary abandonment of our old boast that this land was the free refuge of all the oppressed. Some would say it was not philanthropic. But a continent with 90,000,000 of people is a pretty sizeable field over which to spread our philanthropy. If we should for a season exclude the rest of the world our philanthropy could have plenty of exercise and there is abundant need for it here.

All of Europe is just now selfish and belligerent. The times are peculiar and out of joint. "America first" is just now a good watchword, and it is a question whether it is not best for the future of the world as well as for the future of ourselves to protect ourselves for a time against the further dilution of our citizenship.

Recent events have brought home to us all the fact that we are a very composite Nation—that we have within ourselves jarring and irreconcilable elements. Many other nations are heterogenous—Austria, for instance—but there the different parts are entirely separate and meet as an alliance. With us the different parts are inextricably mixed, yet the contents of our melting pot seem to be so diverse and chilled that they will not always fuse.

I do not wish to exaggerate our condition. I recognize fully our obligation to our immigrants. Indeed, this is a nation of immigrants. I believe thoroughly that the great body of our citizens who have come from abroad genuinely love their new home and will be zealous in its defense. Nor do I at all blame or criticize their affection for the land of their birth, wherever it is. Such affection and sympathy but prove that they have the disposition to become attached to the land of their adoption. I have no doubt the heat of a foreign attack upon us would rapidly melt and assimilate all our ingredients. But we hope to have no such conflagration. And I think our greatest need at present is that all our people should be permeated with a zealous spirit of American nationality.

Of course, prohibiting immigration even temporarily involves disadvantages. There would be an outcry that we would soon have no cheap labor. To me that is no objection. I would be glad to have no cheap labor, to have the value of wages relatively increased. The more equal distribution of wealth should be one of our chief aims.

It might check our invasion of the markets of the world. But by our tariff laws we could preserve and assure to ourselves our own markets, even if we had to surrender other markets to cheap labor. It is more important to Americanize and spiritualize our own population than to extract wealth from other nations.

There never has been a time when we could so well afford to ignore the rest of the world and devote ourselves to building up our own character and independence. Hundreds of millions of American securities have drifted here during the past year, and though I suppose we are still a debtor nation our obligations can not be large. The world is in turmoil, and no one can foresee the conditions which will follow the treaty of peace. It may be that the heavy taxation elsewhere will equalize higher wages here. We know it will not be prudent to be defenseless, and we are about to extend our armaments and our taxes. It will not be a safe or fruitful time to preach or practice world-wide philanthropy when all other nations are battling vehemently for their own interests. Why should we not then study our own interests, set our own house in order, raise our standards of citizenship, and for a period admit no dilution and cultivate a devotion to our own country? Thereby we would very likely make ourselves a better instrument to assist and stimulate the advancement of the whole world. "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he is worse than an infidel."

Such a course may be called narrow and reactionary. Temporarily it regards the interests of the United States more than of the whole world. It might shut us out of the world currents; it might raise up against us ill will and remonstrance, and very likely attack if we were unprepared; but it would make us a better, if not a richer, America, a more homogeneous, harmonious, united people, and perhaps a better instrument for the world's progress and a more powerful engine for the world peace and harmony, which is the ultimate ideal of us all. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, the argument that the gentleman has made in favor of this amendment has been made before. The same fears that he now has were entertained many, many years ago. The gentlemen when they opposed immigration 100 years ago stated the same reasons that the gentleman assigns to-day, and were as wrong then as he is to-day. I have here an extract from a report which was made in 1817, not quite 100 years ago. At that time the so-called immigration commission that had been created reported that—

> The immigrants should press into the interior. At the present time, also, we seem too congested on the frontiers.

And in those days the population of the United States was only between eight and nine millions.

In 1819 there were certain statements made by people, which I desire to quote. This is a statement from the second annual report of the managers of a society for the prevention of pauperism in New York City. There were paupers then. That was before this present-day immigrant ever dreamed of coming to the United States. And this is what the association says:

> As to the emigrants from foreign countries, the managers are compelled to speak of them in the langauge of astonishment and apprehension. Through this inlet pauperism threatens us with the most overwhelming consequences.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, a century has elapsed since that statement was made. But 60 years ago we find that the people were still of the same impression and were as wrong on that question as they are to-day. Here is a report of 1835, made by a similar organization, and in that report they say:

> Then we were few, feeble, and scattered. Now we are numerous, strong, and concentrated. Then our accessions of immigration were real accessions of strength from the ranks of the learned and the good, from enlightened mechanic and artisan and intelligent husbandmen. Now immigration is the accession of weakness, from the ignorant victims of the priest-ridden slaves of Ireland and Germany or the outcast tenants of the poorhouses and prisons of Europe.

And the same arguments are made against present-day immigration. We can realize how fallacious and wrong were the statements of those early organizations. We know the startling and marvelous progress that was made since those reports. In lieu of this a great number of you gentlemen are pressing the same arguments. I prophesy a number of years hence the people will think you as ridiculous and absurd as we do now think of the early restrictive societies.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment to the amendment, to make it $8.25.

Mr. MURRAY. Make it $12.50.

Mr. GARLAND. I do this for the purpose of speaking for the amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, yes. Although the gentleman is on the same side as the gentleman from Alabama, I think he has a perfect right to offer an amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. There were two amendments, were there not?

The CHAIRMAN. There was an amendment to the amendment, and one was voted down.

Mr. BENNET. Mine was voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. GARLAND. The amendment was to make it $8.25 instead of $8 as provided by the committee.

Mr. BENNET. The amendment pending was to make it $10.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out the figures "$10" and insert in lieu thereof "$8.25."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] is recognized.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, there has been a strong tendency all through this session of this Congress in which I have sat, and it is my first opportunity to be in Congress, to hearken to the report of the committee. They are supposed to have and should have a large amount of all the wisdom that can be gathered on all of these subjects that are brought before them for report to this body. And I am glad to see that this wisdom has been displayed here to-day by the gentlemen who have this bill in charge. I am for it. I am going to vote for it because it will assist in keeping out pauper labor and also because it is a kind of a Republican measure. It is for the protection of the man who works, and it was so stated by the gentlemen who have the bill in charge. Now, then, I am challenging these gentlemen in return, that when a protective tariff measure comes up in this House for the protection of working peoples' wages, which will come before long, that they do likewise, and that so-called Democratic States will give as many votes for that measure as Republican States will give for this one measure. [Applause.]

But I have heard here the virtues of Alabama proclaimed, and I have heard the declarations against Pennsylvania and its alleged usages, and Ohio and its alleged usages, and the Middle States generally, from the gentleman from Alabama. Why, gentlemen, I was down in Alabama several years ago. It was about the time the first cotton mill was put up at Anniston, Ala., which I understand is in the gentleman's district; and I had the pleasure of going into the mill. The gentleman says that Alabama passed the first child-labor bill that was passed by any State. If so, it must have been to extend the hours for labor beyond 24 per day. I went into that mill and beheld a woman with a child at her breast attending a loom, and two children, that could not have been more than 4 and 6 years of age, played back of her with rag dolls in their hands on the floor of the factory.

Mr. MURRAY. Eight hours before dinner and eight hours after dinner. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARLAND. Maybe I can not remember that, because it was some time ago, and possibly could not now bring proof, but maybe the gentleman from Alabama was then in the legislature which enacted the legislation that now exists, or did exist four years ago, in Alabama, in which they can make of a man who goes on a strike a vagrant—a bum.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; a bum. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARLAND. A bum, a vagrant, and under the law they take him from his strike and declare that he is convicted of vagrancy, give him a sentence of servitude, put him back into the mine in which he was employed, and he does the same work in the mine for the State without pay that he did for wages before.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, that is one of the States—whether they have changed the law or not I do not know; they may have, like Georgia, reformed on labor laws and have changed recently, but we hear much of the virtues here on this floor of Alabama laws—as a matter of fact, that is one of the States where they worked their convicts in the mines, timber camps, and other industries, against free labor, in positive competition with the men who work for wages.

I can not forget those things, and I can not forget, when I look at the biography of the gentleman from Alabama and note that he was in the legislature that probably enacted some of, or all of, those laws. I feel that it comes with very poor grace, to say the least, that he should inveigh against Pennsylvania. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close the debate on this section.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman can speak to the negative of this $8.25 proposition.

Mr. BURNETT. I oppose it.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close.

Mr. BENNET. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Alabama will not do that. There have been no factious amendments offered and no factious discussion.

Mr. BURNETT. I mean these amendments. There are two amendments pending, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] has been withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to have opportunity to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BURNETT. I did not inveigh against Pennsylvania. It was against some methods of Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman wants to speak in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the Chair will inform him that it has been withdrawn.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BELL].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BELL. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 40, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MURRAY. If I can get unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I will not take any time at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 3, add, after the period, the following: "The money thus collected, together with all fines and rentals collected under the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] that that is taken, word for word, from the existing law. It seems that under that law there is danger of confusion for this reason: Later on in the bill it is provided that all moneys collected from exclusive privileges shall be paid into the Treasury, and in another place it is provided that, from the moneys that are collected from fines, the Department of Justice, without any limit, can pay rewards, which, I think, is a rather dangerous provision, and there is no place where provision is made for paying over the other moneys into the Treasury. The privileges are not exclusive. Take the telegraph privilege, for instance. Both of the large telegraph companies in New York—and, I presume, in other parts of the country other telegraph companies—have the right to have their stations at these immigration stations; and I simply offer this amendment out of abundant caution.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I could not quite catch the gentleman's suggestion. The gentleman made the statement, as I caught it, that if this money were covered into the Treasury it might be expended on rewards.

Mr. BENNET. There is a provision in the bill that, as to certain fines collected, the department may pay rewards out of those fines without limit, and there are two cases now pending where sums running into tens of thousands of dollars are attempted to be collected under the contract-labor laws. It seems to me it ought to be made clear that the moneys collected from the head tax, from the fines and the penalties, and from the rental of all the privileges, whether exclusive or not, are to be paid into the Treasury.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman want to deny to the executive officers charged with the administration of the law the privilege of offering rewards for the apprehension of violators of the law?

Mr. BENNET. No. They have that privilege already under the existing statute. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that what I am offering is the very language that the committee which revised the law in 1903 thought was proper. It is the language that the members of the committee in 1907, including the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], thought proper to insert, believing it would do good, and no harm. It is also in line with the policy of this Congress, as shown in 1909, when in one of the appropriation bills they wiped out the immigration fund and provided that the money should be paid into the Treasury.

Mr. BURNETT. As I understand, then, there are some fines that do not go under that provision, and under this bill the Department of Labor can use them for the payment of rewards?

Mr. BENNET. Not the Department of Labor, but the Department of Justice. It is so stated in the language, that out of the fines the Department of Justice can, without limit, pay rewards to people other than employees of the Government.

Now, it seems to me—and I think the gentleman from Alabama will agree with me—that the moneys ought all to be paid into the Treasury, and that no department ought to have the right to collect forty or fifty thousand dollars and then pay out what it pleases for rewards. It is not very long since the Customs Department, under a then existing law, paid $100,000 as a reward to a man in New York City, who was an employee of the Government. I think there ought to be some limit.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. BENNET. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended three minutes, to allow me to answer the gentleman's question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. On page 14, line 2, of the bill there is a provision to aid in the enforcement of the contract-labor law.

Mr. BENNET. That is what I was referring to.

Mr. GARDNER. It is there provided that—

The Department of Justice may from any fines or penalties received pay rewards to persons other than Government employees who may furnish information leading to the recovery of any such penalties, or to the arrest and punishment of any person, as in this section provided.

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Now, if the gentleman's amendment is adopted with regard to the head tax, it would not affect that particular clause, would it?

Mr. BENNET. I am frank to say that the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk would cover fines, penalties, the head tax, and the money from exclusive privileges.

Mr. GARDNER. In other words, there would be no necessity for the gentleman's amendment at all if it simply applied to the head tax, because that is already in the existing law, passed in an appropriation bill. So that the gentleman's amendment is broader than merely paying the head tax into the Treasury.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; it is broader than merely paying the head tax into the Treasury.

Mr. GARDNER. And is it not true that in an appropriation bill we have already provided that the head tax shall be paid into the Treasury?

Mr. BENNET. We have provided that in an appropriation bill, but in this bill we repeal all acts in conflict with this act.

Mr. GARDNER. I think that is excepted.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. GARDNER. It is not in conflict, anyway.

Mr. BENNET. I think it is. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, What earthly harm can it do to provide that the moneys collected by United States officials in the way of revenue shall be paid into the Treasury?

Mr. GARDNER. But I ask the gentleman if it does not interfere with that particular clause that we put in for the enforcement of the contract-labor law? I have no objection unless it interferes with that; but it seems to me that it interferes with the Department of Justice having funds at its disposal to pay informers and in that way help to carry out the contract-labor law.

Mr. BENNET. The Department of Justice collects thousands of dollars. While I was out of Congress on a temporary vacation I represented a gentleman who had to walk up to the captain's office and pay $6,000 in one of these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the Department of Justice ought to have the use of some of these funds that the gentleman complained went into the General Treasury. They ought not to be left to the uncertainties of the General Treasury. Therefore I am opposed to the amendment, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BURNETT. Before that amendment is read, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at the expiration of 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. I object for the present.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I move that all debate——

Mr. MANN. Oh, do not do that. The gentleman from New York has some bona fide amendments.

Mr. BENNET. We have real amendments.

Mr. BURNETT. Let the amendments come in, but let us limit the debate. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have at least 5 minutes, or 10 minutes if I can get that much time. I was deprived of any time yesterday in the general debate. This is the most important section in the whole bill.

Mr. SABATH. No; this is not the literacy test.

Mr. BURNETT. This is the head tax. How many amendments has the gentleman?

Mr. BENNET. I have this one, which I have sent to the desk, but which has not been reported, and one more.

Mr. BURNETT. Then I suggest 10 minutes on that side and 5 on this.

Mr. BENNET. All right.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, we agree on 15 minutes on the two amendments, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and 5 minutes on our side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and amendments thereto close at the expiration of 15 minutes, of which 10 minutes shall be controlled by the gentleman from New York and 5 minutes by himself. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to have my amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, after the word "who," insert "after a residence of at least one year in such foreign country," so that the bill as amended will read:

"That said tax shall not be levied on account of aliens who after a residence of at least one year in such foreign country enter the United States from the Dominion of Canada," etc.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be stopped at the conclusion of three minutes.

Unless this amendment is adopted, it will simply, under this $8 head tax, divert the traffic coming from Great Britain so that it will go via the Allan Line steamers and the Canadian Pacific, because it gives them a differential of $16 in favor of the Canadian steamship companies as against the American steamship companies on every man and his wife coming to this country. In other portions of the bill we legislate so as to bring business to our own ports of Boston, New York, New Orleans, Galveston, and so forth. But if a man who wants to come from Great Britain to Chicago, or any place like that, finds that he does not have to pay any head tax if he comes over the Canadian line, he is very apt to save $8 or if he comes with his wife $16 by coming via Canada. I am in favor of American industry and against diverting business to Canadian ports.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They come in from Canada now without the payment of the head tax.

Mr. BENNET. There is no $8 head tax.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But there is a $4 head tax.

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And the Canadian is exempt.

Mr. BENNET. He is.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This bill proposes to remove the exemption, except from those who live along the border and come over for a temporary stay.

Mr. BENNET. Do not make me laugh for my lip is cracked. [Laughter.] I think everybody will come over for a temporary stay. This provision will be availed of by everybody who wants to save $16. I do not think the committee attempted to help aliens across the sea, but I think they had in mind to help people in Canada and Mexico to come over here for a temporary stay.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Those people who go back and forward in the course of a day's business.

Mr. BURNETT. Let me ask the gentleman, Is it the purpose of the gentleman to strike out the words "for a temporary stay"?

Mr. BENNET. Personally I do not care anything about that.

Mr. BURNETT. I think perhaps we might accept the amendment. Let us have the amendment reported again.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. That is for the residents in Canada, Newfoundland, Porto Rico, Cuba, and the Republic of Mexico?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. All right.

Mr. GARDNER rose.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have five minutes in which to develop his view.

The CHAIRMAN. That can be done by unanimous consent, although chairmen have ruled that after the time was fixed——

Mr. MANN. That is only where the time was fixed by the House. Where the committee has fixed it by unanimous consent the ruling has always been that it can be changed by unanimous consent; but where the House has fixed the time the committee can not change it.

The CHAIRMAN. That comes back to the same thing that you can do anything by unanimous consent. What is the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BENNET. I ask that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] may have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HOWARD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire if the request of the gentleman from Alabama was not granted for 10 minutes, to be controlled by the gentleman from New York and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Has the gentleman from New York used all of his time?

Mr. MADDEN. He has another amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. He can yield some of that time to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BENNET. I want that time on another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported again.

The Clerk again reported the amendment, as follows:

Page 3, line 10, after the word "who," insert the words "after a residence of at least one year in such foreign country."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, that amendment does not restore the language of the existing law. We ought to do so if we are going to get rid of this amendment later on, providing for an exemption from head tax for those who come from Canada or Mexico for a temporary stay.

Mr. BENNET. We are not.

Mr. GARDNER. If we are going back to the provision of law providing for a residence of one year in foreign contiguous territory, I think it would be wise to restore the words of the existing law, which are these—

After an uninterrupted residence of one year immediately preceding such entrance.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. GARDNER. The suggestion is this: The provision in the existing law relative to the exemption from head tax of residents of Canada and Mexico had this origin: Ever since we had a head tax—or at all events for a great many years—residents of Mexico and Canada have been exempted from head tax. This was done so as not to interfere with the freedom of intercourse between this country and her neighbors. Up to 1907 we exempted "citizens" of Canada and Mexico from the payment of the head tax. When the immigration law of 1907 was being prepared, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and I, together with the then Secretary of State, Mr. Root, held a conference in which the Secretary pointed out the danger of violating the most-favored-nation clause in some of our treaties if we continued to afford special exemptions to Canadians and Mexicans. He suggested that we should make residence and not citizenship the test. This we accordingly did. Now, this bill strikes out that particular wording and substitutes the words "for a temporary stay," in order to exempt those persons who go backward and forward across the border from the payment of a head tax every day. This wording in the bill also avoids all conflict with the most-favored-nation clause. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] does not restore the exact words of the existing law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is just the point upon which I want to ask a question. Does the language agreed upon by the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Alabama and Secretary Root go so far as to continue the exemption of these countries and the admission of immigrants to this country without the payment of the head tax?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman says it will.

Mr. GARDNER. It will if the state of affairs exists as it does to-day.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Immigrants from Canada, Mexico, Newfoundland, Cuba, no matter how undesirable they may be, can come in without the payment of the head tax if your amendment is adopted.

Mr. GARDNER. The present law admits Canadians and Mexicans and so forth without the payment of a head tax, and so would the amendment proposed by Mr. BENNET.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is asking me whether my amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] will restore the condition of affairs under which immigrants from Mexico and Canada, no matter how undesirable, will be admitted free of head tax. The answer is, Yes; it will. The bill as printed and presented to us by the committee does not exempt Canadian and Mexican immigrants from the head tax, but it does exempt Canadian and Mexican visitors from the head tax if they come here for a temporary stay.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does not the bill merely make the general immigration law apply to people from those countries just as it does to the people from Europe?

Mr. GARDNER. In my opinion it does.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that not just what we want to do?

Mr. GARDNER. The provision for a temporary stay is to take care of those persons—probably 100,000 daily—who cross the line every day between Detroit and Windsor, for example, and at various other points on our northern and southern borders. Many people work in Detroit and sleep in Windsor, Ontario. Windsor is really a suburb of Detroit. The same condition exists in many other places. I have no doubt that is what the committee intended to take care of, and I believe they do take care of it with this provision about a "temporary stay." I do not think the provision is a dangerous one, because a few lines later in this bill the Commissioner General of Immigration is given power to adopt rules which will prescribe conditions to prevent the abuse of the head-tax exceptions. Therefore I do not agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]. However, when I found that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] seemed inclined to accept this amendment, I suggested that if we are going to retain the existing law we ought to restore the exact words and run no risk of involving ourselves in a conflict with the most-favored-nation clause in some of our treaties. I agree with the gentleman from Texas that the bill as it stands is better than it would be after the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I think so, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if the bill, as reported by the committee, does not get away from any just accusation of violation of the favored-nation clause?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It treats them all alike?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And makes provision for the accommodation of people who live along the border, who cross from the south side of the Rio Grande to the north side on business and go back in the evening, or who cross the river between Canada and the United States, or the border at other points.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; they are all provided for in the bill. It seems to me that the bill as it stands is better than it would be if amended as the gentleman from New York seeks to amend it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The contention of the gentleman from New York was that as we drew the bill it would divert passenger traffic around through Canada.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, if I can have two minutes, I will demonstrate that, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], I think, will agree with me. Here is what this language in the bill will do: A man goes to a steamship office in Liverpool and says that he wants to go to Chicago with his wife. The ticket agent will say to him, "If you buy a ticket on the Allan Line or on the Canadian Pacific Line, I can sell it to you for $16 less for the two of you, because you do not have to pay any head tax; but if you want to go by the Cunard Line or the White Star Line, or any other line, you will have to pay $16 more than you do on the Canadian lines, because coming to the United States directly you have to pay an $8 head tax." Therefore we provide in an American law, in an American Congress, an $8 differential on every ticket for a man making a trip to the United States in favor of the Canadian Pacific Line or the Allan Line of steamships, and I am opposed to that. I am for America.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I, as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], am for America, and if I thought that the bill as drafted would tend to divert the traffic as he suggests I would favor his amendment, but I am under the impression that he does not really appreciate the fact that each and every passenger would be obliged to state a falsehood before he could be permitted to enter under the bill without the payment of the tax, because only those that are coming for a temporary stay are excepted.

Mr. BENNET. I am assuming the case of a man coming for a temporary stay, and a man taking a trip, say, to the Yellowstone, or to California, or any place. He saves $8 by going by the Allan Line or the Canadian Pacific Line because he does not have to pay any head tax, whereas if he goes on the White Star or the Cunard to Boston or New York, he has to pay an $8 head tax.

Mr. BURNETT. Using the word "resident" instead of the word "citizen," and that is the gentleman's amendment; would not that meet the objection that it might be a violation of the favored-nation clause?

Mr. BENNET. My amendment is after a residence of at least one year in such foreign country.

Mr. BURNETT. I know and I understood that the gentleman from Massachusetts thought that that would perhaps be in violation of the favored-nation clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend for a moment until the Chair ascertains the parliamentary situation. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has seven minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] five minutes. Is what we are doing now being taken out of that time?

Mr. BENNET. No.

Mr. BURNETT. This is by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has not the floor.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not care who answers the question.

Mr. BURNETT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to know whether or not, if the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] is adopted, an alien settling in Canada can come across the river back and forth, even for a temporary stay, without paying this head tax unless he is there a year?

Mr. BURNETT. That is provided for in the bill.

Mr. KELLEY. If a man settles in Canada, he can not cross for a temporary stay until he has lived in Canada for a year?

Mr. BURNETT. That is the effect of this amendment.

Mr. KELLEY. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. I will read the amendment to the amendment myself first:

Page 3, at the end of line 10, after the words "United States," insert the words "after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year immediately preceding such entrance."

Also, on page 3, line 11, strike out the word "from" and insert the word "in."

That will restore the language of existing law, but I do not advocate either this amendment or the one offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by accepting the language offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BURNETT. Let us have the amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, after the words "United States," insert "after an uninterrupted residence of at least one year immediately preceding such entrance."

Also, on page 3, line 11, strike out the word "from" and insert the word "in."

Mr. BENNET. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by accepting the language offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BENNET), there were—ayes 55, noes 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, which is really a consequential amendment, as the Chair understands.

Mr. GARDNER. No; it was accepted as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's second amendment came in at a different section of the bill.

Mr. GARDNER. No; it is the same section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood it was another line, a consequential amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 13, page 3, to insert, after the word "residents," the words "or citizens."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 13, by inserting, after the word "residents," the words "or citizens."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that is this: The Supreme Court of the United States, in the only case in which it construed the status of Porto Rico, has decided that the people who live in that island are at least citizens of Porto Rico, which is one of the possessions of the United States, and it seems to me it ought to be made clear that a citizen of a possession of the United States ought to have as much right as a resident.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it necessary, because if he was a resident he would probably be a citizen.

Mr. BENNET. Not necessarily.

Mr. BURNETT. There is no objection to it, however.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, strike out all in lines 7 to 11, inclusive.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to what strikes me as a rather curious situation. If he will turn to page 2, line 13, he will find that the head tax is levied only on aliens regularly admitted. Now, this provision provides that in the case of aliens applying for admission:

That in the case of aliens applying for admission from foreign contiguous territory and rejected, the head tax collected shall, upon application, upon a blank which shall be furnished and explained to him, be refunded to the alien.

Now, the first part of the section that provides the tax shall not be paid except by the people admitted is right, but this in the last part seems to put in an absolutely unnecessary provision, which, in my judgment, refunds the money to the people who have not paid.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I do not know whether the gentleman from New York reads the wording properly or not, but if he will carefully note the wording of it I think he will come to the conclusion that his contention is erroneous. It says "there shall be levied, collected, and paid a tax of $8 for every alien, including alien seamen regularly admitted"——

Mr. BENNET. Regularly admitted.

Mr. SABATH. The words "regularly admitted" refer to the seamen and not to the aliens.

Mr. BENNET. I am not sure, but there is a possibility the gentleman is correct, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. SABATH. That is the meaning.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman? [After a pause.] Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism; paupers; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who practice polygamy or believe in or advocate the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally, of the Government of the United States or of any other organized government, because of his or their official character, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; prostitutes, or persons coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who directly or indirectly procure or attempt to procure or import prostitutes or persons for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons likely for any reason to become a public charge; persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act, and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to their reembarkation at a foreign port the Secretary of Labor shall have consented to their reapplying for admission; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes; persons whose ticket or passsage is paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government, either directly or indirectly; stowaways, except that any such stowaway, if otherwise admissible, may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor; all children under 16 years of age, unaccompanied by or not coming to one or both of their parents, except that any such children may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, be admitted if in his opinion they are not likely to become a public charge and are otherwise eligible; Hindus and persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into. The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, civil engineers, teachers, students, authors, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNET. Is this bill being read by numbered sections or by paragraphs?

The CHAIRMAN. It is being read at the desk in the way in which the sections appear.

Mr. BENNET. I want to be sure whether it is being considered by sections or paragraphs.

Mr. BURNETT. Why not finish the entire section?

Mr. BENNET. I have no objection, but I simply want to preserve my rights.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment while the Chair looks at it. The Chair will say it is being read by sections.

Mr. BENNET. I will ask unanimous consent, as the remainder of the section is very largely the literacy test, or rather, I will ask the gentleman from Alabama if he will not ask unanimous consent that this particular section be considered in two parts?

Mr. BURNETT. I should prefer reading the whole section. I do not think any rights will be prejudiced by reading the entire section, and it might facilitate the matter.

Mr. BENNET. You can offer amendments to any part.

Mr. GARDNER. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we read the whole section, and then, if possible, have unanimous consent to consider the literacy test separate from the rest.

Mr. BURNETT. And agree, if we may, on time.

Mr. BENNET. That is entirely satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That after three months from the passage of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien, or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in some one of the various languages or dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who have resided therein continuously for five years, and who have in accordance with the law declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States and who return to the United States within six months from the date of their departure therefrom; all aliens in transit through the United States; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted, or who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission, of an offense purely political: Provided further, That the provisions of this act relating to the payments for tickets or passage by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government shall not apply to the tickets or passage of aliens in immediate and continuous transit through the United States to foreign contiguous territory: Provided further, That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country, and the question of the necessity of importing such skilled labor in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Labor upon the application of any person interested, such application to be made before such importation, and such determination by the Secretary of Labor to be reached after a full hearing and an investigation into the facts of the case: Provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants: Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign Government to its citizens or subjects to go to any country other than the United States, or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone, are being used for the purpose of enabling the holder to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President shall refuse to permit such citizens or subjects of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possession or from the Canal Zone: Provided further, That aliens who have declared their intention to become citizens, and aliens returning after a temporary absence to an unrelinquished United States domicile of seven consecutive years, may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and under such conditions as he may prescribe: Provided further, That nothing in the contract-labor or reading-test provisions of this act shall be construed to prevent, hinder, or restrict any alien exhibitor, or holder of concession or privilege for any fair or exposition authorized by act of Congress, from bringing into the United States, under contract, such otherwise admissible alien mechanics, artisans, agents, or other employees, natives of his country as may be necessary for installing or conducting his exhibit or for preparing for installing or conducting any business authorized or permitted under any concession or privilege which may have been or may be granted by any such fair or exposition in connection therewith, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, may prescribe both as to the admission and return of such persons: Provided further, That the Commissioner General of Immigration with the approval of the Secretary of Labor shall issue rules and prescribe conditions, including exaction of such bonds as may be necessary to control and regulate the admission and return of students and others applying for temporary admission: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to accredited officials of foreign Governments, nor to their suites, families, or guests.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out all the language on page 8 included in lines 1 to 3, inclusive.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offers an amendment. Will the gentleman report the amendment to the Clerk at the desk?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out lines 21, 22, 23, and 24, on page 7, and lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 8, of the bill.

Mr. SABATH. That in itself would strike out the entire provision, I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that there is any discussion yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no. The gentleman from Illinois asked for recognition to send up an amendment. If the committee desires recognition——

Mr. BURNETT. The committee desires recognition.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought I was recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Just to send up the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment is here. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, there are several committee amendments to the section, but they are mostly pro forma, and if it is agreeable I would like to dispose of the committee amendments before we get onto any of these other amendments.

Mr. SABATH. I have no objection to agreeing that we should consider the committee amendments first; and later on, when we come to consider the motion that will be made to strike out the literacy test, I am willing that an agreement should be entered into as to the time that should be allowed on that motion.

Mr. BURNETT. That will be perfectly agreeable, and I hope such an agreement will be reached. But I would like to dispose of these committee amendments if satisfactory to the gentlemen, before we take up these other matters.

Mr. SABATH. I have no objection to taking up the committee amendments first.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Alabama is one of unanimous consent to first dispose of the committee amendments. Is there objection to that request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURNETT. Of course, the gentleman understands that there is no effort to preclude or cut off other amendments that may be offered. I send up an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 1, after the word "committed," insert "or who at the time of seeking admission to the United States are legally charged with."

Mr. BURNETT. That would then read, Mr. Chairman:

Persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed or are legally charged with a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to that amendment.

As my recollection goes back, that amendment was in the bill as it passed the Sixty-third Congress and after full discussion was stricken out in the Senate, because, I will say to the gentleman and the committee, that we have not gone back on our old Anglo-Saxon tradition that a man is deemed to be innocent until he is proved to be guilty. What does "legally charged with" mean? It simply means this, as applied to a citizen of Russia, as it was in the Pouren case, that if a man had left for this country, after there was not any chance of trying him in his own country, they filed information, not backed up with proof to amount to anything, in an attempt to keep a man out of this country.

Mr. Chairman, we have extradition laws to take care of the cases of men who are simply charged with crime. That is for the Department of State to pass on. And I am opposed now, and always shall be, to the substitution of the immigration authorities—who have nothing to do with our foreign relations or ought not to have anything to do with them—for the State Department, that has to do with the carrying out of our extradition treaties. This matter was considered in the Sixty-second or Sixty-third Congress, in the Senate—I think I can mention it historically—and, after a discussion which lasted two days, the language which is now attempted to be inserted was, according to my recollection, stricken out by unanimous vote of the Senate, which body reverted to its old traditions of what the law is and ought to be; that a man has an absolute right, coming to this country, to be deemed innocent until he is proved guilty, and if his own country wants to take him back to try him, let them come to our Department of State and have him extradited in the ordinary, usual, legal, accustomed way. Therefore I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] will not pass.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment was not followed by another one I would agree with the gentleman, but I propose, if that amendment is adopted, to follow it by an amendment which says:

Unless the person so legally charged shows to the satisfaction of the proper officers that the charge or charges against him are without just foundation.

The only way that it takes out of the general principles of our law as to burden of proof in criminal cases which the gentleman speaks of is it changes the burden of proof. We hear every day and every week of criminals coming into this country. The department informs us that as to securing proof as to the truth of the charge they would have much trouble, because there are a great many that escape when they are legally charged on the other side with crime—fugitives from justice. Just as soon as they think some indictment or some presentation, or whatever they may have in that particular country, is made, and that the officer is going to get them, they flee at once.

I would not go to the extent of voting that a mere charge should exclude an immigrant, because it is too easy, as lawyers all know, to get trumped-up charges, and merely to say that a statement, with an affidavit or something else on which a warrant could be based, would be a legal charge sufficient to exclude a man would be unjust. I would not go that far, either. But, Mr. Chairman, we proceed to say in addition that if he can show—putting the burden on him and not on the Government, if there is a charge over there outstanding against him—that it is not a legal charge, certainly it ought not to be required that this Government should go and hunt up the proof and show that it is a legal charge. Therefore we might well presume, when a charge stands there against him, it is a legal charge, and he ought to be deported, unless he furnishes proof, which is very difficult for the Government to obtain, of the fact that it is not a proper charge.

I have practiced law and I have defended many a man indicted for crime, and I sympathize with gentlemen who know what the difficulties of defense are, and I know how frequently it is that men are sometimes jeopardized even when they are innocent, and therefore I believe in our old English common-law doctrine of drawing around the suspected criminal these safeguards of presumption. But here is a man coming to this country, while in his own country there may be a charge against him. That is not in itself enough, if he can assume the burden of proof, which is over there, and which he can get if he is innocent more easily than the department can. The department has to rely upon the charge, but he may be able to show that it is a trumped-up charge, and if that is true he is not subject to deportation.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not that reversing all precedents with respect to the trial of lawsuits and punishing men for supposed guilt, and all that?

Mr. BURNETT. I just stated that it departed from that time-honored principle to that extent. But this man is no citizen. He is coming to this country by the grace of this country, and when he comes here with a charge against him that does carry with it at least an implication of crime it is for us to say that that man, in whose reach rests the evidence that it is a trumped-up charge, shall assume that burden of proof.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the proposed amendment I want to urge that while it will be within the personal knowledge of the suspected person that he is innocent, it will be impossible for him to prove his innocence. Surely, he can not be expected to carry along with him witnesses who can prove his innocence. He can not be expected to carry with him documentary proof of his innocence of a charge of which he may have no knowledge up to the moment he is confronted with the charge.

You must treat the prospective immigrant as a man, whether you admit him or not. But once you refuse him admission, you should, at least, extend to him the rights that belong to every human being. You should treat him without prejudice, without bigotry, without repudiating a fundamental principle which in centuries of evolution has become a part of the organized system of the jurisprudence of every civilized country. Under this provision every blackmailer will be able to exclude an immigrant by filing a charge against him. Do you expect a helpless immigrant to refute a charge and convince a board of special inquiry consisting of a jury of laymen that he is innocent? It is an indefensible proposition, and the very suggestion of that amendment shows the spirit in which the bill is offered. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for just a moment?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman has referred to charges being made against aliens in this country by anybody in the nature of a trumped-up charge. The amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] refers, of course, to a charge that then and there existed against this man in his native land.

Mr. LONDON. Exactly.

Mr. HOWARD. The object of this amendment is to prevent the United States from becoming a refuge of fugitives from justice in other countries.

Mr. LONDON. We had two cases of this kind in recent history, during the presidency of President Roosevelt and President Taft, the case of Pouren and the case of Roudowitz. In both cases the charges involved moral turpitude. After years of investigation it was shown that the acts charged were not crimes involving moral turpitude, but were acts committed in pursuance of a revolutionary object in revolutionary days. They were charged with violation of the criminal code, but, as a matter of fact, they were revolutionists, fighting against the Government. It required the persistent efforts of a powerful organization to save the two men.

Gentlemen, I object to this amendment, and I appeal to you to reject it. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was not in the bill as it passed the House last year, and it was not in the bill as it passed the Senate. In my recollection it has either been in the bill several times when it was brought into the House or else it has been proposed on the floor of the House, but, I think, while it has been discussed in either body, it has never been agreed to.

We are apt to deal with the question of charges against criminals or persons accused of crime according to our own methods in this country, and yet we are all familiar with the fact—by reading at least—that it has often been the practice of various foreign Governments, where they desired to punish or detain persons for political offenses, to charge them with some crime, and many times they have punished them for some crime that the persons did not commit, and in many instances punished them for alleged crimes which no one had committed at all.

Now, it would be the easiest thing in the world if we came to a situation where men seek to come to this country to escape political persecution—and that is liable to be one of the results growing out of the war in Europe—for the Government of some foreign country or some one instigated by that Government to make a charge against those persons for crime. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] says the persons would have the right to disprove it. They will have no opportunity to disprove it. It will not be a thing that can be disproved on this side of the water. It is not a thing concerning which the persons accused will have witnesses. They can deny, but that is no proof; and this provision lays down a principle which I think ought never to be established in this country, that a man charged with crime is presumed to be guilty. [Applause.]

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, but that I may vote for this bill, although I have voted against it four times heretofore; but I hope that this House will at least have self-respect enough and enough consideration for the history of the country not to say that Congress finds that a man shall be considered guilty until he proves himself innocent. I believe the old doctrine of the presumption of innocence until guilt is established is the very foundation of our liberties. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this committee amendment. I do not know whether I can advance any stronger arguments than those that have been advanced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or the two gentlemen from New York. However, I remember that about three years ago there were the cases to which reference has been made here—the Pouren and the Roudowitz case. Those two men were charged by the Russian Government with committing crimes involving moral turpitude. They were held here for nearly six months. After a careful investigation the evidence disclosed that the charge against them was a false one. The statement made by the gentleman from New York is correct. I am fearful that if this amendment is adopted we will invite the Russian Government or other Governments to take advantage of this provision and use the immigration department for the purpose of holding people who are properly and legally entitled to enter the United States and to prevent them from entering. We who are acquainted with some of these oppressive Governments know how far they will go if they desire to persecute a man whom they dislike. In view of the eloquent appeals that have been made by others, I hope that this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HOWARD. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, as the debate has been exhausted I think we ought to get along with the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, the gentleman ought not to be in such a hurry.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will not object, but I think we ought to get along with the bill.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, the reason I inject my views into this debate is that there have been two or three speeches made against this amendment. I think it is a very wholesome amendment and that it ought to be adopted. The bill says:

Persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed—

And here is the amendment—

or who at the time of seeking admission to the United States are legally charged with—a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude.

And then the bill proceeds—

A political crime could certainly not involve moral turpitude.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I have only three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HOWARD. The proposition is simply this: The worst criminal in the world might be under indictment. He might be legally charged. He might flee to the United States for refuge. Without this amendment there is no way in the world to prevent that man coming into this country. The first instinct of a criminal, the very first thing that appeals to him if he is guilty, is to flee; and if he flees and there is a legal charge against him, this simply shifts the burden of proof upon him to show that the charges against him are not legal charges, or that he is guiltless of the charges which have been made against him in the land of his nativity.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Could not a criminal of the kind the gentleman speaks of be taken back to the country where the charge is pending against him?

Mr. HOWARD. We recognize that principle as between States to-day. The governor of the State of Georgia can ask for a requisition for a man in Texas or Illinois, and we recognize that principle in our criminal law to-day, to extradite from one State to another a person accused of crime. This amendment of the gentleman from Alabama simply carries into effect, as between nations, the same principle that we recognize as between States; it simply says the applicant must present himself at our gate with a clean moral record, and should he not do so he will be excluded.

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. HOWARD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. I did not know my time had expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had only three minutes.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I believe frankly that a majority of the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization are opposed to this amendment. I say so because I believe there is not a man on that committee who, if he realized the full import of this amendment, which was adopted hurriedly and without adequate discussion, would have consented to put in the amendment, and overturn what has been the tradition and policy of the United States in every criminal prosecution that has ever been had since the foundation of this Government.

The Pouren case, which has been referred to, was a case which attracted a great deal of attention, and enlisted the sympathies of Frederick C. Tanner, Seth Low, Mr. Butler, myself, and many others in New York, native born and otherwise, who rallied to the defense of that man. He had fled from Siberia, where he had been sent because he raised his voice to overturn conditions that we all know are appalling. We were appealed to, and we raised practically $200,000 in order to disprove the evidence produced against him, and which finally turned out to be so false and untrue that there was not a scintilla of truth to back it up. The result was that there was no extradition. Are we going to say to every Government in Europe that on the filing of a charge against any person who wishes to enter this country—and in many places a legal charge simply means the issuance of a warrant—on the unsupported word of some Tom, Dick, or Harry, for purposes of revenge or something else, the entry of that person into this country may be prevented, and the burden placed upon him of disproving something of which he has no knowledge? I appeal to the Committee of the Whole to vote down the amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] means that this amendment was not discussed by the members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, he is mistaken, because it was discussed.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time has expired on this amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. This amendment was discussed at length by our committee, and I know that the members were utterly opposed to making this rule imperative; but they believed that our country having been made the dumping ground for thousands of criminals, we ought to have protection from fugitives from justice, and that there ought to be at least a prima facie case made, by the introduction of a legal charge, which the Government of the other country must institute. Now, when that Government has made its prima facie case by the institution of a legal charge, certainly a man who is asking admission to our gates ought to assume the burden of showing that the charge is without foundation. Gentlemen say that there ought to be a presumption of innocence, but they should remember that a person who seeks admission to this country by the grace of our Government, when there is a legal charge against him, ought to be required to show that that charge is not true. This does not impose any burden on political offenders, because the bill provides, on page 9, line 13—

That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted, or who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission, of an offense purely political.

So that disposes of the proposition that the distinguished leader on the Republican side referred to when it is a political offense. But, gentlemen, I want to know if it is unfair or unjust to say that a man who comes with a legal charge hanging over him ought to assume the burden and show that he is not a criminal fleeing from justice and seeking refuge on the shores of the United States?

Mr. OGLESBY. Is it not a fact that the amendment applies only to the form of the indictment and is entirely distinct from where you ask for a requisition from one State to another, where you have to prove that there is merit in the charge?

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, you do not. A legal indictment certified to in any of the States that I know anything about is sufficient. There might be a case in which the defendant himself, by habeas corpus, might raise the question of the right of the State to extradite him, but the presumption is, just as I state in this case, raised by the indictment itself. Therefore the burden ought to be on the man coming here. Gentlemen, it is absurd to talk about keeping criminals out when you want the Government to go to Italy to get proof that a fellow is guilty when he is under indictment or some other legal charge.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Chairman, I would like unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Chairman, the proposition here seems to be that the inquiry referred to must be made in regard to a legal charge against an alien. The gentleman from Alabama has proceeded in his discussion upon the theory that a legal charge involving moral turpitude against a fugitive from political persecution bears the same dignity and force as an indictment against a criminal charged with an offense in America. In other words, that a legal charge against a religious or political refugee is the result of a formal indictment legally submitted to constituted authority to establish a criminal record against an alien. Such is not and has not been the case in countries from which political refugees come to our shores.

In such countries as Russia, where there is a secret system of spies, or police espionage, where the people representing this system of governmental espionage have the authority upon their own initiative to make these charges, with all the formality and without the force of a formal indictment, as it is known and contemplated by the laws of our country.

It is a very significant fact that in every case where men who are fleeing from persecution in these countries where oppression is so bitterly imposed upon them for political offenses that the crime charged involves moral turpitude.

But this charge of alleged moral turpitude preferred against alien refugees, in almost every case subjected to the test in our courts, has been proven to be a mere pretext—a pretext invented by the police system of the foreign government to guarantee and accelerate the extradition of the political refugee. And the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, if adopted, will have but one logical effect, and that is the destruction of these barriers, erected by our customs and our laws for the protection of the persecuted patriot fleeing to our shores from the terrors of persecution in his native land.

I am opposed to this amendment, not for sentimental reasons alone, but because I believe our country should ever remain a haven and a refuge for those who believe in and have the courage to make sacrifices for those blessings of political freedom which have found their sublimest exemplification in our system of democracy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

The question on the amendment was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURNETT), there were 52 ayes and 68 noes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BURNETT, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. SIEGEL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 69 ayes and 78 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the next committee amendment is on page 6, line 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 6 by striking out in line 7 the words "for any reason."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, there was so much confusion I could not hear. Did the gentleman give any reason for striking out these words?

Mr. BURNETT. These words at that place are unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. The next amendment is on page 7, line 1, to insert a semicolon after the word "Hindus."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 1, after the word "Hindus" insert a semicolon.

Mr. BURNETT. The reason of that was that after each classification where we exclude aliens there has been a semicolon. The Hindus there is added by amendment, and that is a clause by itself, so a semicolon makes it conform to the other classifications.

Mr. MANN. Makes a new rule of punctuation.

Mr. BURNETT. No; it is the old Quackenbos rule that the gentleman and I studied years ago.

Mr. GARDNER. If the gentleman puts in a semicolon that will exclude missionaries, lawyers, physicians, and chemists that happen to be in this class.

Mr. BURNETT. They are taken care of farther on.

Mr. GARDNER. No; if the gentleman will cast his eye on page 7, line 7, he will see the provision where it says "the provision next foregoing" shall not apply, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to take the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, but I had supposed in reading this bill that one of the purposes of it was not to make it too obnoxious and indicate that Hindus were not entitled to become citizens of the United States by naturalization. We all know what one of the purposes of this clause is, although not disclosed on its face. I supposed this had been done intentionally—to say that the Hindus and persons not entitled to become naturalized citizens were to be excluded. It looked to me a bright way of saying something where you really did not want to use all the language you could use about it and cover the subject.

Mr. BURNETT. The committee want to say flatly that we intended to exclude Hindus, and in order not to have any doubt about it we made a different classification; and as the next was another classification of persons who were not eligible to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, we put in this amendment. Some courts have held that a Hindu could become a citizen.

Mr. MANN. I understand. It is a very difficult matter. The Hindus are British subjects, and I suppose citizens, in a way, of the British Empire, and to exclude them by class and name no one else might be considered quite objectionable, or to exclude other nationalities who are not entitled to become citizens in a class might be considered objectionable; but to exclude the two together as one class, and cover them all, I think no one has found was objectionable. I suppose it does not make any change in actual name whether you say Hindus and persons who can not become eligible to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, or whether you say Hindus; but to combine them, I think, takes away a lot of the bitterness, and it accomplishes the exact purpose.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Illinois. I think it means the same thing with or without a semicolon, but there was some question whether, the Hindus having been declared to be eligible to naturalization by combining them with the others, there might not be some doubt in regard to the real meaning of it.

Mr. MANN. I should think the courts would be likely to construe it as the opinion of Congress that Hindus are not entitled to become citizens if you do not put any punctuation in there at all. As it is now it simply means Hindus and other persons, just as though you read into it the word "other," so that it would be the same as though it read:

Hindus and other persons who can not become eligible, and so forth.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is perhaps correct about that, and I ask unaminous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I was about to offer an amendment inserting the word "two" between the words "the" and "provision," in line 7, so that it would read, "the two provisions next foregoing," but as I have withdrawn the other amendment it will not be necessary to ask for the adoption of this amendment, and that will be also withdrawn. That concludes the committee amendments.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 7, beginning with line 21, all the remainder of the page, all of page 8, and all of page 9, up to and including the word "territory," on line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 7, beginning with line 21, by striking out all the rest of the page, all of page 8, and all of page 9, down to and including the word "territory," in line 13.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, that is the educational test—the literacy test, so-called. I would like now to see whether we can not make some arrangement in respect to time.

Mr. BURNETT. How would half an hour on a side do?

Mr. MADDEN. Why not make it an hour and a half?

Mr. BURNETT. We have had seven hours of general debate, and I think we ought to limit this now to half an hour on a side.

Mr. MADDEN. But many gentlemen who are interested in this section of the bill did not speak in general debate. I do not think it is too much to ask for an hour and a half, which would give three-quarters of an hour on a side.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman from Illinois really think that we will hear anything new on the subject, with all due respect to those gentlemen who desire to speak?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Texas that if I get a chance I think I can tell him something new. I would like to have 10 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Furthermore, I am of opinion that if gentlemen who are in favor of this provision will listen to reason, we will agree that it should be stricken out.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will grant us an hour and a half. It is important enough so that it ought to be discussed. It is the most vital provision of the bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Very well.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I desire to make to the religious exemption provision, and I would like to have five minutes on that. Of course I am in favor of the literacy test.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I will be very glad to yield the gentleman that time.

Mr. TOWNER. Do I understand that the debate is to be limited only to the motion to strike out?

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, I think we ought to limit the debate to the whole section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, no. If my motion to strike out is defeated, then it is my purpose to offer an amendment to the political provision.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that the debate be confined only to the literacy test. That is the bitterest bone of contention in the bill. An hour and a half is not excessive debate upon that. In fact, I was going to ask, if the hour and a half were granted, that I be yielded 10 minutes additional, for I did not wish to ask the time of either gentleman in control of it.

Mr. BURNETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] be limited to an hour and a half, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and one-half by myself, and that in addition thereto there be granted 10 minutes' time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], to be occupied at such time as he desires to use it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does that apply to the section or the amendment?

Mr. MANN. Just to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is, anything relating to the literacy test?

Mr. BURNETT. It relates to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois or any amendment to his motion.

Mr. SABATH. To my motion or any amendment to the motion.

Mr. MANN. Let it relate to the motion and paragraph involved in the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama submits the request for unanimous consent that debate on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] and the paragraph to which it relates shall proceed for one hour and a half, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama and one-half by the gentleman from Illinois, and in addition to that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] shall have 10 minutes, to be controlled by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman from Illinois has a number of requests. I have not been able to see the gentlemen who desire to speak on this now, and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to perfect the section before the motion to strike out is put.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 9, line 1, after the word "by" insert the word "governmental."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], I desire to say to him I offered an amendment to which I desire his attention. Page 9, line 1, before the word "overt" insert the word "governmental." Now, my reason is this:

I am not in favor of this religious exemption at all, I will admit. It has been discussed for years and years and years. It was originally the Littauer amendment of 10 years ago, and I think that those who then advocated this religious exemption from the literacy test were willing to confine it to persons who were "solely" trying to escape religious persecution; in that form we agreed to it. Now it is proposed to exempt from the literacy test anybody who claims to be fleeing from religious persecution, no matter what other motives he may have for coming to this country. Under the wording of the bill this persecution may be evidenced by overt act or by laws or by governmental regulations. Now, unless you put in the word "governmental" before "overt act," here is the situation you are going to have. Take the case of the Armenian at the present day. We get a large Armenian immigration into this country. There is a large one into my own district, by the way. Most of it is good; some of it is not so good. These Armenians are being persecuted by the Turks. They are Turkish subjects and there is no question that there is persecution going on—religious persecution. Supposing some Armenian comes to this country and says to the immigration inspector, "Some Turks have been persecuting me on account of my religious belief," then, if he can convince the inspector, that Armenian can claim admission whether he can read or not.

I am not in favor of exempting people from this literacy test on account of alleged religious persecution. However, if you are going to put in an exemption at all, for heaven's sake make it clear that it is an overt act on the part of the Government which the exemption contemplates.

Mr. CONRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. CONRY. Suppose that the persecution is inspired by certain individuals in a community and that this persecution is countenanced by the Government. How are you going to distinguish?

Mr. GARDNER. Well, I do not think we can go into the motives of individuals. The question is, if the Government has got any laws and any regulations, and if they have laws or regulations, if they commit overt acts, well and good; and, if you choose, throw the thing open and admit all these people, whether they can read or not, Armenians and Hebrews—we might as well speak right out; that is what this clause in the bills means. It means that certain races are to be admitted into the United States on more liberal terms than anyone else, if they claim to be fleeing from religious persecution. I do not approve of it. I have the friendliest possible feeling for the Jews and the Armenians. I have warm personal friends among them. Nevertheless, I do not think that they ought to be given special privileges more than anyone else. But if you are going to do it, let it be clear that you mean governmental persecution. Do not let any man who chooses come before the immigration commissioners and say, "I have been persecuted at home by two or three men"—who are absolutely irresponsible—"from religious motives."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be called when I have used eight minutes. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there are some Members who are under the impression, in view of what has been stated, that I am in favor of repealing all of our immigration laws, or that we should have no laws on immigration. That is not true. I desire to say that I believe outside of three or four provisions in this bill that this is a good bill, and I believe a good deal will be accomplished if the bill be enacted into law providing we eliminate the educational test. The literacy test provided in the bill will not serve, as I stated frequently, to keep out the viciously inclined, the criminal, or otherwise undesirable alien. Experience has demonstrated the fact that with the educational facilities afforded in this land thousands of illiterates who, unhappily, were denied educational opportunities in their native lands, have learned to read and write here and have shown eagerness to acquire knowledge and fit themselves to become good citizens.

In my opinion the desirable immigrant is the healthy, law-abiding worker, who comes to this country in good faith, and the undesirable immigrant is the clever and educated schemer who immediately upon his arrival begins to find fault with our institutions. We agree that the criminal, the insane, and mentally defective, the pauper, the morally unfit, and those who are incapable of earning a living, ought, as the existing law now provides, to be barred. We know from experience that the educational test would inflict an unjust hardship upon some of the elements which we can not class among the undesirables.

The literacy test is neither the test of fitness nor of character. It is opposed to principles upon which our Government was founded and to the high traditions which have always been maintained in the American Republic. It is beyond dispute that many of the so-called illiterates come from countries where they have been compelled to live under laws which are oppressive, cruel, and unjust. They come here from places where the opportunities of education are denied them, and they come here because they believe they can secure that high and grand privilege and secure for their children that which has been denied them in the country of their birth.

If we enact this legislation, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we will preclude or stop some of our best citizens, or people who make the best citizens, people who have demonstrated that they are law-abiding, that they are men who love our institutions and love our flag, and the largest percentage who will be kept out under this provision will be the unfortunate Polish people, who are suffering to-day in Europe as no other people are.

And, unfortunately for the Polish people, the Polish Kingdom has been divided, and is now a part of Austria, part of Russia, and a part of Germany, and due to this division have been deprived of and denied an education, not that they are not anxious to secure it, but the countries and the monarchies under whose flag they are obliged to live, and from which countries they desire to emigrate, make it impossible for them to secure this education. Nearly 40 per cent of these good people will be deprived from entering our country, and what applies to the brave Polish people—descendants of Pulaski and Kosciuszko—who have aided and assisted our country in time of need, applies also to the people of the little nation of Servia. The people of that country, the same as the Belgians, have suffered untold want and misery. They, as well as the Polish people, are prevented there from securing that education, and we to-day are about to say to them that, because they have been deprived of that chance and opportunity in their country, and because they desire to secure it here, they can not have it, they can not enter; they can not come. This, I think, is manifestly unfair. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have known thousands of people of these different nationalities who were unable to read and write when they entered our shores, but nevertheless I wish to assure you that they have made good citizens and should not be legislated against, as you are about to do.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the motion to strike out the literacy test from the bill, because, for sentimental reasons, perhaps, I never have believed that the test of a man or his value to himself or to the world was to be met by whether he could read a little or write a little. The reading and writing of a man depend upon opportunity. But, Mr. Chairman, having voted, I believe, four times against the immigration bill, I find a situation which has constrained me to take a reconsidered view of the subject. We do not know how soon the war in Europe will end, and no one knows what will be the result. It seems likely, on the one hand, that with the destruction of property and the loss of life and limb over there, all the people can be profitably employed at home in building anew. We employ great numbers of men here because we are building in a new country.

And there may be no immigration from Europe after the war. The countries over there will be inclined, probably, to keep their citizens at home, because the number will have been reduced materially as to the male working citizen, and the need will have increased considerably to replace and rebuild. On the other hand, I can see, as it seems to me, great possibilities on the other side. When peace comes over there, I think it is likely to be a temporary one. I doubt the ability of either side to absolutely crush the other. There has been bitterness enough engendered, and there will be bitterness enough remain to make both sides over there, after temporary peace comes, fear further war. Men are prone to fight when they are mad. Cool men are not prone to fight. And after they have gone through a war such as they have been going through over there, and what are left come back to their homes, counting up those who have gone to the other side and those who remain who have been maimed or diseased, with the possibility that war will come again, with the knowledge that the hatred has not passed away, it would not surprise me if everyone with ordinary common sense would desire to escape from their country for two reasons: First, to avoid possible war and military service; second, to avoid the enormous taxes which must be the result of the unparalleled burden of indebtedness. And unless these countries by their own legislation can prevent their citizens coming here, we are liable to have a flood of immigration such as no country in the world ever experienced before. I am not willing to take the chances on it. [Applause.]

I have no great fear of the immigration that we have had. I do not fear a considerable number of annual immigrants. I believe we have tremendous powers of assimilation, but I am not willing at this time to take the chance on the world pouring onto us the enormous numbers which may want to and probably will seek to come to this country while the difficulties in Europe are yet unsettled. And I have made up my mind, after a great deal of hesitation, that I shall vote for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. If I have any time.

Mr. LEWIS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, in view of the prospects that seem to him possible, he would not be in favor of a numerical limitation on the number coming to this country any year?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that I can think of a great many ways that I believe would be better than the literacy test. One of them has been suggested by the gentleman from Maryland. But I am not confronted with that question. I am confronted with the question of whether I shall vote in the end for a bill containing a provision which I do not believe in. But I believe I ought to vote for the bill, notwithstanding my feeling on the subject. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. [Applause.]

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Chairman, during the decade immediately preceding the outbreak of the European war there came to our shores, with the momentum of an irresistible army, an average of more than ten hundred thousand immigrants every year. Of this mighty influx of humanity more than 25 per cent could neither read nor write.

In order to prevent the future coming of untold millions of unlettered foreigners to this country, and to avert the long train of evils that would inevitably follow in their wake, it is proposed to enact the literacy test of the pending measure into law. That test is the storm center of the bill. It simply provides that as a condition precedent to admission the immigrant shall be able to read not less than 30 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type, and in a language designated by the immigrant himself.

It appears from evidence of record, and with which all the Members of this body are familiar, that the opposition to the passage of a bill containing the literacy test has been fathered and financed by the Shipping Trust that fattens on the fares paid by the immigrants for transportation, and by various other trusts that employ these helpless and unhappy people for wages at which the American standard of living can not possibly be maintained. [Applause.]

There are many sufficient reasons for passing this bill, but brevity of time permits me to specify but a few.

The competition of immigrant labor with our own has become so pernicious and notorious that employment brokers brazenly offer to furnish foreign laborers of any nationality, in any number and in any State, for wages lower than those paid to workmen who are native born. [Applause.] The effect of such a competitive system as this is to swell the army of the unemployed with those of our own flesh and blood.

We spend $500,000,000 annually for education. Shall we at vast cost eradicate ignorance at home and then permit it to be imported wholesale from abroad? Shall we prepare our own people for the responsibilities and duties of citizenship at an expense of half a billion dollars a year and at the same time freely permit those to come into our midst who have had no preparation at all? [Applause.]

In all communities having an alien population it is found that the illiterate foreigner is the most frequent violator of the criminal law.

In New York, where the immigrants "most do congregate," the asylums have become so overcrowded with insane foreigners that the chief executive of that wealthiest of States has had to appeal to the Federal Government for assistance in caring for these afflicted people who have become a public charge.

The kind of foreigner that is crowding our charitable institutions and filling our jails is the kind that will be largely excluded by the passage of this bill. Even the literacy test will bar no one from entrance to this country who is qualified to discharge the duties of an American citizen, or worthy to bear that name.

Many of the immigrants who have come to us in the past, from all parts of the world, have proved themselves valuable additions to our population. They have caught the spirit of our institutions; they have kept step with the march of our progress; they have been loyal to our flag. This type of immigrant we have welcomed in the past; this type we shall welcome in the future; but the type affected by the literacy test we shall, for our own protection, keep out of this country for all time to come. [Applause.] Of the desirable immigrants, we shall admit them all; of the undesirable, we shall exclude them all.

That the sentiment of the American people is overwhelmingly in favor of the adoption of this selective and restrictive test there can be no doubt.

Within the last 20 years the people's representatives in this House have passed eight different bills containing the literacy test by an average vote of more than 2 to 1. Within the same period of time the Senate has passed six different bills containing the test by an average vote of more than 3 to 1, while the last vote in the Senate on this measure showed a majority in its favor of more than 7 to 1. In 1896 Mr. McKinley was elected President on a platform that specifically demanded that the immigration laws be extended so as to exclude from entrance all who could neither read nor write. But for the exercise of the veto power by three different Presidents, the literacy test would to-day be a part of the statute law of the United States.

For many years the American Federation of Labor, the railroad brotherhoods, the farmers' organizations, patriotic societies, eminent educators, noted economists, and multitudes of the toiling masses of this country have petitioned and pleaded and prayed for the enactment of this law. [Applause.] So far their petitions have been rejected, their pleas have been spurned, and their prayers have been scorned. But patriotic and persistent effort is about to be rewarded, and before the adjournment of this session of Congress the Burnett immigration bill, with the literacy test included, will be written into our book of law. [Applause.]

We have no grudge or grievance against the illiterate people of other lands. As they are unfortunate, we sympathize with them; as they are poverty stricken, we pity them; as they are oppressed, we weep for them; but as they would injure our own laborers, burden our own taxpayers, and lower our own standard of life, we are obliged to exclude them. Our task is an unpleasant one, but wisdom assigns it, reason commends it, duty commands its performance, and patriotic legislators must obey.

If we are charged with being selfish in passing this bill, we shall remind those who make the charge that while our action may prove an immediate hardship to the illiterate foreigner, it will ultimately reveal itself, even to him, as a blessing in disguise. For when the peasants of Europe know that they can not come into the United States until they have learned to read some language, then schoolhouses will be built as if by magic in every community from the sterile steppes of Russia to the fertile valleys of the Tiber and the Po. Teachers will be multiplied and elementary education will become the birthright of every child, and ignorance, even in the most benighted province of Europe, will be no more.

By passing this bill we shall place a new value on American citizenship; we shall protect the American laborer, secure the American standard of wages, and preserve the American ideal of civilization; we shall make it impossible for any immigrant to enter here in the future until he is able to read at least 30 words in the Holy Bible and understand the lines:

My country, 'tis of thee,
Sweet land of liberty,
Of thee I sing.

[Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and myself, who were members of the Immigration Commission, came to the conclusion of our labors, and later there was reported a bill, I summarized our conclusions in a paragraph, the contrary of which no one has proved from that time to this. I said:

As to the character of the immigrants who have come to this country in the past 25 years, the Immigration Commission—nine men of differing views—reported unanimously that conviction for crime is no more common among the new immigrants than among the native born; that they are far less the victims of disease than any other class of immigrants of whom statistics have ever been kept; that they are rarely found among the victims of alcoholism; that pauperism is relatively at a minimum among them; that in the most congested blocks of cities having the largest foreign-born populations five-sixths of the homes of the foreign born are well kept and two-fifths are immaculate—and this on the report of women investigators; that their children attend school in large numbers; and that such new immigrants are much more rarely found in the insane asylum than their predecessors.

That was what we found after the expenditure of $700,000 and two years of work. Certainly it is not an indictment against the immigrants upon which to found new legislation.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER] said he was in favor of literacy. If he is in favor of literacy, then he ought to vote against this new illiteracy test, because the figures of the census of 1910 show that the most literate portion of our population are the children of foreign-born parents, only 1.1 per cent of them being illiterates.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] told us in an affecting way—as it always must be affecting when a man speaks of his good mother—of that mother denied the opportunity in early childhood, who has never learned to read and write. I assume, and the gentleman will admit, that that mother is an abler person than he, abler for a woman than he is for a man, and we all know how able he is for a man. Now, Mr. Chairman, in this literacy test we are asked to vote to keep out other mothers, equally able, equally deprived of opportunity, though for different reasons. I shall not vote to do that, because I think the gentleman stated the crux of the proposition that the failure to be able to read and write measures not lack of ability but lack of opportunity; and his good mother, able as he, simply typifies the thousands who come to this country, unable to read and write, but who see to it that their children, born either abroad or here, are the most literate and the most indefatigable in our schools. When my daughter stands at the head of her class, as I am thankful and proud as a parent to say that she does, I find that those who stand second, third, and fourth at her side are the children of the immigrants, put there and kept there by their parents, who, because themselves deprived of opportunity, are in precisely the same frame of mind as that lady in Ohio who, herself deprived of opportunity, made her son the president of a college. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is really no argument to be made in favor of the literacy test. Nothing has been proved against illiteracy except lack of opportunity, and therefore I want to devote the remainder of my 10 minutes to the amendment that is going to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], as I understand, if this amendment fails, and that is to insert the words "or political" after the word "religious."

I differ from the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. He says he is not in favor of letting in these Armenians. I am in favor of admitting them, and in my judgment they can not get in under the religious clause.

They were an independent kingdom. They did what some people wanted our country to do; they depended for preparation on the good will of their neighbors and they ceased to exist as a kingdom. The opposition to them in Turkey is political. I stated yesterday that 800,000 of them had already fallen under the sword and under the bullets of the Turks. One million two hundred thousand remain. Of course, only a small fraction will come, but those whose friends desire to have them come here ought not to be barred out simply because, being raised in the Ottoman Empire, they were deprived of an opportunity to learn to read. Many can not read, and if the words "or political" are not put in the Armenian stays out.

I wish there was time to read to the committee the individual cases of Armenians killed, as they have been in the last year and a half in that holocaust over there, where tens and hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands have been killed, and we here in the American Congress, in this great, broad, rich, largely undeveloped country purpose to reverse the policy under which our own parents and grandparents and ancestors came. My French Huguenot ancestors fled from persecution and landed on our shores in this country, and yet I am asked to keep out the Armenian of to-day, the ancestors of those to come to-morrow, and who would come in precisely the same condition that my ancestors came. I am not only going to vote to strike out the literacy test, but because the literacy test is in it I am going to vote against the bill. I am going to vote against it because while there are good things in it, the superlative iniquity of this specious test, in my judgment, is enough to cause any man who values the American past, who values the American present, and who hopes in all its breadth and vision, in all its beauty of idealism, that the present may extend into America's future; who objects to marring our history of toleration by this narrow-minded project—any man who holds these views ought to vote first to strike out the literacy test, and, second, if the test is not stricken out, to vote against the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, How much time has the gentleman from New York used?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT). The gentleman has used 10 minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I have yielded 20 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] to be used as he pleases.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MEEKER].

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I trust in the 10 minutes or less I shall occupy that I shall not be misquoted as many times on Monday as I have been to-day and yesterday.

I can not and would not vote for this bill unless I were thoroughly convinced in my own mind that under the bill this Nation is to provide an asylum for those who are persecuted because of their religion and those who suffer from political persecution. There is no man on the floor of this House who stands more nearly absolutely four square on the question of religious liberty than the man who is now addressing you. And the injection of any such sectarian talk into this issue is foreign to the question. [Applause.]

It is purely a question of a literacy test to be applied to the man who would come in here under ordinary circumstances. The extraordinary conditions under which a man might come have been provided for in this bill. I come from a State that has on its statute book a compulsory education law, and the same kind of talk was made in the Missouri Legislature against that law that has been made here against this one. It has been about our mothers and grandmothers who could not read, but I think the American Congress should legislate with its face to the future rather than to the past [Applause.]

There are plenty of gentlemen on the floor of the House who, if their native ancestry had been required to read before their descendants could come to Congress, would not have been here, but that is no indication that we are to look backward and say because father could not do so the son must not. You are squarely against the issue, and how men can stand and plead for illiteracy, not only domestic illiteracy, but imported illiteracy, is more than I can conceive, when we have provided an asylum for the religious and political refugees.

If citizenship is not worth the attempt to acquaint oneself with the general channels for the distribution of knowledge, then citizenship in this country does not amount to much. We have been asked to do everything and the man coming here to do nothing. We are asked to overlook all shortcomings. Gentlemen, it is a peculiar argument that is advanced here in this discussion, people all of the time saying the black hander can come in because he is educated, as if we had not provided in the bill to shut out the black hander, the gambler, and every one else who is undesirable, the assumption being that because a man can read there is no other test. This bill provides against the black hander and for every other type of criminal. It goes further than any other bill that has ever been offered to this Congress to reach a criminal, even after he comes here, and put him out of the country. You gentlemen know the type of men we are trying to reach in this bill. We are after not the individuals so much as we are after the illiterate herd that is brought into this country for the purpose, and for no other purpose, of beating down American standards of living and American wages [applause], and I have not heard one of you say anything about that. Furthermore, I say that under our economic law and with our present program, it might be a kindness to the immigrant who is coming here to be exploited if we told him that he can not come. Some are looking at this from a sentimental side purely. If sentiment is all there is to this argument, let us put it all aside, let us open our doors and say to every one, come in. Let us take a single illustration. Bring a man from any section of the Old World that you may choose. Poor boys are growing up in the same community side by side. One boy by some method or other has mastered his language so that he can read and write, but the other has not. To the one we open the door; to the other we say "study." Gentlemen, the beginning of a real education is in reading and writing, or else our educational program in this country is all upside down when we teach our children to read at the beginning of school. It is the foundation of the spread of knowledge, and we need not try to dodge it.

When a man can read 30 words promiscuously given him by the official it means that he must have command of much more than 30 words. Some seem to think that this test would simply mean for a man to learn by rote 30 words sent to him by some friend in this country. But he does not know which 30 words are to be given to him. It is a test for larger preparation. Are we going to say that men who come here shall come to be exploited and put at the mercy of all of whom we have heard here to-day, simply because somebody's grandmother could not read a hundred years ago? Here is the question that we must face for ourselves. We must work out our home educational problem; it is not solved, and a man who thrusts back into the face of any individual saying, "Why do not you go back and sweep your own doorstep," is not answering the question. As I said yesterday, all of the illiteracy of our own Nation that we now have is a blight upon our Nation; and the schoolhouse, whether it be a school of the Methodist, the Presbyterian, the Baptist, the Catholic, the Hebrew, or the great American school, is the foundation stone of our Government. [Applause.] Yet we would have men by a wave of the hand for the sake of somebody's grandmother ignore all demands we make upon others simply to let them come in here.

You speak of the political refugee. If the language is not distinct and plain on that one issue, then I can not understand how it is to be written. The revolutionist, your Kosciuszko, and all those men to whom reference has been made, could enter this country under this provision. This country will always remain the home of the religious and the political refugee, but we would just as well begin now to face that other problem of imported ignorance.

Talk as you please, I have generally found that the man who could not read had a slighter or smaller appreciation of the great things of the world around about him than the one who can read. Put this literacy test into your bill and pass it and it will be the first international compulsory-education law that was ever written. It will set a new standard and it will mean that coming into this land means more than the possession of thirty or forty dollars and a desire for a job for six months. It will mean the beginning of a new era, and if America has led thus far in her common school at home, has she not the right to demand universal training of men elsewhere? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has declared that he would vote against the bill because this is here, and a much more thoughtful man, if such could be, declared just preceding him that even though he did not quite agree as to this particular point and could not, yet he would vote for the bill with this in it. That is the difference in human nature. One man will not do anything unless he can get everything he wants and the other man is willing to be reasonable. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by the very earnest and able Representative from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] presents to this House the real question upon which the division of Members for and against this bill will take place. It is clear to the unprejudiced person that there are two lines of argument to be applied to the question before us.

When we consider that on three different occasions Presidents of these United States have vetoed such literacy tests, we on this side must admit that there is something of merit in the contention of the others; but I suggest to them that when they consider that on three different occasions the Congress of the United States has sent the test to the President, that they must admit that there is something of merit on our side. I have not the time in five minutes to refer to these arguments, but perhaps they can be summed up briefly in a single sentence—that while the spirit of altruism is most commendable, that that of self-preservation is still the first law of nature.

My friend from Illinois suggested a little while ago that the literacy test will not serve to keep out the viciously inclined, the criminal, or the otherwise undesirables. Of course, it will not, and nobody contends that it will, and as between education and character we will agree with him that character is by far the most potent; but given the character to work upon, education will do its possessor good and not harm. [Applause.] Otherwise you had better abolish your compulsory-education laws. And again I want to call your attention to this thought, that in legislating on this bill our first consideration is not the immigrant, for, however much we may desire to give him the opportunities afforded in this superior land, our first consideration is and must ever be this country of ours which should always be our chief concern. [Applause.] Let me direct your attention to the fact that conditions are vastly different to-day to those of former years and that we must meet them with different laws. In the pioneer days sturdy individualism and strong physical power was necessary in order to enable the immigrant to meet and overcome the difficulties encountered. The very conditions that confronted him were in themselves a selection of the most fit. We have passed beyond those conditions and the time has arrived when we as a country must look after our own interests, and in my judgment our interests require that while we are imposing an educational qualification upon our own people that we should ask those who come from without at least to meet the limited requirements of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield a half minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment which I offered to the paragraph which the gentleman from Illinois seeks to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of the last century Pestalozzi went over to France and sought an interview with Napoleon. His purpose was to impress upon the great leader the importance of general education. That interview was denied, and when that great Swiss educator returned home he was asked whether he saw the First Consul, and his reply was, "No; and the First Consul did not see me, either." Pestalozzi made a pilgrimage to Prussia, and was received by the queen, who was so impressed by what the great educator said regarding the possibilities of education that she sent 17 of the choice young men of Prussia to the school presided over by Pestalozzi. Among that group of 17, mark you, was found Froebel, Germany's greatest educator, the founder of modern education in Europe. Among them was also found Réaumur, second only to Froebel. The stimulus to scientific research began then that now is so scientifically worked out in Germany. Modern research in Germany is but a comment upon that influence. It is simply a suggestion of the value of education. When the Fathers planted our country the State of Massachusetts required at a very early date that every 50 families must provide for what we call an open school, and every 100 families must provide for a high school. While it is admitted our common-school system was not started until the thirties of the last century, Massachusetts provided for general education early, and yet I find that the State that has given Harvard to our country's history and the first general school system of the country, as well as the man who inaugurated our widely popular common-school system, as we now know it, is represented very largely here on this floor by men who are now opposing the literacy test for those immigrants who come into the country. For, Mr. Chairman, as I now recall, but two of her distinguished delegation supported such a measure in the last Congress, and yet they stand very high for education for those who are in the country. And when I think of Rhode Island, I think, of course, of the strong appeals of her Representatives, such as my genial and lovable friend on the front seat, Mr. O'SHAUNESSY, and I think of Roger Williams, our early greatest scholar, who taught John Milton to read the Dutch language.

Roger Williams established Rhode Island upon an educational basis, out of which has come Brown University, that my friend eminently represents on this floor. Why, my friends, Brown University gave to the country Horace Mann, this country's greatest educator, and the founder of the common school system of America. He was a son of Massachusetts, but an alumnus of Brown. It gave Mr. Justice Hughes, who is much talked about to-day in the country. [Loud applause.] It gave our country the United States' greatest State university president, namely, Prof. Angell, of Michigan University. [Applause.] And it gave a former superintendent of the public schools of Chicago, President E. Benjamin Andrews. Mr. Chairman, the States so advanced on educational lines, with such achievements to their credit, see their Representatives vote against this educational test. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ADAMSON. Can not you yield him one more minute? I want to ask him a question.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Ohio is a teacher, and has great observation, and I want to ask him a practical question. Does he not think we have enough ignorance in this country already without going to the trouble of importing more?

Mr. FESS. I certainly do. I am with you on that proposition.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. Is Hughes nominated now? [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. I think my answer will be more emphatic when a Republican sits in the presidential chair. When Ohio leaves off the habit of supplying the nomination we may come to the Supreme Court. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. I did not give the gentleman another minute to nominate a President. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the nomination. [Laughter.]

Mr. SABATH. Which is very sensible.

Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

[Mr. TOWNER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON].

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], in general debate yesterday, was probably indulging himself in the usual oratorical license when he spoke of traveling three blocks in my home city of New Haven before finding a person who could speak the English language. When the gentleman made this reference I happened to be sitting on the extreme right of the Democratic side, quite appropriately in view of the mixed politics of this bill, and as his remarks were addressed to the Republican side of the House and there was some confusion, I did not at the moment catch what he said. Whether his illustration is historically accurate really is immaterial. I feel quite certain, however, that if he refers to an actual occurrence it was during the hours when our public schools were in session and the children of school age absent from the street.

There are probably a number of blocks in New Haven where the parents in every house were born abroad, but in none of them would he find children of school age unable to read and speak the English language. In fact, he would find them all in our excellent public schools learning to speak, read, and write the English language. He would find further, if he examined the records of our schools, that these very children of foreign-born parentage are among the brightest students and best scholars. He would find also, if he carried the investigation far enough, that the percentage of illiteracy among the people living in the very city blocks he has indicated is lower than the percentage of illiteracy in the district so ably represented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

As to my friends representing southern constituencies, who are declaiming so loudly against ignorant foreigners, I challenge them to compare the illiteracy of their own States with that of the most exclusively foreign-born section of my city. They will find to their chagrin that the percentage of illiteracy among their own people is far and away above that of our latest arrivals.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Does the gentleman know why there is so much illiteracy in the South among the white people? I will tell you. We have had a burden of a million and a half niggers in Georgia ever since the Civil War, who were turned loose on us in their ignorance.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to abuse anybody for the lack of education. Least of all is it my intention to reflect unkindly upon the people of the South for the high percentage of illiteracy there. Like my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who on yesterday addressed the House with such eloquence and power, I, too, was born in the South and not very far from where the distinguished former Speaker was born. Before I was born the Civil War had come and gone, leaving devastation and poverty in its train. My people lived among the mountain whites. Throughout that whole mountainous section at that time opportunities for education were of the most meager and precarious character. Well do I remember the longing of my childhood days for an opportunity to learn from books, and no opportunity for doing so was lost. Through the long spring, summer, and autumn for as much as 12 hours a day we labored upon a somewhat grudging soil with rather primitive farm implements to earn a livelihood, and at night, when I should have been sleeping, I often pored over my books by the flickering blaze of a burning pine knot. [Applause.] I know what it means to lack opportunity for acquiring an education. There are thousands of others throughout the mountainous section of the South who have had to contend against the same meagerness of opportunity.

With the experiences of my own earlier years still fresh in my memory, I can not bring myself to say to anyone who has been denied those privileges which were mine in such scanty measure, "You can not come to this land of abundant opportunity, because in that other land whence you came you had no opportunity to learn to read." No; I would rather say to him, "Are you sound in body, mind, and character?" "Are you ready to do your full part, whatever it may be, in this hospitable country?" "Are you willing and able, if need be, to do the very hardest work of all?" Measuring up to these requirements, he should be admitted.

It was just a little more than 28 years ago that I, still seeking further opportunity to acquire an education, left my southern home and came to the city of my adoption, where my friend from Pennsylvania imagines the English language is seldom spoken. At that time the great tide of immigration from southern Europe was only setting in. Only comparatively few had then arrived, but enough to start the cry among the alarmists that the country was in danger of being swamped by immigration from Italy.

Both those who had prophesied evil and those who had faith in the coming immigrants, as I had, waited and watched the result. They had not long to wait. Soon the Italian immigrant began to make himself felt in the community he had chosen for his home. In business, in all the professions, and in every walk of life he soon began to make his place. One of them became surgeon general of the State, and is generally recognized as one of the most brilliant surgeons in the entire State. One went into the theatrical business, and is now one of the princes of that business, owning a string of theaters from Worcester to Washington. Hundreds of others, too numerous to mention, made and are making their places in the community.

Along with the Italians came the Russians, Poles, Hungarians, and other nationalities, both Jews and Christians, who in their turn, beginning at the bottom and working up, have also "made good." In every walk of life they have not only made good, but preeminently good. They are at the forefront of our leaders at the bar, in the commercial world, in the manufacturing world, in every walk of life. Only a few weeks ago one of the most gentle and noble among the Jews residing in New Haven went to his reward, mourned by an entire city, whose every resident had reaped the benefit of his fruitful labors and his great benefactions. Another related to him by marriage is now universally conceded by our people of all races, nationalities and religions to be one of the foremost men not only in his own city but in the entire State. For seven years he was president of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of New Haven and took a leading part in all the development of the city during that time. His hand is always extended, never to receive anything for himself, but always to help others, to help them not only by giving, but, what is far more important, by doing. I could go through the list and mention scores of others, but it is not necessary. These I have mentioned will afford illustrations of what immigrants and the sons of immigrants have done already and give indications of what we may expect of them in the years to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. TILSON. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. SABATH. I can give the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. TILSON. We are told that organized labor is in favor of this bill. I doubt that assertion stated so broadly. No man in this House has more intelligent organized labor in his district than have I, and yet I have heard from only a very few among the scores of local unions throughout my district on the subject. I have heard from a few, who have expressed their opinion in favor of the bill, but they have been kind enough to extend to me the same right which they themselves enjoy, of having convictions of my own on the subject. My sympathies are naturally with the workingmen. My own life has been one of arduous toil from early boyhood. I know by experience what it means to earn my bread in the sweat of my face. I honor the able leaders of organized labor—national, State, and local. It happens that the president of the Trades Council in my home city is one of my warmest personal friends. He is of that fine strain of Irish immigrant stock which came to this country half a century ago. He was formerly sergeant in the National Guard company of which I was captain, and he was a fine soldier, as he is now a useful, patriotic, respected citizen. Possibly he may prefer that I should vote for this bill, but I know he would not wish me to do so against my honest convictions.

In closing let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that New Haven is more, however, than the home of the immigrant. It is the home of culture and refinement, as well as the home of honest business and civic progress, in all of which the immigrant is doing his share. It is the home of Yale University, whose motto is "Light and truth," and whose influence is felt throughout the length and breadth of the land for education that shall mean service to mankind. It was the home of Noah Webster and the birthplace of his great dictionary, which has had a greater influence upon the English language in America than perhaps any other book, excepting only the English Bible. [Applause.] It is the home of the descendants of the Puritans and of the Pilgrims as well as of all the rest of the best blood of New England. Under the classic shades of its few remaining elms the sons of the blue bloods and the sons of the immigrants are dwelling and working together. No part of the city's life would be complete without all. Together they make up the heart and lifeblood of a great cosmopolitan city which in itself is a shining example of the true American melting pot in actual operation. Blending their energies in a united and harmonious effort, they are together working out the destinies of a great, modern, progressive American city. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] is recognized for four minutes.

[Mr. HAMILL addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SABATH. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN].

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, my good friend from Ohio, Mr. FESS, for whom I have the most profound respect, hurriedly broke from his brief reference to Harvard University in his desire to pay a tribute to Brown University and some of its distinguished sons. As a fellow president of an American college, he knows that one of the greatest educators in our splendid history, the president emeritus of the foremost educational institution in all America, President Eliot, of Harvard, is absolutely opposed to the literacy test in this bill. [Applause.] I wish that my able colleague had told you, what he will gladly admit, I know, and what I, a graduate of that ancient institution of learning, now say to you, that fair Harvard needs no defense and no apology; there she stands, mother of all the colleges of our glorious land, with her eternal "Veritas" proudly emblazoned upon her shield. I know full well she has no greater admirer in all the land than the distinguished Representative from the Buckeye State [Mr. FESS].

Yes, Mr. Chairman, I wish he could have told you something else which I can not refrain from uttering, and I speak here as the son of an immigrant father, who came to this country 75 years ago, unable to read and write a single word of any language; yet this Irish "alien" sent three of his boys to Harvard College, two of them graduating from that university with the degree of A. B. and the third emerging with his A. B., A. M., and Ph. D., all fairly earned and bestowed; yes, sir, this Irish father saw his four daughters complete with honor the educational course provided in one of the leading Roman Catholic academies in his adopted State, the Academy of Notre Dame. And yet, if this unjust literacy test had been the law of the land in his day and generation, America would have deprived that splendid man of the opportunity of making the contribution, which he at least tried to make, to the progress of this Republic. [Great applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have yet to hear from the advocates of this test a single word as to the reason why the illiterate immigrant has been deprived of an opportunity to get an education in the land of his birth. Oh, I recall the story of the Irish peasant in the old days of cruel British oppression. His only schoolmaster was the priest of his church, who brought to the heartbroken sheep of his flock not only the consolation of religion but a smattering of letters that they might acquire at least a little knowledge of books and of men. A cruel oppressor forbade the giving of this instruction to the Irish peasant. And I recall reading the story of those sainted priests, hunted from mountain to valley, from valley to lake and river, yet still true to their duty and their God, giving up all for conscience sake, a price upon their heads, and, oh, very often gaining the martyr's crown, because, in the language of Newman, at the grave of his friend Wilberforce, "They had made fools of themselves for Christ's sake." [Applause.]

That is the story of the Irish immigrant of the last generation, Mr. Chairman. But how glad I am to say to you here in this Congress of the United States that you can not reach the Irish immigrant of to-day with this bill, and it is not in his behalf I raise my voice in protest against its passage. I think of the unhappy and illiterate immigrant from the Russias—the son of Israel and the son of Poland—oppressed, scourged, almost destroyed in spirit and in life, with no opportunity in his native land for either letters or religion. I think of the boy and the girl from the Province of Lithuania who begs admission to this free country, and I think of the sons and daughters of sunny Italy—these are the children of the desert that your unfair, unreasonable, un-American, un-Christian, inhuman test seeks to stop from entering within our gates. If any man within the sound of my voice ere dreamed the Irish immigrant, in this year of our Lord, is not the peer in learning of your average native son let him awake to realize that when the Irish youth knocks at the door of Ellis Island or enters the port of Boston he comes, sir, almost ready and more than willing to try your examination for a bachelor of arts. [Long-continued applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have made no reference during this discussion to that phase of the controversy just touched on by my good friend from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL]. I have felt keenly for some time that there was a strong touch of bigotry and religious prejudice back of this whole fight. On my honor, I am yet to be persuaded that I have formed a false opinion. Carefully concealed in this debate, the animosity that stirs some men to action against the "alien" is the animosity that strikes at the church of his fathers. I sometimes like to repeat to myself, when I think of the bigot and the blackguard who assails that church, the finest American speech I ever read. It fell from the lips of a Catholic priest at the laying of the corner stone of the first Catholic college in New England, Holy Cross College, in Worcester, Mass. On the 21st day of June, 1843, the Rev. C. Constantine Pise, D. D., of New York, an immigrant priest, officiating as orator of the day, said:

The Catholic Church has always cherished within her bosom a sacred and undying solicitude for the education of her people. * * * Catholic education inculcates the necessity of virtue, morality, and charity toward all mankind. It breathes an inextinguishable spirit of patriotism into the ingenuous bosom, and bids the American youth remember and be grateful for the inestimable privileges he is destined to enjoy under the freest and happiest Government on earth; privileges which he would not sacrifice to any foreign authority; a Government in defense of which he would regard it the noblest act to die, if necessary, at the cannon's mouth. The college, of which the corner stone has just been placed will rear up its walls for an education proper to the soil and constitution of the State in which it is situated. The youth who will be here formed to letters will also be taught, first, the necessity of religion, the practice of virtue, the maxims of charity; then and firmly an entire devotion to the glorious institutions of our country. They will be instructed to recognize no temporal power over this free land in any foreign authority, whether secular or ecclesiastic. They will be taught that the sovereign Pontiff, whose spiritual jurisdiction, as Catholics, we admit and revere, possesses and claims no right to exercise any sway over us as citizens of this great Republic. That they must be ready to defend the prerogatives and liberties of their country against any aggressor, no matter who he may be. Our youth will be taught that he who is not faithful to his country will not be true to his God. [Applause.]

Here, Mr. Chairman, is the gospel of patriotic devotion. Here is true Americanism. Yes; ultra Americanism, and from the lips of an eloquent immigrant.

Mr. BURNETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, there is one feature of this bill in which I have taken a great deal of interest from the beginning. I know that the committee were actuated by the same motive that I was, and that was to exempt from the operation of the restrictive immigration law those people who leave their home countries to avoid religious persecution.

When that phrase is used two peoples come into the mind of every man who is familiar with the history of Europe in the last 50 years. The Jews, in countries that I will not name, have been persistently persecuted. It is a persecution that has run through centuries, and every man who has known the history of that great race which has given us so many philosophers, poets, musicians, soldiers, philanthropists, and men of great enterprise in the commercial world has felt intense sympathy with them in their sufferings.

They deserve well of the American Congress. In our early history they were patriots. In the War of Independence they gave freely of their means, and they shared the perils of battle. George Washington himself testified to the courage and ability of the Jewish soldiers that were under his command. They played the part of patriots in the War of 1812, and again in the Civil War they were found on both sides battling for their opinions. And while we have felt it was necessary in the interest of the country to strengthen the immigration law, we have all earnestly desired to exempt, as far as possible, from its operation the Jews of certain countries in Europe who come to the United States because of religious persecution, a barbarous thing that was inexcusable even in the Dark Ages.

They have made good citizens. It has been my good fortune to have personal, intimate, social, and business relations with them during the whole of my manhood. I have had among them many warm personal friends, and have had them for associates in business, and the more intimately I have known the Jews the more I have thought of them; the more I have learned of their history the more I have admired them, and I for one find no objection to their coming here.

There are few Socialists among them. I believe there is one political party in the House composed exclusively of Jews [laughter], but there are no anarchists and comparatively few criminals among them; there are no beggars, and they are not burdens on the State. The Jew is a philanthropist. He is a man of vast charities, and always his charity is directed by common sense and good business judgment, as it should be. The Jew's charity does not make beggars. It sets men up and makes them self-respecting and self-supporting.

The war in Europe, the great war in Europe, the unmatched crime of all time, has been specially hard on Jews. Some of them live in countries that deny them religious liberty and social and civil rights. But, true to their nature and history, they are not denied the privilege of sacrifice. They are compelled to fight the battles of countries that do not reward the service. In a quarrel they did not make, in support of dynasties that have never been even fair to them, they are required to make the supreme sacrifice. They are driven to the cruel task of risking their own lives in wars they did not want and to take those of their kinsmen and coreligionists in other armies. No fate could be harder; none more cruel and unjust.

These, Mr. Chairman, are the thoughts that directed me when in committee I labored to shape this bill so as to make it what the American people demand and at the same time accommodate this wonderful and unhappy people.

Another class comes into the minds of people charged with the duty of writing a law of this kind, and that is a people who, through centuries, have been persecuted by the people of Mohammedan faith. They have manifested the possession of qualities which we ought to cultivate. They possess a virility and persistency and adhesion to a faith and to high ideals that we can not encourage too much. The Armenians should not be killed because of religious faith, nor their women subjected to the infamy of being sent to a harem. The torture is more than most people could bear; most religious faiths would break down under a persecution like that, Mr. Chairman, but they have kept the faith and they deserve the exemption. We wrote this bill with these two people in mind, the Jews and the Christians. Certainly, sir, no man can fairly charge that there was any religious bigotry in the committee when they came to consider a paragraph which sought to protect and to admit these two classes of people, two religionists of diametrically opposite religious faith. No man in the committee, so far as I am advised, ever was actuated by any such motive as has been intimated on the floor of this House on more than one occasion. Such argument, such groundless assertions, rather, ought not to be used here. It is not only without foundation in fact, in so far as it refers to the committee headed by Mr. BURNETT, but it is, I fear, deliberately mischievous. Our work speaks for itself. Jew and Christian were treated alike, as they should be, in and before the law. Both are a tragic people. Massacre has been the portion of each, and, Mr. Chairman, just as far as my effort may do it, there shall be no slaughter of the innocent and helpless in America or elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes and the gentleman from Illinois has eight minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Is there not some mistake, Mr. Chairman, about my time? I had 45 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yielded 20 minutes to the gentleman from California, and that would leave him 25, and the RECORD shows that he yielded 5 and then 10.

Mr. BENNET. And the gentleman also yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the illiteracy test in this bill. Whether that motion prevails or not, I shall vote for the passage of the bill. My object in voting against the literacy test as prescribed in this bill is that it is basing the admission of citizens into this country, in my judgment, on an erroneous theory. It predicates admissions on the want of opportunity instead of extending to them opportunity. It is denying the opportunity which this Government has heretofore extended to the people of all the world, reversing the policy which has been in practice since the foundation of our Government, and one which has contributed much to our greatness as a world power, leading the other nations of the earth in those things which make a nation great, powerful, and enduring.

The educational test provided for in this measure is as follows: The alien shall be required to read "not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use," printed in plain type and in the language he may select. This does not appeal to me as much of a test of literary qualification. He is only required to read it, not to understand or comprehend the meaning—only to read it. Upon this qualification his right of admission is settled. This, in my judgment, is little less than farcical. For the want of compliance with this ordinary test good citizens, those who would assist in building up the grandeur of the country, defending its flag, extending its industrial operations, shall be denied citizenship, while others who could comply with it shall be admitted, though they will add nothing to its wealth or progress, but, on the contrary, become a burden to its people. There have come to our country during its existence people unable to read, because of the want of opportunity to prepare themselves, some of the best citizens the country has had, people who have not only been model citizens but patriots, and who have rendered valuable contributions in industrial affairs to the welfare and upbuilding of this great country. They felt and regretted their want of opportunity to secure an education and acquire knowledge which would have aided them in the prosecution of their work. They secured for their children what the want of opportunity had denied them. Because of their admission to citizenship the country did not suffer, but, on the contrary, profited.

If we glance at the history of events under the operation of the policy we have followed on this question, we must confess the country has suffered quite as much in its criminal history from the educated foreigner as from the uneducated. Many of the most atrocious crimes committed against person or property have been committed by the educated, who were not in sympathy with our public policies or the men who had charge of their administration. Events of this character are fresh in the minds of us all, hence it can not be safely contended that education alone makes good citizens and a law-abiding people. It takes more, and the quality required to make a good citizen may reside as well in an uneducated man as in an educated one.

We are not underestimating the value of education; we all know and recognize its necessity, its assistance to every citizen in the prosecution of every good pursuit, and we recognize its assistance to the man who is bent on mischief in carrying into effect his unlawful purposes. It is an instrument either of good or harm, as occasion may direct it. The educated man to be the good citizen must have a noble purpose and a laudable ambition. The uneducated person may possess these requisites and contribute much to the healthful progress of the country and society.

Again, it is anticipated that with the conclusion of the European war many from Europe will flock to this country for two reasons, one to escape other wars which it is feared will follow there, and further to escape the awful burden of taxation which necessarily must be levied on that people to pay the enormous debt which is now being created because of the war. Such as may come from these causes are not the classes against which this legislation is directed. All such will be of the thrifty classes, people desirous of building up fortunes instead of tearing them down; men hoping to accumulate instead of wasting property. Such classes as may come on account of such causes will be the better class of citizens, looking for peace and prosperity. No pauper ever feared taxation; he leaves no country because of high taxes or property destruction. The tax gatherer is no menace to him, because he has no property to tax and none to be wasted by war. It is the thrifty person who fears the desolating ravages of war and the burdens of high taxation. He seeks to husband the result of his years of toil and self-sacrifice. But the pauper has no anxiety of this kind. The tax gatherer has no terrors for him. People who from these causes will come to our country will be the better class, people who will assist in improving our conditions both socially and industrially, add their mite to the upbuilding of this the greatest country in the world. It may be some of these can not comply with the 30-word test, but no one would doubt for a moment their good purpose, pure intention, and the value of their citizenship. Let us do nothing to deny their admission, because they will come to increase the demand for the employment of labor, and increase the production of industry, and enjoy the better opportunities which this country affords. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Mr. Chairman, the citizenship of a nation, like the morals of character or the blood of the body, should be kept free from poison, corruption, and contamination. Undesirable immigrants should not be permitted to come into our country. The criminal, the lunatic, the anarchist, the pauper, the invalid, and the degenerate should not be allowed to land upon our shores. All these things I cheerfully concede. This principle of public policy I heartily indorse and advocate.

On the other hand, I do not believe that immigration should be unnecessarily or unreasonably restricted. I believe that the century-old, liberty-loving, open-door policy of the Republic in matters of immigration should be steadily maintained. I am convinced that the humanitarian traditions of our country should still be observed, and that foreigners of sound body, mind, and morals, of good and patriotic intentions toward our country and its institutions, and of sufficient means to justify the assumption that they will not become public charges, should be welcomed into our midst, made to feel that they are at home, and extended all the blessings of law and liberty that our Constitution and our flag afford.

I voted against the Burnett immigration bill during its passage through the Sixty-third Congress. I shall vote against it again at this time, because it contains an unjust, undemocratic, and un-American provision, the so-called literacy test. In my judgment this test is not only unjust and un-American, but is silly and senseless as well.

PRESENT IMMIGRATION LAW AMPLY SUFFICIENT TO EXCLUDE UNDESIRABLE ALIENS.

After all, the law embodied in the Burnett immigration bill is not really necessary to protect us against undesirable immigrants. The present immigration law, now alive upon the statute books, is all sufficient, if properly enforced, to guard our people against the evils of unhealthy additions to our population. If our real desire is to exclude the criminally inclined, the physically diseased, the mentally defective, the morally unfit, and the financially deficient, we have ample means at our disposal at the present moment to accomplish the results desired.

Section 2 of the present immigration law, the law now on our statute books, provides as follows:

SEC. 2. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons, and persons who have been insane within five years previous; persons who have had two or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; paupers; persons likely to become public charges; professional beggars; persons afflicted with tuberculosis or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such mental or physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all government, or of all forms of law, or the assassination of public officials; prostitutes, or women or girls coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive, in whole or in part, the proceeds of prostitution; persons who procure or attempt to bring in prostitutes or women or girls for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons, hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment or in consequence of agreements, oral, written, or printed, expressed or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; those who have been, within a year from the date of application for admission to the United States, deported as having induced or solicited to migrate as above described; any person whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes and that said ticket or passage was not paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government, either directly or indirectly; all children under 16 years of age unaccompanied by one or both parents, at the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or under such regulations as he may from time to time prescribe: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political, not involving moral turpitude: Provided further, That the provisions of this section relating to the payment for tickets or passage by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government shall not apply to the tickets of passage of aliens in immediate and continuous transit through the United States to foreign contiguous territory: And provided further, That skilled labor may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country: And provided further, That the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned professions, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

I respectfully submit that these provisions of our present immigration law are comprehensive and exhaustive and that they amply provide for the exclusion of all really undesirable aliens. But the authors of this bill do not seem to think so. They insist that another test must be added, and they have given us the literacy test, one that is essentially whimsical and illogical, unjust and un-American.

At bottom, the authors of this measure really desire to restrict immigration in general, but they do not dare to say so, for they know that the public policy and the national traditions of a century of glorious American history would be violated by it and that the American people would not tolerate it. It has been found necessary, therefore, to avoid open declaration in favor of unqualified restriction by inventing a pretext of patriotism and of solicitude for the welfare of the citizenship of the Republic. And, instead of selecting as a test the shape of the head, the color of the hair, or the size of the feet, they have proposed the plan of testing the immigrant's qualifications for good citizenship by his ability to read a few words upon a printed slip which may be handed him. To my mind, this test is ludicrous and absurd and I am opposed to it.

THE LITERACY TEST.

Let us consider the exact language of the literacy test and of the method of its application as it appears in the pending bill. It is as follows:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish.

* * * * * * *

That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read, the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in some one of the various languages or dialects of immigrants.

This is the test and the method of its application, and the immigrant who can not stand it is to be banished from the country. Is such a requirement just and reasonable? Is it in harmony with the theory and practice of our Government in matters of immigration for more than a century? Is the innovation proper, even if we have never before known such a thing in our national life? Will the application of the test give us a better quality of citizenship from abroad? Let us consider these questions briefly.

LITERACY TEST A POOR STANDARD OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP.

The fundamental error in the test proposed is the implication that the mere ability to read a few words upon a printed slip tends to qualify men and women mentally and morally for the duties of good citizenship; that it is evidence of that mental training and moral fitness that elevate the citizenship of a country. In the light of human history and experience this reasoning is unsound and absurd, since it is foolish to contend that the mere ability to read is proof that the intellect has been strengthened and illuminated or that the heart has been made honest, generous, and pure.

The simple ability to read is a mere instrument of the mind that may be devoted to base or noble uses and that may be made to accomplish good or bad results. It is a mere medium of the soul for the acquisition of mental and spiritual wealth or for the accumulation in the mind and heart of the filth and dross of life. The possession of this instrument of the mind and medium of the soul may be a blessing or a curse, according to the uses to which it is put. If the purposes are noble and fruitful, the result is a good man and a useful citizen; if the purposes are base and unworthy, the result is a bad man and an undesirable citizen. In any event, it is impossible that the literacy test should determine the essential qualifications of good citizenship, since the mere ability to read can not determine human motive, good intentions, and beneficent designs or gauge the products of the human mind and soul along lines of fitness for the duties of good citizenship. In other words, it is wrong to attempt to identify the bowl and the wine or to mistake the telescope for the star.

Genuine education, it is cheerfully conceded, not only ennobles the individual but contributes greatly to the formation of desirable citizenship in the State. But the education that accomplishes these results is not the mere ability to read or write or calculate in elementary mathematics. It is that form of culture, born of genuine education, that illuminates the intellect with noble thoughts, causes the heart to overflow with love, and fills the soul with the worship of the beautiful in nature and in art and with the adoration of Almighty God. Any other kind of education is a curse rather than a blessing.

It needs no argument to convince you, my colleagues, that brilliant education and the most scholarly accomplishments are frequently possessed by men of the most abandoned characters and profligate habits. Julius Caesar was the best educated public man in Rome, with the possible exception of Cicero. He was the author of the Commentaries, and therefore a man of letters. He was a great mathematician, an excellent grammarian, a clever linguist, a magnificent stateman, a mighty general, and one of the most powerful orators of his day. And yet, with all these things, his low and unworthy habits were the scandal of his age and race. Aaron Burr was the most brilliant and scholarly man of our early national life, at the same time that he was an acknowledged rake and libertine and a suspected traitor to his country. These are illustrious historical examples, and it is needless to multiply illustrations. Suffice it to say that our own observations in the ordinary walks of life are amply sufficient without having to invoke the great lessons of history. Every day in the streets we meet college graduates of superb attainments who have anarchy in their brains and perhaps murder in their hearts, while close beside them are walking law-abiding citizens of moral habits and industrious lives who can neither read nor write, but who fear God, love their fellow men, and would ask no happier death than to die upon the battlefield for their country and its flag.

The false and vicious philosophy of the literacy test consists in this: That a big, strong, brave, sober man, of clean life and patriotic motives, applies for admission to our country and asks to be permitted to enjoy the blessings of freedom and of equal opportunity in America. He wishes to go West or South with an ax to clear the forests or with a pick to build a railroad at $1.50 or $2 per day, a thing that the average American will not do at any price. It is his purpose to obey the law, support his family, and help develop the mighty resources of the land. But he is denied admission because poverty and oppression in his native country have prevented him from learning how to read 30 little words upon a slip of paper. At the same time and on the same ship comes a graduate from Oxford, Heidelberg, or the Sorbonne. He has no love for the domestic ties, no manly regard for womanhood, no reverence for the Deity, and no respect whatever for the country's Constitution or its flag. But he is admitted because he can read 30 little words on a slip of paper handed him by the immigration inspectors. I submit that the exercise of this discrimination would be not only an outrage upon common sense but an assault upon all the charities of the heart. It would certainly be an insult to and a subversion of the best and noblest traditions of our country.

OPPORTUNITY OF EDUCATION SHOULD NOT BE DENIED IMMIGRANTS.

It was Emerson, I believe, who said that America and opportunity were synonymous. By this, many phases and privileges of life are suggested—the opportunity to acquire wealth, to enjoy political freedom, to worship God according to the dictates of individual conscience, and to acquire that education that ennobles existence and contributes joy and dignity to life. And the great objection to the literacy test proposed is that it shuts the door of opportunity to many of the unfortunate and oppressed of earth in the matter of acquiring an education that has been denied them in their native lands. To be illiterate on account of lack of opportunity arising from persecution and oppression in foreign lands, and to come to America, the boasted land of opportunity, to be shut out because of an illiteracy which it was impossible to avoid, would be a solemn mockery and a grim travesty upon the much-heralded freedom and opportunity of America.

I believe in public schools and in public instruction as a means of creating good citizenship and of perpetuating free institutions among men. I believe that the public-school system is designed to create nobler and better results than the mere ability to read or write or spell. I believe that the public-school building may be made at once the cradle of learning and the temple of freedom. I believe that the denial to the alien who is otherwise worthy and acceptable the right to enter this cradle of learning and this temple of freedom is unjust and un-American, because it practically destroys the beneficent theory of opportunity upon which our Republic was founded.

The illiterate immigrant and his children should be welcomed and not rejected by us if they are sound and healthy in body, mind, and morals, and if they come with patriotic motives and with good intentions to be a part of us and help us work out an honorable and happy national destiny. Let us welcome such immigrants cheerfully and with open arms. Let us send them at once to the public-school building, over which floats the Stars and Stripes and upon whose walls are the portraits of Washington and Lincoln. There, through competent instruction, let us teach them not merely to read and write, which is but the beginning and the lower form of genuine education, but also all the elements of the beautiful, the good, and the true. Let us teach them the English language and imbue their minds and hearts with all the precepts and ideals of American national life. Let us teach them the great patriotic chapters of our history—the foundation of the Republic, the growth of our constitutional freedom, and the preservation of the Union, culminating in the sacrifice and martyrdom of Lincoln. Let us teach them regard for the rights and feelings of others and obedience to the laws of government and of God. Let us fill their souls with the spirit of the American Constitution and with the glory of the American constellation. The result will be a patriotism broader and deeper than that proclaimed in the platform of any political party and a morality grander and purer than that to be found in the tenets of any religious sect.

It is at once astonishing and gratifying to learn with what eagerness the children of newly arrived immigrants rush into the public schools, how rapidly they learn the English language and other subjects taught, and with what cheerful enthusiasm they embrace the intellectual freedom of America and all that it implies. One year at school is amply sufficient to make the young immigrant an American in all but law and to make him long for the opportunity to demonstrate the quality of his patriotism as an American and as a defender of her institutions and her civilization.

It is also astonishing and, from the American viewpoint, slightly distressing to learn that the children of immigrants excel the children of native-born Americans in school. The United States Commissioner of Education, in his letter of transmittal of Bulletin No. 51, issued in January, 1914, and entitled "Education of the Immigrant," says:

That these people—

Meaning immigrants—

are interested in education of their children, or at least obedient to the school-attendance laws, is shown by the fact that the least illiterate element of our children is the native-born children of foreign-born parents. The illiteracy among the children of native-born parents is three times as great as that among the native-born children of foreign-born parents.

This statement of the Commissioner of Education is borne out by census statistics:

Class.	1890	1900	1910
	Per cent.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Native white of native parentage	7.5	5.7	3.7
Native white of foreign or mixed parentage	2.2	1.6	1.1
Foreign-born white	13.1	12.9	12.7

This table shows that the illiteracy among native white of native parentage is 3.7 per cent, and among the native white of foreign parentage is only 1.1 per cent.

This hunger and thirst for knowledge on the part of immigrants and their children should itself appeal most powerfully to our generosity and our compassion, and we should hesitate long to shut the doors of educational opportunity in the face of those who have been taught to believe that the word America and the word opportunity are synonymous.

ILLITERATE IMMIGRANTS AND THE LABOR QUESTION.

Again, it is contended that immigration of illiterate foreigners to our shores lowers the wages of labor and tends to degrade American social and industrial life. But is this contention supported by facts and figures? Is it not true that both literate and illiterate immigrants have been coming to our country during all our history? Is it not equally true that during all that time the wages of labor have been constantly increasing and that the conditions of social and industrial life among laboring men have been growing constantly better?

During the last 20 years there has been a great stream of immigration to America from Europe of both literate and illiterate foreigners. The influx of aliens during that time has been greater than during all the previous years of the history of the Republic. And yet the rate of wages of laborers has been gradually increasing and the conditions of social and industrial life among laboring men have been growing better with each advancing year. In 1890 the average earning of the laboring man in the United States was about $335, while to-day it is more than $550. It has almost doubled in two decades.

In addition to increase in wages, the condition of the American laborer has been very greatly bettered by shorter hours of work, by better tools with which to work, and by easier, happier, and more sanitary environments of labor. In consequence, his employment has been rendered vastly more agreeable and his life and health ennobled and improved.

The American workingman of to-day has more of the comforts and the conveniences of existence, more carpets upon his floor, more pictures upon his walls, more musical instruments in his home, more money in the savings bank, and more leisure for reading and recreation than ever before in our history. It is difficult, then, in the face of these facts, to understand how immigration, which has been overwhelming in the last 20 years, lowers wages and tends to degrade American social and industrial life.

The fact of the matter is that the immigrant has been a positive advantage in more ways than one to the American people in general and to organized labor in particular. He has come, not to compete with the skilled laborer but to do the work of the unskilled laborer. He has come to do the work that the native American will not do, to build the railroads and work the mines. He has met the great demand for unskilled labor and has met it well, and the fact that he could not read or write has not affected the proportions, deteriorated the quality, or marred the beauty of the finished product of his labors.

Gentlemen of the opposition have repeatedly declared during the debate on this bill that vast numbers of illiterate immigrant laborers come to America each year for no other purpose than to make money to take back with them to their native lands and that by doing this they help to drain the country of its wealth. These plausible declaimers and polished sophists seem to fail to note the ludicrous contradictions in their own arguments, for they evidently forget that they have denounced illiterate foreign labor as cheap, and, having done so, they would not dare to assert that these poor, illiterate, alien workmen have not left behind them 100 cents for every dollar that they have taken away with them in the development of the country, in forests felled, mines opened up, and railroads built in the sweat and blood of their lives and toil. A better target for the ridicule and invective of Members of this House would be the degenerate Americans who have expatriated themselves and carried with them fabulous wealth acquired in their native country to buy low titles of nobility for their daughters and themselves in foreign lands.

It is sometimes charged that the immigrant and his rate of wages are detrimental to the trade-unions of America. This charge is refuted, however, by the statistics of the Immigration Commission, which show that unions are as strong among foreign-born as among native American laborers. The following table shows percentages of different classes of organized labor. This table is taken from Senate Document No. 696, Sixty-third Congress, second session:

Organization of native and immigrant labor.

Nativity of wage earners.	Percentage organized.
Native born of native father:
White	13.9
Negro	17.9
Native born of foreign father	14.1
Foreign born	13.4

It is a remarkable fact, in connection with the charge that immigrant labor is detrimental to the plans and purposes of labor unions, that in those sections of the country, notably in the Southern States, where the foreign-born population is small and scattered, child labor is encouraged, longer hours for workingmen are tolerated, and trade-unionism makes its poorest gains. And, as if the irony of fate had ordered it, more than 50 per cent of the executive committee of the American Federation of Labor, whose leaders are said to favor restricting immigration, were originally immigrants to this country. The irony and the sarcasm of the situation are only emphasized and accentuated by the fact that Mr. Samuel Gompers, the great leader of the Federation of Labor, was an immigrant from England, and that Mr. Morrison, the secretary, came from Canada. In addition to these are some of our best-known public men, now enjoying high positions in official life, notably Hon. William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor of the United States, and Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, both of whom were immigrants to this country. The appointments of these men to positions of public trust were either bad or they form a silent and yet emphatic protest against the charge that immigrants are a menace and a detriment rather than an aid and a blessing to the country.

If we consent to leave the present for a moment and cast a reminiscent glance upon the early history of the Republic a curious and instructive chapter relating to illiteracy and the immigrant will confront us. A few years ago, in one of the magazines—Scribner's or in the Century, I have forgotten which—appeared an article containing actual photographic copies of the signatures to deeds conveying lands in Virginia. Many of these signatures were made by marks, indicating that the grantors could not write. Many of the signers to these deeds were newly arrived immigrants and were the fathers and mothers of those who afterwards proudly boasted of their membership in the first families of Virginia. Under the present literacy test these progenitors of the blue-blooded aristocrats of the Old Dominion would have been shut out and the names of many of the illustrious men who made the Commonwealth along the Potomac "the birthplace of Presidents and the burial ground of heroes" would not have appeared upon the pages of our history.

The father of Abraham Lincoln could not read or write, and if he had been born abroad and had come seeking admission to our country he would have been excluded under the present test. The big, strong man, the great rugged child of nature, who came from the forests of Kentucky and Illinois, who threw aside the maul and wedge to become the leader and savior of a nation in its hour of supreme distress, that Lincoln who freed the slave and maintained the Union, whose fame strides the earth like a Colossus, and whose martyrdom falls like a solemn and perpetual benediction upon his countrymen everywhere, would not then have been given to America and to civilization.

ILLITERATE IMMIGRANTS AND THEIR RELATIONSHIP TO CRIMINALITY.

We are told by the authors of this bill that illiterate immigrants are a danger to the country because they are prone to criminality; that is, the percentage of crime among them is greater than among other classes of citizens. This charge seems to rest upon as feeble a foundation as many other charges made. They furnish us with statistics that are known to be partial and unreliable. It is admitted to be a fact that only partial and, in many cases, unreliable statistics can be secured.

During the debates upon the literacy test in the immigration bill in the Sixty-third Congress the advocates of the test made great point of a certain letter by Mr. Frederick A. Pope, late prosecutor of pleas, Somerset County, N. J., to President Taft, of date February 8, 1913. In this letter Mr. Pope establishes to his own satisfaction by statistics which he himself voluntarily prepared and kept, but which were not required to be prepared or kept by any provision of New Jersey law, that illiteracy tends to increase criminality.

Fearing that the information furnished by the Pope letter was unreliable and misleading, my colleague from New York, Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL, a member of the House Immigration Committee, made a personal investigation of the truthfulness of the assertions of Mr. Pope by conversing first and then by correspondence with Mr. A. M. Beekman, present prosecutor of pleas of Somerset County, N. J., and successor of Mr. Pope in that office. The entire correspondence, consisting of the letter of Mr. Pope to President Taft, of the letter of Mr. SIEGEL to Mr. Beekman and his reply thereto, is contained in the hearings before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House, of dates Thursday, January 20, 1916, and Friday, January 21, 1916. This correspondence is decidedly instructive and illuminating, and I give it herewith entire.

Letter of Mr. Frederick A. Pope to President Taft:

My duties as prosecuting attorney of Somerset County, N. J., have given me an excellent opportunity to check up in one important particular the investigations and conclusions of the immigration commission with reference to the literacy test. During the last two years I have kept a careful record of the last 114 criminal cases that I have prosecuted against aliens, with the following interesting results:

	Illiterate.	Literate.
Homicide	3
Atrocious assault and battery	34	6
Simple assault and battery	9	2
Larceny	14	2
Sexual crime	7	1
Perjury	2	1
Excise	11	5
Marriage	3	1
Frauds	2	4
Miscellaneous	6	1
Total	91	23

The following conclusions are deducible from the above:

(1) Of the 114 crimes committed by aliens 54 were acts of personal violence, and of these 54, 46 were committed by illiterates while only 8 were chargeable to those able to read and write.

(2) Of the 46 committed by illiterates, 3 were homicides, 34 were atrocious assaults (by maiming and wounding with a deadly weapon), and only 9 were simple assaults, showing conclusively that the illiterate alien 37 times out of 46 makes use of a deadly weapon in order to avenge his wrongs, fancied or real.

(3) Out of 16 cases of larceny (stealing of all kinds), 14 defendants were illiterates.

(4) Out of 8 sexual crimes, 7 were committed by illiterates, 3 of these being carnal abuse of infants under 10 years of age.

(5) Out of 3 perjury cases, 2 were against illiterates; that is, of those brought to justice.

(6) Out of 16 cases of violation of excise laws, 11 were illiterates, showing an utter disregard for law.

(7) Of the 4 crimes against the institutions of marriage, 3 were illiterates.

(8) Only in cases of fraud did the literate exceed the illiterate.

I am Mr. President,

Sincerely, yours,

FREDERICK A. POPE,
Prosecutor of Pleas, Somerset County, N. J.

FACTS PROVING FALSITY OF STATEMENTS IN POPE LETTER.

Hon. A. M. BEEKMAN,
Prosecutor, Somerset County, N. J.

MY DEAR MR. BEEKMAN: In accordance with my conversation with you this morning, would say that I inclose you herewith a copy of letter which Mr. Frederick A Pope sent to President Taft on or about February 8, 1913.

Being a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, could I ask you to furnish me with the following information:

No. 1. Whether under the statutes of the State of New Jersey defendants who are found guilty of criminal offenses or plead guilty to criminal offenses are required to be asked whether they can read or write any langauge.

No. 2. Whether, to your knowledge, it has been customary in criminal courts in the State of New Jersey to make such inquiries and whether the answers so received, if any, have been recorded.

No. 3. Have any official statistics been kept as to the number of illiterates who have been found guilty of criminal offenses in the county of Somerset, State of New Jersey?

No. 4. Have you found that defendants in the county of Somerset who were charged with criminal offenses to have been, as a rule, illiterate?

No. 5. Of the men charged with homicides during the year 1915 and up to date in your county, have they been illiterate?

No. 6. Can you state as to whether there have been 114 criminal cases of alien illiterates tried or disposed of in Somerset County in any two years?

No. 7. Can you state as to whether the alien residents in your county are making any effort to receive an education and as to whether their children are making any efforts to receive an education?

Thanking you for the trouble I am giving you, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

ISSAC SIEGEL.

OFFICE OF THE PROSECUTOR OF PLEAS OF THE COUNTY OF SOMERSET,
Somerville, N. J., January 19, 1916.

Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL,
Member of Congress, Congressional Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SIEGEL: I will answer the inquiries contained in your favor of January 17, categorically, as near as possible.

Question No. 1: A. There is no requirement in this State that defendants pleading guilty and found guilty upon trial shall be asked whether they can read or write any language.

Question No. 2: A. I have not tried any criminal cases outside of my own county, but have tried a number there, and since April 1 last have been prosecutor of pleas. I have never observed any custom in any of the courts of this State requiring criminals to be questioned as to their ability to read and write, and I know of no county where such record is kept; it is purely a local custom.

Question No. 3: A. No official statistics have been kept in the county of Somerset from which the number of illiterates could be obtained.

Question No. 4: A. My experience is that most of those who are charged with crime have been able to read and write some language. There is a percentage, however, unable to do so.

Question No. 5: A. All three of the men charged with homicide during the year 1915 were able to read and write. Two were American born, one a naturalized citizen, and one a colored man.

Question No. 6: A. There is no record from which such an assertion can be disputed. One hundred and fourteen criminal cases does not appear unusual for a period of two years, but as to the percentage of illiteracy, I can not state.

Question No. 7. A. According to my observation, the alien residents in Somerset County make diligent efforts to have their children educated. Such exceptions as occur are due to a child-labor system and the incident temptation to place the children at wage-earning employments. Some of the best and most serious-minded students in our public schools are the children of foreign-born parents.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

A. M. BEEKMAN,

This correspondence is valuable only as showing the presence of the personal and the absence of the official element in the matter of securing reliable statistics in relation to illiteracy and crime. From Mr. Beekman's letter we are to infer that Mr. Pope was not required by law to make any record or keep any statistics of illiteracy and crime. Why Mr. Pope did this without legal obligation to do so is not revealed to us in his letter to President Taft. What his motive was in tabulating statistics not required by law is open to question and suspicion. In the absence of legal requirement to do so and without proof of proper motive other than idle curiosity, we may reasonably doubt whether such a record was every really kept.

But, admitting that such a record was really kept, we then have before us only two sets of conflicting opinions and varying observations, during different terms of office, by two different prosecuting attorneys performing the same official duties at the same place and over substantially the same class of people. One of these prosecutors, Mr. Pope, says that the three homicide indictments prosecuted by him were all against illiterates. The other prosecutor, Mr. Beekman, plainly says that—

All three of the men charged with homicides during the year 1915 were able to read and write.

Mr. Pope's tabulated figures show that a large majority of those prosecuted by him were illiterate criminals. On the other hand, Mr. Beekman emphatically makes this statement in his letter to Mr. SIEGEL:

My experience is that most of those who are charged with crime have been able to read and write some language.

The only inference justified by this correspondence is that all such criminal statistics are personal, partial, unofficial, and unreliable. And I submit that this class of statistics is a fair sample of the unreliable data most commonly used by the advocates of the literacy test in attempting to prove their case.

We are willing to admit that in most if not all the States of the Union approximately correct statistics of illiteracy and crime are kept in penal institutions where felons are confined. But only a small fraction of the criminals of the country ever reach these penal institutions where official records of illiteracy and crime are kept with any accuracy and completeness. The large majority of men who are accused of crime are charged with misdemeanors whose penalities never land them in penitentiaries, and outside of these penal institutions criminal statistics are meager and unreliable.

When we come to consider the records of penitentiaries where felons are confined and where statistics in their relationship to illiteracy and crime are approximately accurate and complete, we find that the very large majority of the inmates of these penal institutions are not illiterate. Indeed, Mr. R. S. Fulton, writing in the Independent of February 14, 1916, declares that—

Comparative statistics show that 87 per cent of criminals in jails and penitentiaries can read and write.

This statement is doubtless absolutely correct, and the reflection is forced upon us that serious crimes whose penalties lead to penitentiaries are committed by educated criminals, while misdemeanors, minor offenses, are committed by illiterates. The illiterate immigrant criminal offender will in a condition of intoxication commit assault and battery or petty larceny and the following day confess his crime and pay the penalty with a small fine or be discharged under suspended sentence. On the other hand, the educated criminal, the polished native rascal from an American college, and the well-educated black-hand criminal from Italy, are the really dangerous criminals of the land, the instigators to riot and murder, the wreckers of banks, the seducers of confiding women, the forgers, perjurers, and grand-larceny thieves.

It has been to me a matter of some satisfaction and no little amusement to note that during the present debates on the Burnett immigration bill little or no reference has been made to the Pope letter, which was so loudly proclaimed in the debates on the same subject during the Sixty-third Congress. The Beekman letter seems to have completely exploded the Pope letter, leaving behind only ashes, débris, and bad odors. However, if there be those still in this House ready to place reliance upon Mr. Pope's unofficial statistics in relation to illiteracy and crime, I would respectfully recommend to them serious consideration of the following significant sentence from the letter of Mr. John Martin, chief of police, of Buffalo, N. Y., of date February 2, 1916, to Hon. ISAAC SIEGEL, in which he discusses the number of crimes committed in Buffalo in the year 1915 and their relationship to illiteracy:

Of the total number arrested, 31,076 were able to read and write and 20 were unable to read and write, a grand total of 31,096.

As for myself, I repeat that all such statistics are partial and unreliable, but if certain Members insist upon giving credence to letters like those of Mr. Pope to President Taft, I must insist that due consideration be given to letters on the same subject like those of Mr. Martin to Hon. Isaac Siegel. If this is done, the case of the advocates of the literacy test in its relationship to crime must fall for want of satisfactory proof.

ILLITERATE IMMIGRANTS AND THEIR RELATIONSHIP TO INSANITY.

As there seems to be no real relation between illiteracy and crime, it may be confidently asserted that there is also no real relation between illiteracy and insanity, as the authors of this bill seem to contend by the equally partial and unreliable statistics and data that they have furnished us along with statistics and data touching upon the relation between illiteracy and crime. It is elementary that the mere ability to read or write is no real indication of mental strength or character. Imbeciles and idiots have been known to read and write without being able to comprehend what they were reading or to explain what they were writing.

In the matter of illiteracy and insanity, I only wish to add that our present immigration laws, if properly enforced, will shut out lunatics, imbeciles, idiots, and the feeble-minded from our shores. If immigrants who are strong minded when they are admitted to the country become afterwards insane, it is an inevitable misfortune which the country must bear with composure and compassion, since the matter can not be helped.

As a matter of fact, lunatics and other feeble-minded persons are excluded annually by the thousands under the present immigration laws. Other undesirable immigrants are also excluded by the thousands and tens of thousands every year. In 1914 more than 33,000 undesirable aliens were kept from our ports. And yet it seems to be a public impression that the present laws do not sufficiently protect us against immigration.

THE VETO MESSAGES OF THE PRESIDENTS.

A discussion of this subject would not be complete without calling attention to the fact that three Presidents of the Republic, Mr. Cleveland, Mr. Taft, and Mr. Wilson, have vetoed similar bills to the one which we are now debating. It might also be well to add that no President has ever signed an immigration bill containing a literacy test. I wish to submit herewith the veto messages of the three Presidents heretofore referred to:

VETO MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT CLEVELAND.

MARCH 2, 1897.

To the House of Representatives:

I hereby return without approval House bill No. 7864, entitled "An act to amend the immigration laws of the United States."

By the first section of this bill it is proposed to amend section 1 of the act of March 3, 1891, relating to immigration by adding to the classes of aliens thereby excluded from admission to the United States the following:

"All persons physically capable and over 16 years of age who can not read and write the English language or some other language * * *."

A radical departure from our national policy relating to immigrants is here presented. Heretofore we have welcomed all who came to us from other lands except those whose moral or physical condition or history threatened danger to our national welfare and safety. Relying upon the zealous watchfulness of our people to prevent injury to our political and social fabric, we have encouraged those coming from foreign countries to cast their lot with us and join in the development of our vast domain, securing in return a share in the blessings of American citizenship.

A century's stupendous growth, largely due to the assimilation and thrift of millions of sturdy and patriotic adopted citizens, attests the success of this generous and free-handed policy which, while guarding the people's interests, exacts from our immigrants only physical and moral soundness and a willingness and ability to work.

A contemplation of the grand results of this policy can not fail to rouse a sentiment in its defense, for, however it might have been regarded as an original proposition and viewed as an experiment, its accomplishments are such that if it is to be uprooted at this late day its disadvantages should be plainly apparent and the substitute adopted should be just and adequate, free from uncertainties, and guarded against difficult or oppressive administration.

It is not claimed, I believe that the time has come for the further restriction of immigration on the ground that an excess of population overcrowds our land.

It is said, however, that the quality of recent immigration is undesirable. The time is quite within recent memory when the same thing was said of immigrants who, with their descendants, are now numbered among our best citizens.

A careful examination of this bill has convinced me that for the reasons given and others not specifically stated its provisions are unnecessarily harsh and oppressive, and that its defects in construction would cause vexation and its operation would result in harm to our citizens.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

VETO MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT TAFT.

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3175.

I do this with great reluctance. The bill contains many valuable amendments to the present immigration law which will insure greater certainty in excluding undesirable immigrants.

The bill received strong support in both Houses and was recommended by an able commission after an extended investigation and carefully drawn conclusions.

But I can not make up my mind to sign a bill which in its chief provision violates a principle that ought, in my opinion, to be upheld in dealing with our immigration. I refer to the literacy test. For the reasons stated in Secretary Nagel's letter to me I can not approve that test. The Secretary's letter accompanies this.

WILLIAM H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, February 14, 1913.

VETO MESSAGE OF PRESIDENT WILSON.

To the House of Representatives:

It is with unaffected regret that I find myself constrained by clear conviction to return this bill (H. R. 6060), "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States," without my signature. Not only do I feel it to be a very serious matter to exercise the power of veto in any case, because it involves opposing the single judgment of the President to the judgment of a majority of both Houses of the Congress, a step which no man who realizes his own liability to error can take without great hesitation, but also because this particular bill is in so many important respects admirable, well conceived, and desirable. Its enactment into law would undoubtedly enhance the efficiency and improve the methods of handling the important branch of the public service to which it relates. But candor and a sense of duty with regard to the responsibility so clearly imposed upon me by the Constitution in matters of legislation leave me no choice but to dissent.

Restrictions like these, adopted earlier in our history as a Nation, would very materially have altered the course and cooled the humane ardors of our politics. The right of political asylum has brought to this country many a man of noble character and elevated purpose who was marked as an outlaw in his own less fortunate land, and who has yet become an ornament to our citizenship and to our public councils. The children and the compatriots of these illustrious Americans must stand amazed to see the Representatives of their Nation now resolved, in the fullness of our national strength and at the maturity of our great institutions, to risk turning such men back from our shores without test of quality or purpose. It is difficult for me to believe that the full effect of this feature of the bill was realized when it was framed and adopted, and it is impossible for me to assent to it in the form in which it is here cast.

The literacy test and the tests and restrictions which accompany it constitute an even more radical change in the policy of the Nation. Hitherto we have generously kept our doors open to all who were not unfitted by reason of disease or incapacity for self-support or such personal records and antecedents as were likely to make them a menace to our peace and order or to the wholesome and essential relationships of life. In this bill it is proposed to turn away from tests of character and of quality and impose tests which exclude and restrict; for the new tests here embodied are not tests of quality or of character or of personal fitness, but tests of opportunity. Those who come seeking opportunity are not to be admitted unless they have already had one of the chief of the opportunities they seek, the opportunity of education. The object of such provisions is restriction, not selection.

If the people of this country have made up their minds to limit the number of immigrants by arbitrary tests and so reverse the policy of all the generations of Americans that have gone before them, it is their right to do so. I am their servant and have no license to stand in their way. But I do not believe that they have. I respectfully submit that no one can quote their mandate to that effect. Has any political party ever avowed a policy of restriction of this fundamental matter, gone to the country on it, and been commissioned to control its legislation? Does this bill rest upon the conscious and universal assent and desire of the American people? I doubt it. It is because I doubt it that I make bold to dissent from it. I am willing to abide by the verdict, but not until it has been rendered. Let the platforms of parties speak out upon this policy and the people pronounce their wish. The matter is too fundamental to be settled otherwise.

I have no pride of opinion in this question. I am not foolish enough to profess to know the wishes and ideals of America better than the body of her chosen Representatives know them. I only want instructions direct from those whose fortunes with ours and all men's are involved.

WOODROW WILSON.

The WHITE HOUSE, January 28, 1915.

OPINIONS OF PRESIDENT ELIOT OF HARVARD AND OF CARDINAL GIBBONS.

In addition to the above it may not be inappropriate to submit at this point the views on the literacy test of two other very great Americans, one, President Eliot, of Harvard, an eminent, educator, and the other, Cardinal Gibbons, an eminent Catholic clergyman.

President Eliot, of Harvard, has made the following statement upon this important question:

I beg leave to invite your attention to the following statement of the principles which should govern the national legislation on immigration:

First. Our country needs the labor of every honest and healthy immigrant who has the intelligence and enterprise to come hither.

Second. Existing legislation is sufficient to exclude undesirable immigrants.

Third. Educational tests should not be applied at the moment of entrance to the United States, but at the moment of naturalization.

Fourth. The proper educational test is capacity to read in English or in the native tongue, not the Bible or the Constitution of the United States, but newspaper items in some recent English or native newspaper which the candidate can not have seen.

Fifth. The attitude of Congress and the laws should be hospitable and not repellant.

The only questions which are appropriate are, Is he healthy, strong, and desirous of earning a good living? Many illiterates have common sense, sound bodies, and good characters. Indeed, it is not clear that education increases much the amount of common sense which nature gave the individual. An educational test is appropriate at the time when the foreigner proposes to become a voting citizen. He ought then to know how to read.

Cardinal Gibbons has used the following language:

I am not in favor of any educational test as applied to immigrants desiring to enter the United States. Such a law, if passed, would, in my opinion, work great harm, for illiteracy is by no means always ignorance. If the immigrant is industrious and thrifty he will make a useful citizen, whether he be literate or illiterate. The educated schemer is in more ways than one more dangerous than the honest workman, even though he be illiterate.

The cumulative testimony of the three great Presidents, the great educator, and the great ecclesiastic against the literacy test is overwhelmingly convincing and should be a determining factor in the deliberations of this House.

PROTEST AGAINST RACE PREJUDICE AND RELIGIOUS BIGOTRY.

In concluding my speech, I now approach a phase of the discussion with extreme hesitation and with deep regret. I wish to call attention to a feature of the debate which has more than once claimed the attention of Members on this floor. I refer to the racial and religious elements which are said to be wrapped up in the literacy test. And, at the very outset, I wish to declare my feelings of embarrassment and distrust at the mere mention of the subject, feeling as I do that the American Congress should be the last place on earth where racial and religious prejudice should find countenance and encouragement in debate and in public effort to solve human rights and promote the welfare of the Republic.

However deep my convictions that sinister racial and religious motives were behind this bill, I would have hesitated long to express them if it had not happened that others more candid and more fearless than I had already declared race discrimination and religious bigotry to be important factors in the consideration of the literacy test. The question having been raised in serious and animated form, it does not become the courageous Representative to dodge or run. It is his duty to meet the issue fairly and squarely and express his convictions honestly and fearlessly.

The races and religions, the Jewish and Catholic, believed and asserted by many Members of this House to be the intended victims of racial and religious discrimination under the operation of the proposed literacy test, are important elements of the population of my district, and it is my duty to defend them at all times and in all places when they are unjustly attacked.

At the hearings of January 20 before the Immigration Committee Miss Grace Abbott, of Chicago, a Protestant lady of fine character and extensive experience in immigrant affairs, gave expression to the following deeply significant sentiment:

I think many people oppose the recent immigration because it is Catholic and Jewish instead of Protestant, as the earlier was. I am neither Catholic nor Jewish.

This declaration was born of the experiences and observations of many years of devoted service spent in helping immigrants, and Miss Abbott knew full well whereof she spoke.

A few days ago on the floor of this House my colleague from New York [Mr. BENNET] boldly declared that "this bill is aimed at immigrants who are Catholic," and I may add that I agree with him. I do not mean to say by this that the sole purpose of the literacy test is to exclude Catholics, but I am profoundly convinced that their exclusion is an important consideration in the make-up of the measure. The reply of the author of this bill [Mr. BURNETT] on a subsequent date to the charges of Mr. BENNET and others that religious discrimination is back of the advocacy of the literacy test was more entertaining and amusing than convincing. In the face of so many indications that the test is designed to exclude Catholics and Jews it was almost facetious to hear my distinguished colleague from Alabama declare that "gentlemen have undertaken to inject a religious prejudice into the matter."

In this connection I can only express my deep regret that the religious aspects of the debate on the pending measure should have stirred up such bitter feelings culminating in the hot exchange of ugly epithets between the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN]. It is to be deeply deprecated that the gentleman from Texas should have seen fit to refer to the gentleman from Massachusetts as in a class of "ghouls who delight in digging into the graves of the past," and as a man of "ghoulish instincts." It is equally to be deprecated that the gentleman from Massachusetts should have been compelled to refer to the gentleman from Texas in the following language:

Almost from the first day that he entered this House I have known something of his narrowness and bigotry, and when he speaks of "ghoulish glee" let me say to the gentleman from Texas that I am a better Democrat than he is, and that every time I open my mouth in this House I am serving my party better than he has served it in his entire career. I never hear the religious question raised in this House except on this side of the aisle, and the gentleman ought to be ashamed of himself to raise it in this enlightened era.

At another time during this debate I caught this sentence from my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], which indicates his deep conviction upon the subject:

I have felt deeply for some time that there was a strong touch of bigotry and religious prejudice back of this whole fight. On my honor, I am yet to be persuaded that I have formed a false opinion.

On the same day similar sentiments were expressed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL].

In short, both Protestant and Catholic Members of this House have not hesitated to give public expression to the rumors, whisperings, and charges, heard every day in the cloakrooms, of race prejudice and religious bigotry supposed to be at the bottom of the advocacy of the literacy test.

Aside from the opinions of Members, what evidence have we, you may ask, that anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic influences have been at work in behalf of this measure? What indications are there that solicitude for the welfare of the citizenship of the Republic is not the only motive at the back of the agitation for this legislation? Let us note a few indications.

During the Fifty-ninth Congress the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] was a member of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization of the House. The immigration bill of that Congress was accompanied by his report, in which he furnished the percentages of different peoples who would be affected by the literacy test, the chief feature of the bill. On page 21 of the report (No. 3021) are presented the following figures on the percentages of illiteracy:

	Per cent.
South Italian	56
Polish	40
Slovak	25
Hebrew	23
North Italian	14
Magyar	12

Those are the major percentages. The minor percentages are as follows:

	Per cent.
German	4
Irish	3
English	1
Scandinavian	1

By these figures the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] brought forcibly to the notice of the House the fact that the northern and Protestant races, except the Hebrews, were not greatly affected by the literacy test, while the southern and Catholic races were the ones that would be excluded in greatest numbers.

These figures, standing alone, would have little significance as indicating race prejudice and religious bigotry, but when taken in connection with other facts and circumstances they are full of meaning. They indicate at least the effect and the result that would follow the adoption of the literacy test, and in legislation as in law men will be presumed to know and to design the natural consequences of their acts. It is just as logical to reason from effect and result back to cause and motive as it is to reason from motive and cause to effect and result.

When an irrational and arbitrary method of restricting immigration is proposed we are justified in looking for sinister motives and bad designs. When still other indications strongly support these figures of percentages we are justified in concluding that a certain class of people are intended to be reached by the operation of the literacy test. What other indications have we that it is intended to exclude Jews and Catholics chiefly by the test proposed?

Is it not strange, I may ask, in this connection that there should be an obstinate determination to pass the literacy test in the face of the repeated vetoes and protests of three Presidents, both Democratic and Republican? It would not be strange if the present immigration law did not provide fully for the exclusion of all undesirable aliens. It would not be strange if the authors of this bill should declare it to be their intention to restrict immigration in general and that they had adopted the literacy test as a basis of restriction. But when it is denied that unqualified restriction of immigration is the object of the pending measure and when it is considered that the present immigration law provides amply for the exclusion of all undesirable immigrants, the suggestion of an arbitrary and whimsical test of good citizenship in the matter of immigration carries with it the presumption that certain people most directly affected by it are intended to be affected by it.

As a further indication that Jews and Catholics are intended to be excluded by the literacy test, is it not strange that when Congress has passed immigration bills containing this test, delegations of Jews and Catholics, and they alone, rush to the White House to beseech the President to interpose his veto power? Is it not a fact that Jews and Catholics feel that their race and religion is the direct object of attack and their coreligionists the intended victims of exclusion? After all, are they not the best judges of the meaning and effect of the literacy test?

A further indication, and the most pointed and powerful, that the literacy test is designed to exclude Jews and Catholics is the well-known anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic propaganda now rampant in many States of the Union. The influence of this undemocratic and un-American agitation, which amounts to religious persecution in its meanest form, of necessity and even unconsciously casts its baneful influence upon the deliberations of this House, molding the opinions and shaping the votes of Members; for it must not be forgotten that as water can not rise above its level the average Congressman can not rise above the political convictions and religious sentiments of the people whom he represents.

However, I do not wish to be misunderstood in this connection. I do not mean to impugn the motives of my colleagues on this floor. The influences that have made this measure anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic are forces that operate outside of rather than within this House. I candidly confess that I have no positive proof that a single Member of this body will vote for the literacy test on racial or religious grounds, and I am compelled, therefore, as a matter of charity and of honor, to absolve each and every one of them from base motives in this regard. But my general proposition holds true, nevertheless, that anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic organizations and newspapers throughout the country, under the false and hypocritical professions of patriotism and anxiety for the welfare of the Nation, have urged the literacy test upon their representatives in Congress when their only real motives were to exclude Jews and Catholics, and chiefly Catholics, from our shores; and many Members of this House have doubtless been unconsciously influenced by the subtle and unholy influences of this propaganda. It is interesting to note in this connection that when heretofore votes have been taken on the literacy test in the various immigration bills before Congress anti-Catholic newspapers throughout the land, whose readers are numbered by the millions, have classified the vote not as "ayes" and "nays," or votes for and against, but as anti-Catholic and Catholic, as enemies of the Pope and friends of the Pope, as friends of the country and enemies of the country. This classification of the votes on the literacy test by the anti-Catholic organs of the country is the very surest indication that we have of the existence of a religious movement in the Nation at large to curb Catholicism, to accomplish covertly in Congress what it is feared can not be accomplished in the columns of a free press or in the forum of debate.

I am neither Catholic nor Jew. I am a Presbyterian Protestant, and I hold the tenets of my faith as dearly as does any man. But I despise racial intolerance and religious bigotry, and I hate persecution as I do the spirit of the devil and all his ways. I believe that the best hope of this Republic lies in the maintenance forever of the groundwork of religious freedom upon which the fathers founded it. When that foundation crumbles the Republic will crumble with it.

I feel that it is almost needless, my colleagues, to call your attention to the circumstances of the colonization of the first States of this Union and to tell you how the first immigrants to our shores fled from the storms of religious persecution in Europe to find safety and asylum in America. I feel that it would be also superfluous to remind you that the Bill of Rights in our Federal Constitution and in the constitutions of the States is intended as a perpetual guaranty of full religious freedom to all the citizens of the Republic regardless of condition, race, or creed. I feel, furthermore, that it would be an imposition upon your time and a partial insult to your intelligence to remind you that we as Members of this House are the guardians, in a sense, of the sacred altars of religious freedom in our country, and that to violate this trust of guardianship would be little less than sacrilege and treason.

In closing, I wish to pay the tribute of my respect and confidence to the good motives of the Members of the Congress in the matter of alleged religious influences that have been brought to bear to effect the passage of the literacy test in the pending immigration bill. But I want to take this occasion to denounce in serious terms the anti-Jewish and anti-Catholic agitations in almost every State of the Union that threaten to array permanently one class of our fellow citizens against another and to disturb forever the peace and good will that should exist among our people everywhere and at all times.

It is a truth well known of all intelligent men that racial prejudice against the Jew has not completely vanished from the minds and hearts of Gentiles; that political freedom in an enlightened age has not brought with it full religious tolerance and social recognition; that the Jew enjoys the freedom of the letter, but is still under the ban of the spirit. I wish to protest in vehement terms against any persecution of the children of this race that gave to Christianity its Savior, to mankind its noblest religion, and to civilization much that is best and most beautiful in literature, music, and art.

The marvelous contributions of the Jewish people to the spiritual and intellectual wealth of the world entitle them to the gratitude and homage—not the hatred and persecution—of mankind. And if gratitude were a supreme virtue of nations, as it should be of individuals, there would never be any organized governmental persecution of the Jews. The parliaments and congresses of enlightened nations whose peoples are truly grateful, civilized, and free should in the future extend to the Jewish race—the chief benefactors of mankind—a positive protection, and should guarantee to each and every one of them who is honestly guided and righteously disposed a free hand with a full swing in the struggle of life.

To my mind there will be positively a pathetic feature in the matter of the application of the literacy test to the Jews of Russia and of Poland if this bill passes and finally becomes a law. We are all perfectly familiar with the horrors and savagery of the great European war now being waged with every circumstance of cruelty and barbarity. We have learned from telegraphic dispatches that in the last two years the Russian and the Austrian-German contending armies have swept forward and backward five times across Poland and the Russian Jewish "Pale," in which territory nearly one-half of the Jews of the earth live. Needless to say that those who have survived the wrecks of carnage and destruction have been reduced to conditions bordering upon vagabondage and starvation. Our hearts have been sickened, moreover, by reports that have reached us that, while Jewish soldiers were fighting bravely and dying grandly on battlefields and in battle trenches, their fathers and mothers, wives and children, were being persecuted, plundered, and murdered back at home by the very people for whose Government and Czar they were shedding their blood and giving their lives.

When this frightful war is over—whether it be long or short—we can imagine the sorrow and desolation that will hang like a pall over all Europe, including the land and homes of the Jews in Russia and in Poland. We know that many thousands of them will try to seek new and better conditions of life in the Western World. They will crave a change, as a matter of hope for the future as well as of forgetfulness of the past. We know that in Russia Jewish illiteracy, especially among the women, is great, because of bitter Russian persecution and oppression of the Jew in matters of educational advantages as in everything else in life.

Now, let us suppose that from the battle-swept, poverty-stricken plains of Poland and of the Russian Jewish "pale" a band of wretched Jewish immigrants apply for admission to our country. They are sound in body, mind, and morals. They come well disposed toward our country and its institutions. They desire to live honest, peaceful, and industrious lives among us. They have managed in some way through Hebrew benevolent organizations or otherwise to bring with them sufficient money to form a guaranty that they will not become public charges. But they can not read 30 words upon a slip of paper handed them by the immigration inspectors at Ellis Island. Are they to be driven back into the desert wastes of Russia and of Poland to become again the barbarized and impoverished victims of Russian despotism and persecution? If so, I protest against this outrage upon the elementary rights of human beings to live somewhere upon the earth in liberty, peace, and happiness. I protest against the insult to the civilization of the twentieth century involved in this barbarous proposal. I solemnly protest in the name of the genius and of the spirit of the American Republic whose Goddess of Liberty in the harbor of New York brandishes forever a torch of welcome to the distressed and oppressed of all the earth. I protest in the name of the Sermon on the Mount, the chart of the soul on the sea of life, whose Beatitudes are the glorifications of the virtues of mercy, gentleness, and love. In the name of all these things I register my solemn protest.

And finally I wish to make vigorous and earnest protest against the anti-Catholic propaganda in many sections of the country that is becoming a menace to the peace of the Nation, that is furnishing a solemn mockery of our boasted religious freedom, and that would destroy the corner stone of the Republic if allowed to become effective. As a Presbyterian, who believes that there can be no religious freedom for the Protestant unless there is equal religious freedom for the Jew and Catholic, I protest against the widespread anti-Catholic agitation in America.

It is not possible, my colleagues, that the nature and character of this propaganda are unknown to you. The purposes are seriously and solemnly proposed and proclaimed by certain anti-Catholic organizations and anti-Catholic newspapers to restrict the political rights of Catholics in America by denying them as far as possible the privilege of holding public offices under the Government. Could any proposal be more undemocratic and un-American? Could a more dastardly project be suggested to undermine the spirit of the Constitution and to destroy religious freedom in our country? And do you know that these agitators advocate this religious discrimination in spite of the first article in the Federal Bill of Rights which guarantees religious freedom to all, in the name of free institutions and as a means of preserving and perpetuating public liberty? Have you stopped to consider that they seriously contend that Catholicism and despotism are identical and interchangeable and that Catholic domination would be the destruction of free institutions in the United States?

These anti-Catholic propagandists tell us that if Catholics reach a numerical majority in the country, and get control of the machinery of government, the Pope, instead of the President, the Congress, and the courts, will rule us. They boldly assert that we are even now threatened with Catholic domination, and they point with alarm to numerous offices held by Catholics under the State and Federal Governments, as if Catholics were not constitutionally entitled to hold offices if the people see fit to elect them. In their fear and trembling that Catholics will seize the Government and overturn the Republic, they do not seem to understand that Catholics do not now hold and that they have never held public office in America, except in a few cities, in proportion to their percentage of the general population. There are approximately 20,000,000 Catholics in the United States, about 20 per cent of the whole people. But, except in a few cities, like Boston, New York, and Chicago, they do not hold public positions in proportion to their numbers. On a proportional basis Catholics would be entitled to more than 80 Members in this House. They have only about 40. They would be entitled to 19 Members of the United States Senate. I understand that they have only three or four. And what is true of Congress is true of nearly every other branch of both the State and Federal Governments of this Union. How we are seriously threatened with Catholic domination, then, it is impossible for me to comprehend.

The silly and preposterous charge that Catholicism is hostile to free institutions is made in the very face of comparatively recent radical democratic developments in the histories of two of the most powerful Catholic countries in the world, of Italy and France, where the separation of church and state is as positive and pronounced as in our own country. What support for their arguments, may I ask, do these anti-Catholic agitators derive from the outcome of the Garibaldian revolution, from the separation of church and state in Italy, and from the imprisonment of the Pope in the Vatican by Italian Catholics themselves? What support have they in the separation of church and state in France, the beautiful and brilliant among the nations, whose chivalric sympathies sent Rochambeau and Lafayette as ambassadors of freedom to our shores, whose school children presented to our Republic the Liberty Goddess in the harbor of New York, and whose "Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity" of her famous revolution has reverberated like a splendid anthem around the earth for more than a hundred years?

What have these anti-Catholic propagandists, who charge that Catholicism is a menace to free institutions, to say when they are told that every Republic on this earth, more than 20 in number, excepting the pagan Republic of China and the United States, is predominantly Catholic in population and in government? Far from being antagonistic to free institutions, is there not a strong suggestion in this fact that Catholicism and republican government are identical? Is there not a further suggestion of republican heredity when we consider that nearly all the Catholic races of modern times are direct descendants of the people of the ancient Roman Republic?

Are the anti-Catholic agitators, we may ask, ready to declare that Catholics of other republics are advocates of freedom and are friendly to free institutions, while the Catholics of the United States are hostile and unfriendly? Would not such a charge be a gratuitous insult to the patriotism and an ungrounded slander upon the heroic conduct of American Catholics in every crisis of our history? Is it not a matter of common knowledge that Irishmen, chiefly Catholics, have always been foremost as defenders of American liberty, whether as statesmen in the councils, generals in the tents, or soldiers in the ranks of freedom? Has there ever convened a single Congress of this Republic in which Irish Catholic Members were not present and ready to defend American constitutional freedom if occasion arose and necessity required defense? Has there been a single battle field of this Republic upon which their blood has not richly flowed in defense of liberty and of the Union? Then, why this unfounded calumny, these ungenerous insinuations, these cruel attacks upon their religion and their patriotism?

Let me express the hope, in closing, that the bitter debates and scenes of scandal in which scathing invective was used and insulting epithets hurled on account of charges of religious bigotry will not soon again disgrace the deliberations of this body. Let me remind my colleagues of their exalted character and of the sacred and solemn obligations resting upon them as national Representatives of the foremost Republic of the earth. If ungenerous and un-American impulses and fierce and unbridled passions must kindle the fires and stir the hatreds of religious bigotry among the people at large, let us here, at least, in the sacred confines of this Hall, preserve a dignified and patriotic equanimity, a statesmanlike composure, and a courageous attitude as the legislative guardians of civil and religious freedom on this continent. Let us, above all things, not forget that this Republic was not designed by the Revolutionary fathers to be Protestant, Catholic, or Jewish, but was intended as a perpetual asylum of religious freedom, where Protestant, Catholic, and Jew might each worship Almighty God after the dictates of his own conscience, and this all in obedience to the sublime doctrine first proclaimed by Roger Williams in the forests of Rhode Island, that the magistrate should rule in civil matters only, while man is answerable to God alone for his religious faith.

There is certainly no place for religious intolerance and race prejudice beneath our flag. In vain did Washington, marching in Liberty's vanguard, "lead Freedom's eaglets to their feast"; in vain the proclamation of the Declaration of Independence and the adoption of the Constitution at Philadelphia a hundred years ago; in vain the bonfires and orations of the Nation's natal day, if our boasted liberties are to exist in theory but not in practice, in fancy but not in fact! [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire in the three minutes I have to conclude the debate.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I think all my time has been taken up.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. And I have three minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has three minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHANDLER] who has last spoken does not get his historical facts any more correctly than his genealogy of some of the officials, then there is not much dependence to be put upon them.

The Commissioner General of Immigration, Mr. Caminetti, is not an Italian, not an immigrant, but was born in the United States, and is a "native son of California." His grandfather was an immigrant. But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the question after all. The question is the character of the man who is coming. Whether he comes from Italy or whether he comes from Germany or whether he comes from France, if he comes here for the purpose of aiding in building up the material prosperity and staying here, I have got nothing against his coming. But it is these birds of passage, they are the fellows this bill is aimed at, and as the distinguished gentleman who preceded me referred to the fact that Dr. Eliot was one of the opponents of the literacy test, I call attention to the fact that Dr. Eliot is one of those whom Secretary Morrison, of the American Federation of Labor, showed to have said that the strike breaker is a hero and the laboring man who strikes is a criminal. Hence I hope the gentleman will furnish better authority when he is talking about the interests of the working people than an avowed enemy of organized labor. He referred to Harvard University and its ex-president, Dr. Eliot, as opposed to the test and the bill, but failed to state the fact that the present president of Harvard, Dr. A. Lawrence Lowell, is a warm advocate of the reading test.

Now, the gentleman has referred to the lack of opportunity—I refer to the gentleman who spoke last. There is no lack of opportunity among those who are the most illiterate on the other side, Mr. Chairman.

When I was with the Immigration Commission over there I saw in southern Italy fifty-odd per cent of the adults illiterate, and in northern Italy there were less than 7 to 8 per cent who were illiterate, and I asked the commissioner of immigration why it was that there was that much difference between the two—they had the same King and the same Parliament and the same compulsory education—and he said it is the difference between the white man and the man of mixed blood; that the man of northern Italy had more initiative and more ambition and more aspiration. Another thing I desire to call the attention of this committee to, and that is the good that this agitation has been doing on the other side. The Commissioner General of Immigration has furnished me a statement, which is as follows:

MARCH 24, 1916.

STATEMENT CONCERNING THE ACTIVITIES OF THE IMMIGRATION COMMISSION OF ITALY REGARDING ILLITERACY AMONG THE PEOPLE OF THAT COUNTRY.

In view of the many proposals made in the American Congress to prevent the landing in the United States of illiterates, the commissioner of immigration undertook to bring the question to the attention of the country, first, by furnishing to the minister of foreign affairs for diplomatic purposes the elements necessary to explain diplomatic action, and, secondly, with the minister of public instruction.

The Italian commissioner of immigration remarks that as far back as 1903, through the council of emigration, of which such officer is chairman, Italy took positive action to prevent illiteracy among the people, and made appropriations with that purpose in view. In 1904 the council, in harmony with its previous deliberations, declared its desire to endeavor to remove illiteracy, urging the minister of public instruction to institute night schools for adults. In 1904–5, under the law of the former year, 3,000 schools were so aided and 450 additional schools added to the system. In 1912–13 the minister of public instruction of the Kingdom authorized the opening of such schools in all the Provinces of Italy, but particularly in those in the south and central part of the peninsula. The commissioner reports having obtained authority from the minister of public instruction to prepare circulars to the school offices of these Provinces inviting and urging them to become interested in this propaganda and to frequent public schools open for the purpose of instructing illiterate adults. For the last-named fiscal year there were authorized 6,687 night schools for illiterate adults, and during the same period 5,779 were established. For the same fiscal year record is given of the attendance at such schools, from which is gathered the following:

Total attendance (first class)	146,535
Total number present at the examination (second class)	117,318
Total number successful in examination (third class)	94,196
Divided as follows:
Northern Italy—
Of the first class	13,255
Of the second class	9,815
Of the third class	7,980
Central Italy—
Of the first class	14,344
Of the second class	12,930
Of the third class	9,203
Southern Italy—
Of the first class	118,936
Of the second class	96,210
Of the third class	77,013

So, gentlemen, you see Italy is trying to meet the conditions, and we will have better men here——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his motion?

Mr. BURNETT. I will.

Mr. MAPES. I desire to ask unanimous consent to speak for two minutes. I will not take more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, why does the gentleman have any objection to taking a vote now on this amendment?

Mr. BURNETT. I thought it was understood that I would make this motion when we concluded debate; that the committee would then rise.

Mr. SABATH. Has the gentleman ever said anything of that kind to me?

Mr. BURNETT. I thought it was generally understood.

Mr. SABATH. I desired to ask the gentleman, because the gentleman is making the insinuation I am not keeping good faith——

Mr. BURNETT. I withdraw it.

Mr. SABATH. I wish to be understood I never have failed to do so in my life and will not do it now.

Mr. BURNETT. Well, that is understood.

Mr. SABATH. But I did not want the gentleman to make the insinuation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I will not object, I just want to say to you gentlemen and the gentleman from Alabama that we have persuaded President Eliot that he made a mistake when he called a strike breaker a hero, and to-day he is a better friend to labor than the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BURNETT. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to hear of his reformation, and I have no doubt by this time he has made another change and is in favor of the literacy test.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, taking for a text the statement given out at Chicago on Tuesday of this week by the chairman of the Republican national campaign committee, Mr. Hilles, I take this opportunity to call attention to the matter of presidential primaries and the necessity that some action be taken during this Congress if there is to be any national legislation in the very near future authorizing the nomination and election of President by the direct vote of the people.

In his statement Mr. Hilles calls attention to the unsatisfactory condition and the confusion arising from the fact that the legislation in the several States provides so many different ways of selecting the delegates to the national conventions. This statement, coming from the source from which it did, has perhaps received greater publicity and attention than might otherwise have been the case, and it seems to me makes it appropriate to call the attention of the House to the matter to-day. I can only call attention here to a few short extracts in the statement, although it is, to my mind, an interesting and convincing argument in favor of national legislation on the subject.

Among other things Mr. Hilles said:

The situation that has developed through the extension of the primary idea with respect to national political party organizations calls most urgently for standardization of State primary laws so far as they apply to the election of delegates to national party conventions.

More than half the delegates to national conventions of 1916 will be elected or instructed through some primary medium, but the primary laws are so widely at variance in many particulars that a sadly confused state of affairs has resulted.

Again—

In the first place, there is the question of the difference in time at which the various primaries are held. * * *

If all primaries which relate exclusively to delegates to presidential conventions were held simultaneously, there would result a distinct benefit, in that one State would not exercise an undue atmospheric influence over another. It then would be impossible for the partisans of one candidate or another to move from State to State for the purpose of artificially accelerating sentiment in favor of such candidates.

Mr. Hilles continues:

Under some State laws the hands of the delegates from that State are tied, while in others such delegate is left freedom of action. This makes the relationship between the delegates from different States entirely incongruous.

Again, he says:

It is not only the question of a wrong principle in connection with certain of the primary laws that merits attention, but as well the question of the wisdom of having delegates elected under such varying rules and sitting in conventions in such widely divergent relationship. Here is shown the necessity for standardization above all else.

The remedy he proposes is as follows:

And finally the facts as to the character of political party organizations should not be forgotten or wholly disregarded. With the due respects to the relation they bear to the public, they ought not to be unreasonably restrained. A safe and sane uniform primary law might well be drafted by a committee to be appointed for that purpose for the Republican convention in June.

It will be seen that Mr. Hilles advocates uniform legislation by the States instead of Federal legislation, but as a practical proposition uniform legislation in all the States would be very difficult to obtain, and even if it were practical, how much better it would be to have a national law on the subject applicable alike to all the States.

Everyone knows that President Wilson in his first annual message to Congress advocated the passage of a national primary election law as a part of his legislative program. At that time the President said:

I turn to a subject which I hope can be handled promptly and without serious controversy of any kind. I mean the method of selecting nominees for the Presidency of the United States. I feel confident that I do not misinterpret the wishes or the expectations of the country when I urge the prompt enactment of legislation which will provide for primary elections throughout the country, at which the voters of the several parties may choose their nominee for the Presidency without the intervention of nominating conventions.

Our distinguished Speaker at the time he appeared before the Democratic national campaign committee in this city, to urge that committee to hold the next Democratic national convention in St. Louis, was reported in the newspapers as saying in substance—if my recollection serves me correctly—that if he had his way about it, there would be no more national conventions for the purpose of nominating candidates for the Presidency, but that they would be nominated by a direct vote of the people.

Notwithstanding the indorsement of the principle by these two acknowledged leaders of the Democratic Party, no action has been taken by Congress to enact legislation on the subject.

Soon after the President's address to Congress, in which he advocated the passage of a presidential primary law, the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress, which has jurisdiction over the subject, met with the then Secretary of State, Mr. Bryan, and the then counselor for the State Department, Mr. Folk, in order to get the benefit of their advice and counsel. They advocated the passage of such a law and did not believe that there was any constitutional barrier in the way.

That committee started out at that time in good faith, I believe, to consider and draft an adequate law, but shortly thereafter it was whispered about that such a law would be unconstitutional, that no valid law of the kind could be passed under the Constitution, and the matter was thereupon apparently abandoned.

There are eminent lawyers who do not agree with the opinion that it is necessary to amend the Constitution in order to provide a valid and constitutional presidential primary election law. For myself, although I would be willing to resolve the doubt as to the constitutionality of such a law in favor of the Constitution, I am willing to admit that there is some question concerning it, and as long as the Constitution remains as it is, there would always be some who would oppose the passage of such a law on that ground.

In order to do away with any question or objection on that ground, I introduced in the last Congress a resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution which, if adopted, would give Congress the direct authority to pass legislation providing for the nomination and election of the President and Vice President by a direct vote of the people. I have reintroduced the same resolution in this Congress.

That resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in lieu of paragraphs 1, 2, and 3 of section 1 of Article II of the Constitution and of the twelfth amendment to the same, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"The executive power shall be vested in the President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President, shall be nominated and elected by the direct vote of the people of the several States. The electors for President and Vice President in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for the electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature."

I have no pride of opinion about the language of this resolution. It, no doubt, could be improved upon after consideration by the committee, but it furnishes a starting point.

As the resolution is drafted it would also authorize Congress to do away with our cumbersome electoral-college system.

It is, of course, too late for the present Congress to pass any law that would become operative in the election this year; but if some such resolution as I have proposed could be passed during this session of Congress, it could be submitted to the legislatures of the several States next winter, as they convene in January, and, if adopted by three-fourths thereof, Congress could pass a presidential-primary law during the next term, which would go into effect before another presidential campaign without any question being raised as to the constitutionality thereof.

With the leaders of the two principal political parties of the country practically indorsing the proposition and the people as a whole favoring it, why can not this Congress take the necessary action to pave the way for the passage of such a law?

The Democratic Members of the House held a caucus last night to determine upon a legislative program for the balance of the session. The morning papers gave us that program, as recommended by the President and adopted by the caucus, but I looked in vain to find any mention of presidential-primary legislation in it, although the President said over two years ago that he hoped it could be "handled promptly and without serious controversy of any kind." I submit that nothing could be incorporated in that program of greater importance, and nothing that would be more favorably received by the people, than the indorsement of such a resolution as the one I have proposed, and no more opportune time for taking such action will ever be found than the present.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States and had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. To submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that on next Monday at 5.30 o'clock p. m. the House take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m., and at that hour it will be in order to consider bills on the calendar from the Invalid Pensions Committee and the Pensions Committee, and that the House adjourn not later than 11 o'clock on that evening.

Mr. HAMILL. Reserving the right to object, what becomes of the Unanimous Consent Calendar for next Monday?

The SPEAKER. There is not any.

Mr. MANN. It is District day, and that has gone to the wind up there. You will see it in heaven when you get there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent——

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I would like, if necessary, if it can be permitted, to embrace in my request the consideration of conference reports from the same committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that on next Monday the House recess at 5.30 o'clock p. m. until 8 p. m. and run not later than 11 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar from the Pensions Committee and the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and for the consideration of conference reports from the same committees. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether that would eliminate the consideration of this bill after that hour. If we should not be through with the bill we would have to go into Tuesday, I presume.

Mr. MANN. You will have to do that, anyhow.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps you may not. The Chair thought that the immigration bill would be finished to-day.

Mr. MANN. I understand the request is that no other business be transacted.

The SPEAKER. No other business, except pension business from the two different committees, and conference reports on pension bills. Is there objection?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, was 5.30 p. m. the time suggested?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. I was in hopes that the gentleman would make it 6 o'clock, for I hoped to get through with this bill Monday.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MANN. I am not willing to quit at 6 o'clock and then come at 8 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Does the gentleman change it to 6 o'clock?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The gentleman from Illinois said that he would object to that, and I do not desire to change the time.

Mr. BURNETT. I will not press it, then.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama, as the rule is not right at hand, if it provides that the House shall meet at 11 o'clock as long as his bill is under consideration?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

ADDRESS TO CONFEDERATE VETERANS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address of my colleague Mr. STEDMAN, delivered on the 21st of March, 1916, at Confederate Memorial Hall, District of Columbia, by request of the Confederate Veterans' Association of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech made by his colleague, Maj. STEDMAN, in Washington, giving a historical account of the North Carolina troops during the Civil War. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, a Senate concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 18.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 1,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 166, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, entitled "The Improvement of the Park System of the District of Columbia," of which 500 shall be for the use of the Senate and 500 for the use of the House of Representatives—to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2960. An act for the relief of the heirs of John Howard Payne, deceased, late United States consul at Tunis.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, March 27, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

2. SENATE.

MONDAY, March 27, 1916.

Rev. G. Livingston Bayard, chaplain, United States Navy, offered the following prayer:

O God of Nations, Lord of Lords, and King of Kings, who has taught us in Thy Holy Word that "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people," help us, we pray Thee, so to apply our hearts unto wisdom that we may know Thy purposes and do Thy will to the end that truth and justice may prevail and the glory of Thy name be proclaimed among us and our children's children forever and forever.

We acknowledge Thy goodness, O Lord, which has guided our people in the paths of truth and righteousness, and has blessed this Nation with peace and happiness.

Humble us, we pray Thee, under the burden of the new duties and responsibilities with which we are charged. Grant, O God, that this Nation, conceived in war, born in battle, and baptized in blood, may, under Thy patronage, fight its way through with its honor unsullied and its integrity unimpaired to that one far-off divine event when the war drums beat no longer and the battle flags are furled, when men shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks, and peace reign everywhere. These blessings we ask in the faith of Him who died that we might live—Jesus Christ our Lord and Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the bill be read at length, as it is a matter of urgency.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

That the sum of $60,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in the purchase and distribution of shelter, food, cots, and blankets to such destitute persons as may require assistance in said conflagration district.

MARCH 25, 1916.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Washington, D. C.

Yours, very truly,

[Official copy furnished to Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD, United States Senate.]

PARIS, TEX., March 24, 1916.

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL,
War Department, Washington, D. C.:

Paris, Tex., has population about 16,000, with 10,000 white and 6,000 colored. Value of property destroyed about $14,000,000, or about 80 per cent of total value of buildings and personal property of city.

White persons homeless about 4,000, colored 4,000. Nearly all these people lost all household goods. Of this number about 4,500 are indigent citizens of Paris. Have furnished emergency shelter for about 6,000 and emergency food supplies for all. Total contributions by citizens $25,000. Contributed by neighboring cities about $12,000.

Governor has asked your authority to issue tentage. I do not know how much he has. Rations and shelter required as follows: Rations, 800 persons, 60 days, and 1,500 persons, 30 days; total, 93,000 rations, at 30 cents value, $27,900; food can be bought within 100 miles. Shelter required for 5,000 persons, if large pyramidal tents are used, value $42,000; cots for 6,000 at $2 is $12,000; blankets for 2,000 at $2 is $4,000; freight, $600; expense of distribution, $500; total, $87,000; on hand $37,000; to be supplied, $50,000. Officials and other leading citizens are devoting attention to relieving public distress to the neglect of their own urgent affairs.

In view of their severe private losses, the contributions are very liberal, and to double them would be more than should be expected of a stricken community of this size. The necessity is urgent, and I strongly recommend Federal aid. As the shelter should last longer than the life of tents and be semipermanent, it is recommended that tentage be not furnished, but that a slightly increased money equivalent be given for construction of shacks from paper and cheap lumber. I recommend emergency allotment of $60,000 under appropriations covering above-mentioned purposes. As I am quartermaster, the funds can be invoiced to me. I am working with local committees, and will so continue until further orders.

PICKERING.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Omit the matter inserted and stricken out by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
JOHN F. SHAFROTH,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN J. FITZGERALD,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that immediately on the completion of the morning business on Thursday next I desire to address the Senate on the subject of preparedness.

LANDSCHAFT SYSTEM OF RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I gave notice a few days ago that to-day I would discuss the landschaft system of rural credits. I think that while we are engaged in the necessary preparation for an adequate Army and Navy we should not overlook the fact that the most permanent and important form of preparedness lies in a prosperous and independent agriculture, and that a proper system of rural credits is, after all, of the first importance.

The Nation's greatest asset is the soil. The chief necessity of its complex economic life is credit. The basis of credit is a promise to pay. Much of a nation's progress is measured by the rapidity with which written evidences of promises to pay circulate as a substitute for metallic money and the soundness of the security for such substitute. The supply of metallic money is limited, and if it had to be exchanged with every transaction, civilization would be far less advanced. Indeed, our present state of material advancement would be unthinkable. The supply of credit is limited only by the extent to which promises to pay are based on accepted security and are used to discharge human obligations.

It follows, therefore, that the sounder the security the wider will be the use of the credit instrument it supports, the lower will be the interest price of the capital it commands, and the greater will be the impetus to civilization, to the progress, the happiness, and the prosperity of the masses.

Now, what sounder and more permanent security may be imagined than cultivated soil, the source of human subsistence? The existence of earth's increasing millions is related directly to the land, from which they must be fed and clothed, and as long as humanity flourishes the soil will have a value that can not be taken away, a value that must grow with the multiplication of the race. And yet in the United States the owners and workers of the soil must pay a higher interest rate than all others for credit with which to keep in motion the machinery of production that the world may live. As to the great majority of these owners and workers, their promises to pay at present command the least financial regard, and have practically no standing as circulating instruments of credit.

It so happens, however, that in a wonderful country beyond the Atlantic, a country in many respects the most remarkable in the world, the land, its greatest asset, has been made the basis of one of the most stable and most beneficent credit instruments on earth. I allude to Germany and the landschaft bond. Strange to say, as long ago as 147 years Prussia began a system which made the land the basis of permanent credit, a security for the farmer's promise to pay which he could exchange for money in the open market at the lowest rate, without the intervention of the profit bank, and which brought him economic independence, lasting prosperity. It is not surprising that Germany displays an internal vitality to-day that astounds the world, a vitality resulting largely from the fact that 86.1 per cent of German farms are worked by their owners. On the tomb of Frederick the Great one word could be inscribed that would mean more than Hennersdorf and Rossbach, than all his other achievements in court or camp, and that word is "Landschaft." He organized the first landschaft in 1769. He obtained the idea from a Berlin merchant, Buring, and Buring ought to have a monument by the side of Frederick's.

The landschaft was little less than a miracle of finance. It touched the land and the land was gold. Landschaft means land district. It is an incorporated body of borrowing farmers in a given district, and its essence is the exchange of the mortgage of the individual member for the society's collective bond and the sale of the bond without further guaranty. It collects annual or semiannual interest and amortization payments, distributed over a long term of years, on practically the same principle on which the interest and sinking-fund payments are collected in American school and drainage districts. There are 25 of these societies in Germany to-day, and their bonds are surviving the shock of the most terrific war of time. The initial landschaft, founded by Frederick the Great in 1769, is still in successful operation. These societies had in circulation in 1909 bonds of the value of $840,000,000, carrying an interest rate of 3, 3½, and 4 per cent. These societies do not know what failure means. They are so operated that they can not fail. They are based on a value that can not fail—the value attaching to the source and means of human subsistence. As long as humanity exists upon the products of the soil that value must exist. The landschaft has solved the problem of finding and preserving that value. The borrowing power represents as high as 60 per cent of the productive value of the land. Speculative value is not considered.

The landschaft has no capital stock, no shares, no dividends. Its loans run from 45 to 54 and 75 years, and each payment has an amortization feature. Its principal features are: (1) rigid government supervision; (2) reliable appraisal; (3) summary foreclosure and administration; (4) collective liability; (5) land titles without the possibility of question; (6) participation by borrowers in the management; (7) nominal expense of management.

A joint-stock, profit bank is no part of a genuine, land-credit system. If the bank takes a mortgage, bases a bond on it, and sells the bond under its own guaranty, the expense of maintaining the bank with its salaries, equipment, and dividends comes out of the mortgagor. Why should this expense be saddled on the borrower when the land itself under a landschaft system is sufficient? Land is more permanent than governments or banks. Under the regulations of a landschaft it is, in the long run, a better security than Government bonds. On more than one occasion landschaft bonds have sold at higher figures than the bonds of the Imperial German Government. They are holding their own during the present war. They mobilize the land in such way as to make it a liquid, realizable asset without the necessity of the intervention of a bank. Then why have a bank?

But, it may be asked, what is the lowest market rate for money in the United States? Practically $4,000,000,000 are lent to savings banks in this country at less than 4 per cent. New England depositors have loaned them over a billion and a half dollars at 2.9 per cent; New York depositors, nearly a billion and three-quarters at 3.75 per cent. Look at the railroad and municipal bonds and observe the billions lent on long time at 4 and 5 per cent. The sixty-four billions represented by the capital of all corporations doing business in this country in 1914 brought a net average return of only 4.3 per cent. Insurance actuaries base all their calculations on the assumption that 4 per cent is the highest average income money may permanently bring.

Do you say that money is not available for loans running 40, 50, or 75 years? The insurance companies are always hunting for safe investments of this kind, and so are those who wish to leave their funds to their children, or for benevolent purposes, in the safest and most lasting form. The banks are looking for securities that may be readily cashed in the open market. In Germany the landschaft bond circulates in the business world like a Government bond, note, or coin of the realm, and commands instant negotiability. In the bill I have introduced for a landschaft system in the United States I have deemed it best to limit the maximum life of landschaft bonds to 50 years, as I believe that period sufficiently long for all practical purposes.

Do you say that what German farmers have been doing for a century and a half we can not do? Has not the soil that supports 100,000,000 people a permanent value, a value that must grow as these millions multiply? May we not devise a cooperative, nonprofit system of ascertaining the exact productive value of this land and base sound securities on it, representing 50 or 60 per cent of that value, especially when Germany's record of 147 years is before us?

The population of some landschaft districts in Germany runs from 500,000 to 7,000,000; the number of acres from 3,000,000 to 18,000,000, in round figures.

The landschaft bond is a charge against no particular parcel of land, but against the society in general, with the privilege of exercising, if necessary, all its rights against individual members and their lands. The remedy of a creditor is the right to compel the exercise of the landschaft's power of assessment, and not a suit against the individual landowner.

I notice that almost universal error prevails in this country as to the character of the liability of the members of the landschaft. It is generally supposed that each member is unlimitedly and personally responsible for all of the obligations of the landschaft. That is no more true than it is true in the case of a landowner in a school district or in a drainage district. The liability is merely a collective liability subject to the right of the central authorities to levy the necessary annual assessments for interest and sinking-fund payments.

I wish to direct especial attention to this widely misunderstood feature of the landschaft—the feature of collective liability. In reality there is nothing new, strange, or untried about this feature to the American farmer. It is practically the same kind of mutual, collective liability that obtains in the American school, drainage, and other improvement districts.

Let us consider, for example, the school-district law of Texas. It has the following provision as to liability:

> When the commissioner's court shall provide for the issuance of bonds, and each year thereafter so long as the bonds or any of them are outstanding, said court shall levy a tax not to exceed 25 cents on the $100 valuation of taxable property of the district, sufficient to pay interest on the bonds and to produce a sinking fund which, together with the interest thereon when placed at interest, shall be sufficient to pay the principal of the bonds at maturity. * * * After said bonds have been issued and sold and said tax levied it shall not be lawful to hold an election to determine whether or not said tax shall be discontinued or lowered until the bonds with interest thereon have been paid, nor can the limits or boundaries of the district be changed.

The drainage-district law of Texas is as follows in this regard:

> Whenever any such district-drainage bonds shall have been issued, the commissioners shall levy and cause to be assessed and collected improvement taxes upon all property, whether real, personal, mixed, or otherwise, subject to taxation within the limit of such district, and sufficient in amount to pay the interest on such bonds with an additional amount to be placed in a sinking fund, sufficient to discharge and redeem said bonds at their maturity.

So the landschaft, or land district, applies practically the same principle of liability already applied in the United States by the school district, the drainage and improvement districts.

In fact, the land-district system is less rigorous as to liability than are some of the State laws as to school or drainage districts in this country. It is my information that in some States a bondholder may sue any landowner within a school district and subject his entire property to the payment of the bond. All that the holder of a landschaft bond can do is to invoke the landschaft's right of proportionate assessment against all the lands in the landschaft.

In still another respect the land district, or landschaft, is less rigorous than the school or drainage district. In the latter two all the landowners in a district may be compelled to join and all the land subjected to taxation if a certain proportion of the resident landowners so vote. In the former membership is entirely voluntary.

Surely a system like this is entitled to serious study.

American school, drainage, and other improvement districts are obtaining money to-day by virtue of a principle of operation strikingly similar to that of the landschaft, at rates under 4 and 5 per cent. Current quotations show offerings of the bonds of such districts as follows:

	Rate.	Maturity.	Yield.
Detroit, Mich., school	4	Apr. 2,1924	3.85
Milwaukee, Wis., school	4½	Jan. 1,1926	3.90
Taunton, Mass., sewer	3½	June 1,1932	3.90

If the farm-mortgage bond is to find universal and unquestioned acceptance in the United States, there must be universal faith in the method and management of the landschaft. The investing public must have easy opportunity to know and understand its working. Manifestly, therefore, there must be in the United States a Federal head for the landschaft system and a uniform basis of operation throughout the Nation. To have each of the 48 States form a landschaft or landschafts of its own without a directing Federal center is to deprive the bond of instant and general negotiability. A uniform, accurate, and modern system of title registration is essential throughout the country. This is also essential if the mortgage-bank proposal of the Joint Committee on Rural Credit is to work satisfactorily and generally. And yet the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], in a recent speech in the Senate in defense of the joint-committee bill, the so-called Hollis-Moss bill, said that the landschaft system would never be workable because of our various State laws respecting registration of title, homestead exemptions, foreclosure proceedings, right of redemption, and the like, which he said no Federal law could change.

The land-bank bill prepared by the Joint Committee on Rural Credit, the Hollis-Moss bill, has the following to say in this connection:

SEC. 32. That it shall be the duty of the farm-loan commissioner to make examination of the laws of every State of the United States and to inform the Federal farm-loan board as rapidly as may be whether in his judgment the laws of each State relating to the conveying and recording of land titles, and the foreclosure of mortgages or other instruments securing loans, as well as providing homestead and other exemptions and granting the power to waive such exemptions as respects first mortgages, are such as to assure the holder thereof adequate safeguards against loss in the event of default on loans secured by any such mortgages.

Pending the making of such examination in the case of any State, the Federal farm-loan board may declare first mortgages on farm lands situated within such State ineligible as the basis for an issue of farm-loan bonds; and if said examination shall show that the laws of any such State afford insufficient protection to the holder of first mortgages of the kinds provided in this act, the said Federal farm-loan board may declare said first mortgages on land situated in such State ineligible during the continuance of the laws in question. In making his examination of the laws of the several States and forming his conclusions thereon, said farm-loan commissioner may call upon the office of the Attorney General of the United States for any needed legal advice or assistance, or may employ special counsel in any State where he considers such action necessary.

At the request of the executive of any State, the Federal farm-loan board shall prepare a statement setting forth in what respects the requirements of said board can not be complied with under the existing laws of such State.

It is evident that this section of the Hollis-Moss bill is framed in an endeavor to remove the very difficulties which the Senator from Florida said would confront the landschaft system. As a matter of fact, these obstacles are as much in the way of the land-bank system of the joint committee as they are in the way of the landschaft proposal. Indeed, they are less in the way of the latter, because it is possible to have a landschaft in a State without changing the language of the constitutional homestead exemption. All that is necessary is to amend the section of the State constitution authorizing school or drainage or other improvement districts by adding a provision for land districts, with power in certain authorities to levy the necessary assessments in the shape of taxes. On the other hand, it is a fact, much to be regretted, that the homestead exemption in some States is an impassable barrier to the general operation of the Hollis land-bank bill, or any other land-bank proposition, without a constitutional amendment, almost impossible to secure.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] made another assertion regarding the landschaft which was still more amazing. He said that the power of foreclosure without resort to the courts, a power essential to the highest effectiveness of the landschaft, but no more indispensable to it than to a drainage or school district, could not be exercised in this country without changing many State constitutions and the real estate mortgage laws of the States, and he added that we in this generation would never live to see the day when such a system could be established in the United States. And yet, Mr. President, it is a fact of common knowledge that in most of the States of the Republic to-day real estate mortgages may contain perfectly legal clauses enabling the mortgagee to enter upon, take, and sell the mortgaged land, without resort to a court, in the event of a default. In that monumental legal work, the Cyclopedia of Law, volume 26, page 1449, we find the following language:

A power of sale in a mortgage or deed of trust, when properly exercised, enables the party in interest to effect a complete foreclosure of the mortgage by entirely ex parte proceedings, without submitting his rights to a court of law or equity and without invoking the aid of such a court.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is such a remarkable statement, this being the first time I ever heard it made, that I should like to ask the Senator from Texas in what State such proceedings could take place?

Mr. SHEPPARD. As I understand, in most of the States. I am quoting from the Cyclopedia of Law, one of the best compilations of existing legal knowledge. I was quoting from that publication when the Senator interrupted me. Let me conclude the quotation.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. And for the Senator's benefit I want to repeat what I have read, because it is not generally known. It is supposed by some that the foreclosure of a mortgage requires certain court proceedings in all cases, and this has been supposed to be one of the barriers against the successful operation of the landschaft system. Now, let me repeat the quotation.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, when he is doing that, also to explain how that is accomplished and how the mortgagee takes possession of the property?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Let me finish the quotation. It is as follows:

A power of sale in a mortgage or deed of trust, when properly exercised, enables the party in interest to effect a complete foreclosure of the mortgage by entirely ex parte proceedings, without submitting his rights to a court of law or equity and without invoking the aid of such a court.

A power of sale in a mortgage or deed of trust, authorizing foreclosure by advertisement and sale without resort to the courts, is not contrary to public policy or the policy of the law, but, on the contrary, is perfectly legal and valid, except in a few States where the States expressly forbid the exercise of such powers and require all foreclosures to be effected by judicial proceedings.

Surely, it will be a comparatively easy task to have the few States which do not now provide for summary foreclosures make such changes as will permit it, if it should be deemed essential.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, has the Senator looked up the facts in the matter and does he believe that that statement is a correct statement of conditions generally in the States?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I certainly do; yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know how the title is secured by the man foreclosing the mortgage in the absence of court proceedings?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is effectuated by certain advertisements being prepared and attached to the courthouse door or some other public place or placed in the press. After publication for a given length of time the party has a right to enter upon the land and sell it or reduce it to his own possession.

Mr. SMOOT. I would consider such a title very defective.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas is correct about that. In most of the States, at least in Michigan, there are two provisions for mortgage foreclosure, one statutory and one in chancery. The statutory foreclosure statute provides that when there is default made, by certain advertisements in the press for a given length of time a sale can be made, but the mortgagee can not take possession of the property until a fixed statutory period has elapsed, during which time the mortgagor or his assigns have a right to redeem by paying the costs and the mortgage and interest up to date of redemption. I have not followed the enactments of the Michigan Legislature during the last dozen years as closely as I ought to have done perhaps, and it is possible that some changes in our statutes relative to mortgage foreclosures have been made; but what I have stated above was true when I was in the active practice of law.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator another question. How does the person foreclosing the mortgage in the way suggested by the Senator get possession of the property?

Mr. TOWNSEND. He can take possession under the statutes. He places the writ in the hands of the sheriff, and can be put in possession, although I wish to say to the Senator—I do not know whether his inquiry goes as far as that—that eventually, if there is resistance to his taking possession, court proceedings would be required.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly. That would be unavoidable, and it would no more affect the success of the landschaft bond than the success of the school bond or the drainage bond. Of course, as I have said here, I do not consider the summary foreclosure power absolutely indispensable to the operation of the landschaft, although it would be necessary to the highest effectiveness of any system of rural credits based on land. Even if it were in force, it would not ordinarily be exercised.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the authorities cited by the Senator from Texas state the law accurately, at least as it exists in many of the States of the Union, certainly in my State, and I think in most of the Southern States.

The statutory law in most of these States provides for summary foreclosure under the terms of the mortgage, and if there is default the property may be advertised for a given length of time and sold. The purchaser at the sale acquires the title; and, therefore, when the Senator says that the title can be acquired through the exercise of this statutory power of sale, he is absolutely correct. It is not necessary to resort to the court of equity in such States in order to secure transfer of title; but even in such States it would be necessary to invoke the process of the court for the purpose of getting possession of the property in case of resistance by the mortgagor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think that is entirely true.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I think that is the law. In my State the mortgagee may become entitled, even before there is default, to the possession. That power, however, is very rarely exercised, and the mortgagor is permitted to remain in possession until there is default and until there is a foreclosure proceeding under the powers contained in the mortgage or by the court.

I think the real difficulty is that pointed out by the Senator from Michigan in his inquiry as to how the purchaser would get possession, after he had acquired title, without going into court.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But the same objection would be an obstacle in the way of any land-credit system, and I think it could be avoided or overcome.

Mr. SIMMONS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to suggest to the Senator that I do not think we need have any fear in the matter of obtaining title or possession. This statutory method of foreclosure by advertisement is the common method in most of the States; and, if the procedure is regular, at the expiration of one year a deed will issue, and that entitles the purchaser to immediate possession. In most States he will not have any right of possession until the year of redemption has expired; and no one would attempt to prevent his possession or possessory right after obtaining his sheriff's deed, or the deed that follows a foreclosure, unless there was irregularity in the proceedings. It is the usual method adopted.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is right.

The next question is how may control be centered in a Federal body, and how may a uniform system reach all the States? The bill I have introduced provides that Congress shall organize a national rural-credit institute whose original jurisdiction shall be the District of Columbia and the territory subject to the direct sovereignty of the United States, and whose first purpose is the establishment of landschaft laws in such jurisdiction. The power of Congress to do this can not be questioned. The institute is composed of seven members, and is a body corporate with usual corporate powers. The members are to be farmers and rural-credit experts. They are to be paid by the Government and are to be impartial umpires between the societies and the investing public.

They are to devise model charters and by-laws for local units or chapters, known as landschafts, in the District of Columbia, and so forth. They are to recommend to Congress such land and mortgage laws as would be essential to the successful operation of a landschaft in the District of Columbia, and so forth. The accomplishment of this much would be worth the expense of organizing the institute and providing it with the means of investigation and study. With model charters and model laws in the District of Columbia, and so forth, the system would be made plain to the American people. It would not be necessary for the landschaft to be actually organized in the District, but the value of the proceeding would lie in the adoption by Congress of certain laws for the District that would provide a model system as an example for the country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator whether this bill is intended to cover mortgages on other than farm lands?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is not.

Mr. TOWNSEND. How would it be operative in the District of Columbia, then?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have just said it would not actually operate in the District, but that we could at least have here the necessary land laws and organization laws for a model landschaft for the information of the rest of the country.

Furthermore, the institute is authorized to apply to the States for permission to conduct its business of operating landschafts within their borders. Here we are well within the limit of precedent and authority. Many corporations organized in the District of Columbia are admitted to do business in the States under the laws of the original charter and with governing headquarters at Washington. If a State admits the national rural credits institute to operate within its borders, that State puts upon the institute the stamp of its own sovereignty and clothes it with power to act. My bill provides, however, that the institute shall enter only such States as have adopted such laws as will make a landschaft system feasible. Establish this institute in the District of Columbia, equip it with necessary means, let it demonstrate exactly what a landschaft is and what it signifies, what land and mortgage laws are needed to make it feasible, and the people will take up the cause. No obstacle should be allowed to stand in the way. I shall not go further into detail at this time. I append a copy of my bill to these remarks. Do you ask, Will the landschaft work? I say it has worked and will work, because it rests on scientific and everlasting principles. Let this be remembered: The earliest hour at which pure, cooperative land credit, land credit at practical cost, land credit in the cheapest form, may be obtained in the United States is the hour at which the landschaft principle finds adoption.

The next cheapest form of land credit is where the Government itself provides the capital for a land-mortgage bank, selects its officers, superintends its operations, guarantees its liabilities. This institution issues Government-guaranteed bonds based on land mortgages, and the rate of interest on the mortgages is, as a rule, no more than is sufficient to pay the interest carried by the bonds and the expense of operating the bank. When any surplus remains it is either paid into the Government treasury or devoted to public works. There are 16 of these banks in Germany. They are created by the States or Provinces and not by the federal Government. They had loans outstanding on mortgage security in 1909 of nearly $250,000,000. It is a fair estimate that more than half of this amount was lent on farm mortgages, the remainder on urban.

It will be seen that the Government mortgage-bank system is used to a much less extent in Germany than the landschaft system, which had loans outstanding in 1909 of $850,000,000. The experience of Germany is worthy of exceptional attention, because Germany has carried rural credit to a higher degree of practical success than any other country in the world.

Mr. J. R. Cahill, the eminent English student of rural credit, has the following to say regarding the Government mortgage bank, the private, joint-stock land bank, and the landschaft system as he saw them operating side by side in Germany:

> Not aiming at profits beyond the payment of expenses, although, in fact, considerable sums are usually allocated to public purposes as the result of their operations, they (the Government mortgage banks) grant loans more cheaply than the joint-stock mortgage banks. The majority of the latter do not find it profitable to lend at all upon small properties, and other institutions which possess the advantage of being accessible for small farmers without incurring expense, namely, the public savings banks, not only charge higher rates but may grant only loans subject to recall, and only agree to gradual amortization for a limited portion of their loans. Certain drawbacks are associated with the management and the control of the banks now being considered by the State or public assemblies of districts or Provinces. Thus the necessity of obtaining the sanction of a representative assembly for changing the rate of interest payable on bonds or chargeable on loans, the strict adherence to formal rules (e. g., as regards lending over 50 or other per cent of the assessed value), for whose alteration similar authority is required, may often prove disadvantageous in practice. Other drawbacks inseparable in the popular mind from official administration are also imputed to them; and of course it can not be gainsaid they do not possess the great merit of the mortgage-credit associations, namely, the merit of being organizations of landowners governed by landowners which confine their business to rural mortgages, and are better able to take in consideration all the conditions in arriving at their decisions.

Let us here note the fact that the joint-stock mortgage banks of Germany have little to do with farm mortgages when we consider their total volume of business. Of their nearly three billions of outstanding mortgage loans in 1911, only about 6 per cent, or $160,000,000, represented farm loans.

The joint committee on rural credit, authorized by the Sixty-third Congress, has reported a bill establishing a land-bank system, consisting of 12 Federal land banks under the supervision of a Federal farm-loan board at Washington. Each bank is to have a capital of not less than $500,000, and loans are made to farmer borrowers through local associations of at least 10 members, with limited or unlimited liability. Each borrower must take stock in the local association to the extent of 5 per cent of the face of his loan, and the association subscribes that much to the stock of the land bank of the district in which the association is located. The banks issue bonds based on the mortgages as collateral security, and the loans run from 5 to 36 years, the semiannual interest payments of the borrower covering amortization. Behind each bond is the security of all the mortgages held by the land bank, and each bond is guaranteed by all the land banks, jointly and severally, as well as by a farm-loan association. The interest rate paid by the borrower must not be more than 1 per cent higher than the interest due on the bonds and must not exceed the rate of 5 per cent. The bonds are to be exempt from Federal, State, and local taxation.

The capital stock of a Federal land bank may be subscribed for and held by any individual, firm, corporation, national farm-loan association, or the Government of any State or of the United States. The bank does not become permanently operative, however, until at least $100,000 of stock shall have been subscribed by the farm-loan associations. Stock not subscribed for within 90 days after books are open is to be subscribed by the Federal Government, such stock to be retired as subscriptions come in from other sources. Six of the nine directors of the bank are to be chosen by farm-loan associations and the remaining three by the Federal farm-loan board.

The fact that owners of stock outside of the farm-loan association will have no voice in the management makes it practically certain that little capital will be subscribed by individuals, firms, or corporations. The stock will be subscribed principally by the local associations and the Government, and, ultimately, after the Government stock is retired, by the associations altogether. If this Federal land-bank proposition finds anything like general acceptance among our 6,000,000 farmers, it will mean the formation of hundreds and thousands of local associations, each with different sets of appraisers, other officials, and so forth, in addition to the appraisers, officials, and so forth, of each Federal land bank and also of the Federal farm-loan board. It may well be asked why such elaborate and expensive machinery is necessary when the land itself, under the landschaft system, furnishes adequate security without the intervention of a bank or subscription of capital, and with a far smaller number of associations, associations whose minimum membership, if we consider the example of Germany, would be in the neighborhood of half a million farmers.

In the landschaft system the liability of members would not extend beyond the landschaft in which they were borrowers. The bill of the joint committee makes the local associations responsible to the extent of their stock in a land bank for the obligations of every other land bank in the United States.

The land banks of the joint committee bill may make mortgage loans for the following purposes and no other: (1) To provide for the purchase of a farm home; (2) for the purchase of equipment, fertilizers, and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the farm; (3) for buildings and for the improvement of farm lands; (4) for liquidation of the indebtedness of the borrower existing at the time of the organization of the farm-loan association or subsequently incurred for the purposes above mentioned. In the landschaft no questions are asked as to the disposition of the money loaned, the principal obligations resting on the borrower being that he shall make interest and amortization payments promptly and keep his land from deteriorating.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. What provision has been made in the bill which has been introduced by the joint committee to compel obedience to the requirements of the bill in the expenditure of this money? Suppose a loan is made, and it is declared that the loan is made for the purpose of purchasing cattle and horses and machinery, or to pay a portion of the cost of the land. What provision is made to compel the expenditure along that line? Is it not a fact that after the money has been paid over to the farmer he can use it as he sees fit, so far as the bill is concerned?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The distinguished coauthor of the bill is here. I will ask him to answer the question.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, it does not seem to me desirable at this time to engage in a general discussion of the rural-credits bill. I think it will be up before the session closes, and then I shall be very glad to explain it. I would rather not precipitate a discussion at this time. I will say, however, in answer to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota that if the money borrowed is devoted to any other purpose than that to which the borrower pledges himself to devote it, the mortgage thereupon becomes in default, and may be foreclosed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am under many obligations to the Senator from New Hampshire for answering that question.

It should be noted that some of the purposes to which loans are restricted in the land-bank system, such as live stock, tools, and so forth, do not properly belong to the domain of long-term mortgage credit, but rather to that of short-term, personal, current credit.

Again, I ask why should we wander into an unknown and untried field when an example lies before us, sustained and vindicated by the experience of 147 years, especially when a similar clarification of recording systems and land laws throughout the country is essential to both methods?

Let me say here that the joint committee bill also provides for the organization of a private, joint-stock mortgage bank conducted for profit, with stock subscribed by private parties, and with power to lend on mortgages to individual farmers.

The able gentlemen who compose the joint committee have labored in this matter with unusual earnestness and zeal. They have advanced what they believe to be a solution, in part at least, of the problem of land credit in the United States. Without offering any criticism of the faithful work of the joint committee, I express it as my personal conviction that they have erected an unnecessary banking superstructure on a foundation of land-mortgage societies which, properly organized, would be sufficient of themselves. What would be thought of a proposal that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. establish and equip with its own capital a bank for the purpose of guaranteeing and selling the company's bonds? A land district, properly organized and operated, needs no bank to guarantee it. Suppose it should be suggested that the land owners in the school districts of the United States take stock in a bank for the purpose of guaranteeing and selling their bonds and become responsible for a number of similar banks throughout the country before they could borrow money for school purposes. Would any school district be organized?

The bill of the joint committee and the landschaft bill which I shall append hereto are intended to provide the farmer with capital for permanent improvements and represent what is known as long-term mortgage credit. The other fundamental need of the farmer is for capital with which to finance the current processes of production, and is covered by what is known as short-term personal credit.

The joint committee has presented no bill on this latter phase of rural credit, but has asked for further time in order to consider a suitable measure. I have introduced a bill along this last-mentioned line—a bill embodying most of the principles taught by Raiffeisen, the great teacher and philosopher of this kind of credit, a bill which will have the effect of reducing interest rates on loans for current farm processes to the lowest practicable point. I shall probably discuss this bill at a later time. It enables farmers in a given district to organize a rural national bank with a capital as small as $500, with privileges of existing national banks, such as exchange of bonds for circulating notes, rediscount for suitable paper, Federal supervision, examination, and so forth. Let me say in this connection, that the thousands of Raiffeisen rural banks in Germany, with an average capital of $400 each, lent to German farmers in 1912 about $500,000,000 at 3 and 4 per cent, and on such time as enabled the agricultural processes for which the money was lent to complete themselves and reimburse the rural banks.

Mr. President, the landschaft or land district system is the safest, most scientific, most practicable, and most effective system of land credit in existence. It obtains credit for the farmer at the lowest market rate and the lowest expense. In my judgment, this Congress will neglect the supreme opportunity and most urgent need of the hour, if it does not at least provide for the establishment of a model landschaft law for the District of Columbia by experts in order that the American people may see and know exactly what it is, and for its extension to the States in the manner deemed most advisable.

Let me add that my bill for a landschaft system has been brought to the attention of two of the world's best authorities on rural credit, Wollemborg and Lorenzoni, both of Italy. Lorenzoni says that the bill is on thoroughly sound lines. Wollemborg's comment is as follows:

I have read the text of this bill. I am unable to give an opinion on matters of detail and points of procedure as I am unacquainted with local conditions and with the psychology of the farming population to whom the measure is to apply.

I can, however, say that the bill is based on sound economic principles and faithfully follows the main outlines of the landschaft system of cooperative mortgage credit which has been in existence for over 150 years in Germany, with an unbroken record of success.

As I have already stated, in my opinion this system of long-term land credit is best suited to comply with the requirements of the average American farmer, for it is suited to land-owning farmers, owning medium or large sized farms, and requiring for their further development loans for considerable amounts, at a low rate of interest and for a long term of years, to be repaid by gradual amortization.

LEONE WOLLEMBORG.

My bill (S. 3704) for a landschaft system now follows. I ask permission to set out the bill in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHEPPARD. As here presented it contains certain amendments which I have added since the bill was originally introduced and which do not appear in the original bill.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to establish a landschaft system of rural credit in the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to aid in effecting the purposes of this act the positions of Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for rural credit and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for rural credit are hereby authorized and established.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for rural credit, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for rural credit, and three other citizens of the United States are hereby constituted a body corporate, to be known as the national rural credit institute, with power to operate under the terms hereof, and to form local units or chapters, known as landschafts, in the District of Columbia and other territory subject to the direct sovereignty of Congress and in such States of the United States as will admit the institute for the purpose of exercising its powers within their respective limits: Provided, That said States, in the judgment of the institute, shall have enacted laws of such character as will permit the successful operation of a landschaft.

SEC. 3. That as a corporate person or body corporate the institute shall have power to sue and be sued, to complain and defend in any court of law and equity as fully as natural persons, to purchase, hold, and convey real estate, to make contracts, and to do all the acts and things essential to the purposes of this act.

SEC. 4. That the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture for rural credit, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for rural credit, and the three other members of the national rural credit institute shall be citizens of the United States, and shall be appointed by the President of the United States as soon after the passage of this act as possible, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of four years, unless sooner removed by the President. At least four members of the institute, outside of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury, shall have been principally engaged in farming for 10 years prior to their appointment, and at least one member shall be an expert student of the subject of rural credit.

SEC. 5. That vacancies shall be promptly filled by the President, who shall also have the power of removing any member whose conduct may be prejudicial to the purposes of this act. The members of the institute, outside of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture, shall give their entire time to the duties by this act imposed.

SEC. 6. That members of the institute, outside of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Agriculture, shall receive a salary of $7,500 per year. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury shall act as chairman of the institute alternately, in the order named, each serving a year at a time.

SEC. 7. That the institute may adopt such methods of meeting and procedure as it may deem advisable. It may provide for such supervision of landschafts as it may deem essential to their success. It may employ such clerical and expert assistance as it may consider necessary, said employees to be appointed after passing examinations prepared by the Civil Service Commission and the institute.

SEC. 8. That the institute shall organize no landschaft in the District of Columbia until Congress shall have enacted such laws relating to title and mortgage registration, to summary powers of foreclosure, administration, and so forth, and such other laws as are essential to the effective operation of the institute and its landschafts. Neither shall the institute apply for admission to enter a State until said State shall have enacted such laws. The institute may make such suggestions to Congress and the States as it may deem proper in this connection. In preparing such suggestions it may make such study of the questions involved as it may deem desirable, making such expenditure for this purpose out of the funds at its command as it may consider proper. The institute may also conduct a campaign of education among the people of a State it proposes to enter in order to familiarize them with the nature and practical working of a landschaft.

SEC. 9. That all expenditures and other actions of the institute shall be determined by a majority vote of all its members, and expenditures shall be made through vouchers authorized by such majority vote and countersigned by the chairman and one other member. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay from the Treasury the amounts as indicated and directed by vouchers so countersigned. A majority of the members of the institute shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 10. That the institute shall have its principal seat at Washington, D. C.

SEC. 11. That the institute shall have power to supervise, control, and issue charters for local units or chapters, known as landschafts, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, under the conditions before mentioned, which charters shall contain the following requirements and such others in harmony therewith as the institute may deem proper:

SEC. 12. That a landschaft shall be composed of all farm owners within a designated district who desire to secure long-term loans on the security of their farms.

SEC. 13. That a district may be subdivided and resubdivided into lesser areas, each with a local administration.

SEC. 14. That no one may join except an applicant for a loan, and membership ceases on repayment of loan.

SEC. 15. That the voting strength of a member is determined by the number and amount of his mortgages.

SEC. 16. That the voting is done in circles in the smallest subdivisions.

SEC. 17. That members elect the superintendents of the circles and also delegates to sit in convention for selecting nominees for other offices and to compose the general meeting.

SEC. 18. That under the supervision of the institute the business of a landschaft shall be conducted and controlled by the directorate, the council of administration, and the general meeting, the duties of these bodies to be specifically set out in the charter.

SEC. 19. That the directorate of a landschaft comprises a president, two vice presidents, an attorney, a secretary, and a treasurer. All officers must be members and therefore borrowers, except the attorney, the secretary, and treasurer, who shall be salaried officials without vote. The central officers are appointed by the institute on the nomination of the members acting through delegates.

SEC. 20. The directorate shall take such steps as in its judgment may be necessary to secure caretakers, cultivators, or managers of mortgaged farms taken over by default. Compensation may or may not be allowed.

SEC. 21. That a landschaft may issue debentures and exchange them for annuity contracts secured by mortgages executed by members in its favor on farms within its territory in consideration of loans made to them.

SEC. 22. That its funds consist of a sinking fund created by repayments by borrowers and used for redeeming debentures and a reserve accumulated from entrance fees, fines, or a portion of profits and maintained only at a size sufficient to guard against contingencies.

SEC. 23. That the contract between the member and the landschaft is an agreement to pay an annuity to the landschaft as long as membership continues; that is, until the loan is paid.

SEC. 24. That the annuity consists of the interest at the agreed rate and usually one-half or one-fourth of 1 per cent of the principal, both calculated on the full, original amount of the loan, together with a contribution to the expense of doing business.

SEC. 25. That in addition to these charges, which are paid annually or semiannually, the borrower may be fined for defaults or for infraction or disregard of rules and regulations, while he must faithfully perform his duties as a member under penalty of being expelled and having his loan recalled. Mortgaged lands shall be inspected as often as may be deemed necessary by officials of the landschaft and of the institute. If said lands are found to have depreciated below two-thirds of their appraised value the landschaft shall have the right to recall a corresponding amount of the loan.

SEC. 26. The borrower shall have the right to pay off the loan at any time he may choose before its expiration.

SEC. 27. That a first mortgage on farm land is taken to secure the contract, and the amount of the loan must not exceed 50 per cent of the value of mortgaged property.

SEC. 28. That the value of the land is to be based on its agricultural earning or producing power, and no appraiser or committee of appraisal shall render a final decision until after a public hearing in the vicinity of the land to be valued, duly advertised, at which all parties desiring to testify may be heard. In the notices of the hearing the appraiser or committee of appraisal shall state their own valuation. The directorate shall designate the appraiser or committee of appraisal.

SEC. 29. That a synopsis of all hearings as to appraisal shall be filed with the directorate and held by them for such examination as the institute may desire to make before mortgage is issued.

SEC. 30. That an applicant has been admitted to membership and his contract and mortgage have been duly executed and approved by the landschaft and the institute, the landschaft gives him its own debentures, after same shall have been approved by the institute, of the same amount and interest rate as his loan. Before approving a mortgage the institute shall have the right to satisfy itself through its own special appraisers and officers that the appraisal on which it is based is correct and that all regulations have been observed, although a separate appraisal by the institute of each mortgage is not made imperative. All mortgages shall be held by the institute in the Treasury of the United States and shall not be surrendered except as provided by this act and regulations of the institute in harmony therewith, and only when the institute is assured that the landschafts are complying fully with the provisions and purposes hereof.

SEC. 31. That the borrower sells the debentures which he obtains by this exchange wherever he can get the best price, or the institute may maintain a selling bureau to enable him to market the debentures, in which event it acts merely as the seller's agent, and may charge a commission. All bonds in the possession of the institute shall be kept in the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 32. That the annuities and other receipts are carried to the sinking fund or to the reserve immediately after they are paid by the borrowers. A separate account is kept in the sinking fund for each borrower and entries are made in it of his payments and defaults, and also of his portion of the profit or loss of the landschaft. When the balance in his favor equals the sum originally borrowed his loan is considered paid. Until this equivalent is obtained the borrower continues to be indebted to the landschaft and his mortgage remains intact of record.

SEC. 33. That according to law the filing of the mortgage converts the annuity contract into a rent charge on the land, and until finally canceled it is notice to the world that the landschaft has a valid prior claim on the land for whatever appears on its books against the borrower or his successors at law. And no landschaft shall be organized until the law of the jurisdiction in which it is to be located shall so provide.

SEC. 34. That borrower has option to designate rate of interest, as well as denominations of debentures issued to him, and the interest rate of the debentures must correspond with that of his loan.

SEC. 35. That debentures shall be of small as well as large denominations in order to attract small investors. Rate of interest shall be 3, 3½, 4, and 4½ per cent.

SEC. 36. That debentures specify that interest is to be paid annually or semiannually, and shall run for 35, 40, or 50 years at the option of the borrower, or as the institute may prescribe. They do not attach either as a fixed or floating charge against the mortgages. They are acknowledgments of indebtedness of certain amounts. They are a liability against the sinking fund and the members.

SEC. 37. That accumulations in the sinking fund are not for investment but for redemption of the debentures exchanged for loans.

SEC. 38. That withdrawals from sinking fund may be permitted after borrower has paid off a certain portion of a loan. In this way the landschaft grants extensions.

SEC. 39. That borrowers may make voluntary payments to sinking fund. Acceptance of cash or debentures of the landschaft required when presented by borrower in payment of his dues to landschaft. By increasing his credit balance borrower pays off his loan in whole or in part.

SEC. 40. That if a member defaults he takes away just so much money available for retiring debentures and liquidating liabilities of sinking fund. The landschaft covers the impairment by apportioning the loss among all members and deducting it from their credit balances in their respective accounts and by the exercise of the power of proportionate assessment. The landschaft may have the right of summary foreclosure and seizure, through proper clauses in the mortgages or by appropriate legislation. Only after all remedies have been exhausted against a defaulting member shall the other members be held for any unpaid balance, unless the interests of the landschaft demand prompter action by immediate assessment of members in order to meet immediate liabilities. All members shall have the right to test in the ordinary courts of justice the question as to whether they have violated the laws and regulations of the landschaft and are properly subject to its penalties. Likewise officials of a landschaft or the institute may invoke the power of the ordinary courts of justice to enforce the authority conferred by this act. Any member may appeal to the ordinary courts of justice to compel the officials of a landschaft or the institute to perform the duties herein required. Members shall agree, through proper clauses in mortgages, to summary foreclosure and seizure proceedings after notice for a specified time.

SEC. 41. That when deficiencies become chargeable against members such deficiencies shall be recoverable by a levy on members in proportion to voting power. Creditors of a landschaft, in the event of any default by it, shall have the right by proper legal procedure to compel the exercise of its power to levy assessments in proportion to voting power, against the members thereof, until the obligations held by said creditor shall have been discharged.

SEC. 42. That every six months or every year debentures are to be redeemed up to amount of cash on hand in sinking fund, if obtainable in the market.

SEC. 43. That the institute may purchase debentures like an ordinary investor, while borrowers may pay their dues with them. Purchased debentures may be reissued, but those turned in by borrowers must be canceled.

SEC. 44. That mortgages always at least equal the debentures, while the sinking fund, composed of repaid loans, is employed only in redeeming or retiring debentures. It can not be invested in new loans, used as a working fund, or diverted in any way from its purpose.

SEC. 45. That all bonds and mortgages shall be engraved by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing according to forms prescribed by the institute.

SEC. 46. That the funds of a landschaft shall be deposited in a depositary named by the institute, to the order of the institute, and all interest payments shall be made by the institute. The institute shall pay the salaries, expenses, etc., of the landschafts in vouchers drawn according to regulations provided by the institute.

SEC. 47. That the institute shall have power, through its representatives, to substitute itself for the officials of a landschaft and to exercise their functions in the event such substitution should become necessary to insure the prompt discharge of a landschaft's obligations.

SEC. 48. That if required by the laws of a State in which it applies for permission to operate, the institute may establish branches in such State to exercise therein the powers of the original parent body and designate representatives to compose said branch.

SEC. 49. That whenever necessary for the purposes of this act the institute shall have power to administer oaths, send for witnesses and papers, and may confer such powers on its own representatives and on the officials and committees of the landschafts.

SEC. 50. That the institute shall investigate the advisability of establishing a life insurance department to aid borrowers in carrying mortgages, and shall make such recommendations to Congress in this regard as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 51. That, to enable the institute to carry out the purposes of this act, the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The salaries of the members, as herein provided, shall be appropriated by Congress independently of the said $500,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator from Texas takes his seat, I do not know whether I correctly understood one statement made by him or not. I understood the Senator to say that the homestead provisions in the constitutions of most of the States of the Union were a very serious impediment to the success of the landschaft proposition which he presents or the land-bank proposition which the committee presents.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I so stated as to many of the States of the Union. I also stated how the landschaft could avoid the difficulty.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator must be mistaken in that statement. I understand that the landschaft association loans money upon real estate mortgages, and where there is a mortgage there is no homestead as against the debt secured by that mortgage. I do not see how the homestead laws could in any way interfere.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I have assumed that the homestead requirements of the States having this exemption were similar to those of Texas, where the homestead idea originated. In the constitution of the State of Texas it is specifically provided that the homestead exemption is not a defense against foreclosure or execution for purchase money or for taxes. The exemption is good against all other obligations, whatever their form. If the constitutions of other States do not go this far, it is all the better for the landschaft principle.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course the Senator was correct in regard to mortgages in States where the constitution contains a provision of that kind.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was referring to States having the kind of homestead exemption I have described and to no others.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand there are very few States in which that provision exists.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator state how many there are?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not; certainly not many. And exemption such as the Senator from Texas says obtains in his State would operate to materially diminish the security of the mortgagee, especially so in view of the liberality of commissioners in making homestead allotments. In my State we have a homestead law which provides for an exemption in case of real estate of $1,000 in value. These exemptions are allotted by commissioners who are generally exceedingly liberal to the defaulting debtor and his family.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In my State the rural homestead consists of 200 acres.

Mr. SIMMONS. In my State there is no limitation upon the right to mortgage the homestead. Of course, where the owner is a married man it requires the husband and wife to join, but where the requirement of the statute with respect to the execution of the paper is complied with, the mortgagor parts, for the purpose of securing the debt, with the entire interest in the land, and there is no homestead as to that particular land against that particular debt.

Mr. SHEPPARD. My statements as to the homestead exemption being an impediment would not be applicable to the Senator's State.

Mr. SIMMONS. And I think that is true as to most of the States of the South.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am very glad to have the Senator so state. I trust that he is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator made another statement which interested me and which, I think, is important. If I understood the Senator he said the landschaft system of Germany is analogous to the drainage systems which obtain in many of the States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand in drainage districts there is an assessment against the land of each one of the freeholders within the area drained. They are each assessed annually, in sums sufficient to pay the annual interest and provide for an amortization fund, and that is collected by the sheriff of the county just as any other taxes are collected. If there is a default, so much of the land is sold as may be necessary to pay the overdue assessment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Making the security more than sufficient and absolutely sound.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says that the landschaft system or scheme which he proposes will be made up of borrowing landholders.

Mr. SHEPPARD. In the landschaft only borrowers may join, and membership is voluntary. In the school and drainage districts all landowners are compelled to become members if a certain number of the landowners of these districts so vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. And no security holder can foreclose one of these mortgages?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The mortgages are not subject to suit and foreclosure by security holders.

Mr. SIMMONS. They are given to the association to secure the debt to that particular landschaft district?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They are.

Mr. SIMMONS. If there is default in the payment of his annual assessment the proceeding against him for that assessment is analogous to the procedure of a sheriff in a State for the collection of tax?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Such is my understanding.

Mr. SIMMONS. And no more of the land is sold than may be necessary to pay that particular assessment?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator is correct.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that the Indian appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10385) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The pending amendment is as follows, on printed page 50: The committee proposes to insert after withdrawing all contained on page 51, down to and including line 16, on page 58:

For continuing construction of irrigation systems on Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana, $750,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this amendment has been fully argued and my course will be shaped largely by the vote upon it. I should like to have a quorum present when it is voted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll roll. There is a quorum present. The Secretary will read the pending amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May we have the amendment stated?

The SECRETARY. The committee has withdrawn all of the bill beginning with page 51 down to and including line 16 on page 58. Following the matter printed in the bill on page 50 the committee offers to insert the following:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Flathead Indian Reservation in Montana, $750,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the following amendment, to follow that item. It has been read once.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be read again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just agreed to insert:

Provided, That the payments for the proportionate cost of the construction of said systems required of settlers on the surplus unallotted land by section 9, chapter 1495, Statutes of the United States of America, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," as amended by section 15 of the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 448), shall be made as herein provided: Provided further, That nothing contained in the act of May 29, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 444), shall be construed to exempt the purchaser of any Indian allotment purchased prior to the expiration of the trust period thereon from any charge for construction of the irrigation system incurred up to the time of such purchase, except such charges as shall have accrued and become due in accordance with the public notices herein provided for, or to relieve the owners of any or all land allotted to Indians in severalty from payment of the charges herein required to be made against said land on account of construction of the irrigation systems; and in carrying out the provisions of said section the exemption therein authorized from charges incurred against allotments purchased prior to the expiration of the trust period thereon shall be the amount of the charges or installments thereof due under public notice herein provided for up to the time of such purchase.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the Senators from Montana have no objection whatever to the adoption of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the amendment which has just been agreed to, the following:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in Montana, $100,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I judge, from the vote on the former amendment, that this amendment will be agreed to; but I want to get the facts into the RECORD, so that Senators may know just exactly what they are voting for.

There are 1,938 Indians on this reservation; there are 71,000 acres of irrigable lands allotted, 212,000 acres of nonirrigable lands allotted, 424,800 acres of grazing land, and 15,893 acres of timberland. The Indians are cutivating 1,100 acres. The original reservation consisted of 1,800,000 acres, and 1,300,000 acres were placed on the market. Seven hundred and twenty-two thousand acres were allotted. There has already been expended on this plan $475,686.09, and there has been reimbursed only $80,000.

I think this amendment should be disagreed to; but, in view of the vote on the other amendment, I suppose it will go through. Therefore I offer as an amendment to the pending amendment the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the pending amendment it is proposed to add the following:

Provided, That the proportionate cost of the construction of said systems required of settlers and entrymen on the surplus unallotted irrigable land by section 2 of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., p. 558), shall be paid as herein provided: Provided further, That nothing contained in said act of May 30, 1908, shall be construed to exempt the purchaser of any Indian allotment purchased prior to the expiration of the trust period thereon from any charge for construction of the irrigation system incurred up to the time of such purchase, except such charges as shall have accrued and become due in accordance with the public notices herein provided for, and the purchaser of any Indian allotment to be irrigated by said systems purchased upon approval of the Secretary of the Interior before the charges against said allotment herein authorized shall have been paid shall pay all charges remaining unpaid at the time of such purchase, and in all patents or deeds for such purchased allotments, and also in all patents in fee to allottees or their heirs issued before payment shall have been made of all such charges herein authorized to be made against their allotments, there shall be expressed that there is reserved upon the lands therein described a lien for such charges, and such lien may be enforced, or upon payment of the delinquent charges may be released by the Secretary of the Interior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the amendment:

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this amendment is likewise quite satisfactory to the friends of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is adopted. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, in view of what has been said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], I think it but right that what was stated by the special commission appointed under the provision of the act of 1914 in relation to this particular project should be read. I beg leave to read a few paragraphs from their report, so that it will appear, as the fact is, that the appropriation is fully justified by the report of a commission appointed under an act of Congress to investigate this particular project. That commission stated as follows:

The work of construction begun by the Reclamation Service on this reservation should be completed at the earliest possible date in order that the allottees may be enabled to derive some income from their irrigable lands and also to save the water rights by construction work and beneficial use.

The report goes on to make some comments on what ought to be done in order to make this project available to the Indians; and at the risk of prolonging the discussion unnecessarily I shall take the liberty to read a few paragraphs, in which the commission set out how these projects could be made altogether useful to the Indians. They say:

In addition to completing the units under construction, we respectfully recommend that work be initiated on the Big Muddy unit at once in order to save for the Indian land the use of the water of Big Muddy Creek, which, in our opinion, is in very serious danger of being lost to the Indians.

The Indians should be encouraged by being furnished farming equipment and competent instructors. Also they should be required to move to and live on their allotments wherever practicable. The superintendent should be firmly supported by the department in his endeavors to compel able-bodied Indians who have equipment to cultivate their land or to become engaged in some useful occupation in order to conserve the interest of thousands of dollars invested in their behalf.

Of the irrigable allotments on the Fork Peck Reservation 62½ per cent are under the proposed Missouri River gravity canal and 325 irrigable allotments under the proposed Big Muddy unit, which is in the extreme eastern part of the reservation, the Big Muddy Creek being the eastern boundary. The land just off the reservation adjacent to the Missouri River and Big Muddy Creek has been settled by homesteaders, and it is therefore imperative that at the proper time steps be taken to protect the water rights of the Indians under these two proposed units. It is understood that the Reclamation Service has filed on the water in the Big Muddy, but unless work of construction is begun within three years from the date of filing the water right of the Indians will be lost. The settlers east of the reservation along the Big Muddy Creek have posted notices of the appropriation of the water in said stream, but as yet have not perfected their title. They are given but 40 days under the Montana State law to begin work of construction in order to retain their water right.

It is a known fact that it requires a capital of from $1,500 to $2,000 for a homesteader to successfully begin operations on land in this western country. An Indian who has had practically no experience can not be expected to farm his land without either capital, implements, or competent instruction.

In order that the Indians may establish themselves on their irrigable allotments it will be necessary that they be properly equipped for farming. It is our opinion that a portion of the funds derived from the sale of surplus land should be made available for the purchase of such stock, equipment, etc., as is needed. Also it is our opinion that in order to effect the sale of this surplus land it will be necessary to have the present homestead laws, in so far as they apply to nonirrigable Indian land opened to entry on this reservation, so amended as to eliminate the requirements as to residence and to allow a filing to be made on 320 acres instead of 160 acres, as now provided by law. Otherwise the lands opened to settlement on the Fort Peck Reservation will not be filed on by homesteaders, and as a result there will not be enough money derived from the sale of the surplus lands to pay for the work that is now in course of construction. Neither will any funds be available with which to equip the Indians for their work.

Aside from furnishing proper implements, seeds, etc., it is absolutely necessary that the superintendent be given competent farmers who have had experience in irrigation and who are competent instructors in methods of farming irrigable lands.

A reimbursable appropriation of at least $100,000 should be made available at an early date in order that the Indians may be equipped for this work as soon as water can be had for irrigating their allotments.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Montana please give the name of the commission from whose report he has just been reading?

Mr. WALSH. This is a report of a commission appointed under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act of August 1, 1914, the commissioners who made the report being C. B. Lohmiller, superintendent Fort Peck Reservation; Arthur E. McFatridge, superintendent Blackfeet Reservation; Fred C. Morgan, superintendent Flathead Reservation; W. S. Hanna, superintendent of irrigation, chairman; L. M. Holt, superintendent of irrigation; and Henry W. Dietz, superintendent of irrigation.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will say that I visited and personally inspected the Fort Peck Reservation last summer and talked with both homesteaders and Indians thereon. Conditions there are such as to absolutely require the speedy completion of this project, for the benefit both of the Indians and the whites, in order to do justice to each and both. The Indians, as well as the white settlers, are suffering from delay, and in talking with them I heard no word of opposition to the speedy completion of the project, but, on the contrary, both Indians and white settlers were urging that the Government go ahead with the project. This appropriation is needed and should be made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Chair if the amendment to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] has been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The amendment has already been agreed to. The question now is upon the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word, and that not on the amendment itself. I notice in the amendment that the appropriation is made to be immediately available "and to remain available until expended."

The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] has just said that this work must be undertaken at once and that there is no opposition to it on the part of the Indians or on the part of the white settlers. It seems to me that the words "and to remain available until expended" ought to be eliminated from the amendment.

I did not raise the question in the case of the previous amendment, carrying $750,000, because that is a very large amount and can not, perhaps, be expended within the time when, under the bill, the appropriation would lapse.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in deference to the desire of the Senator from Utah and considering the experience he has had in these matters of appropriations, we do not insist upon those words remaining in the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I move that the words "and to remain available until expended" be stricken from the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from Montana to understand that I do not offer that in any spirit of hostility toward the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that.

Mr. SMOOT. But it is a bad practice to employ those words, and they should not be incorporated in an appropriation bill unless there is some real good reason for so doing.

Mr. WALSH. The Senators from Montana fully understand the attitude of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to strike out the words "and to remain available until expended."

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, speaking for myself, I am very willing to have that amendment adopted to the pending amendment. I am very glad the Senator from Utah did not present a like amendment to the Flathead amendment, because the conditions there are entirely different, and it would be very inappropriate there.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator understands that I did not suggest such an amendment in connection with the Flathead provision?

Mr. MYERS. I so understand; and I am very glad the Senator did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment last agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

For continuing construction of the irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in Montana, $50,000 (reimbursable), which shall be immediately available and remain available until expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I simply wish to get the facts in the RECORD in this case, as I did in the others. There are 1,224 Blackfeet Indians; the irrigated land farmed by the Indians amounts to 1,618 acres. The amount expended on the project to date is $952,061.34; it will cost to complete the project $2,798,000, and the amount reimbursed to date is $4,544. The amount of money on hand that may be used for reimbursement is none. The reservation now consists of 546,960 acres. These Indians had originally 1,760,000 acres. Under the irrigation system constructed there could have been cultivated in 1915 over 26,000 acres, and yet only 1,600 acres were cultivated.

I think it would be a mistake to make this appropriation, and I think I ought to say further that the Commissioner or Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs said that he doubted very much if this project would be of any benefit to the Indians.

In this connection I want to offer the same amendment which I offered in the other cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I will say that it is in identical terms with the others.

Mr. ASHURST. If it is in identical terms with the others, perhaps it need not be read.

Mr. CURTIS. It is the same, except as to the name of the Indians.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think there is a slight change, and perhaps it had better be read.

Mr. CURTIS. Very well; let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That the entryman upon the surplus unallotted lands to be irrigated by such systems shall, in addition to compliance with the homestead laws, before receiving patent for the lands covered by his entry, pay the charges apportioned against such tract as herein authorized, and a failure to make any two payments when due shall render the entry subject to cancellation, with the forfeiture to the United States of all rights acquired under the provisions of this act, as well as of any moneys paid on account thereof. The purchaser of any Indian allotment to be irrigated by such systems, purchased upon approval of the Secretary of the Interior, before the charges against said allotment herein authorized shall have been paid, shall pay all charges remaining unpaid at the time of such purchase, and in all patents or deeds for such purchased allotments, and also in all patents in fee to allottees or their heirs issued before payment of all such charges herein authorized to be made against their allotments, there shall be expressed that there is reserved upon the lands therein described a lien for such charges, and such lien may be enforced, or, upon payment of the delinquent charges, may be released by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before action is taken on this matter, I desire to ask that there be inserted in the RECORD a letter which I received this morning from Mr. Meritt, the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, urging that this appropriation be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 27, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR WALSH: In compliance with your phone request of this morning, I am transmitting herewith the history of the Blackfeet irrigation project in Montana. There is also inclosed the report of the commission appointed to investigate the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck irrigation projects, found in House Document 1215, Sixty-third Congress, third session.

Referring to your inquiry regarding the estimates of the department for an appropriation of $50,000 for the Blackfeet irrigation project, you are advised that it is very important that there be obtained a small appropriation for the maintenance of this project. The Government has already expended nearly a million dollars on this project, and it is desirable that a small appropriation be made to protect this large investment.

Very truly, yours,

E. B. MERITT,
Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. WALSH. I also ask that there be inserted in the RECORD a memorandum submitted by the Director of the Reclamation Service and a report from the project engineer upon this project.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IRRIGATION ON BLACKFEET INDIAN RESERVATION.

Construction of irrigation works on the Blackfeet Reservation was started in 1908, and an effort was made to employ Indians, so as to teach them how to work and form habits of industry.

Some land was brought under ditch in 1910, which gradually increased annually since that time.

An examination in August, 1913, showed that although 26,000 acres of land were commanded by ditches and water supply, not a single acre had ever been irrigated thereunder. Some improvement, however, occurred in 1914, when 675 acres of Indian lands were irrigated, of which 474 acres produced crops averaging in value $8.20 per acre.

In 1915 the irrigated acreage was 1,618, of which 1,322 acres produced crops to an average value of $12.90 per acre. Thirty-three farms were irrigated, and their products included hay, grain, and garden crops.

I am unofficially informed that the lack of interest in agriculture by the Indians is due partly to the fact that the Indian allotments have not been approved, unless it has been done recently, and the Indians could not, of course, be expected to exhibit much enthusiasm in farming lands to which they could get no guaranty of permanency of tenure.

BROWNING, MONT., August 9, 1913.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith are three tables showing total payments to Indians for services as laborers, for services of their teams, and for supplies during recent years in which the Reclamation Service has been operating in the Fort Peck, Blackfeet, and Flathead Indian Reservations. These tables refer to the work done with Indian appropriations. In addition to this, large amounts have been paid for labor upon works built with the reclamation fund on the Milk River project, Huntley project, where Crow Indians were employed, and Salt River project, where Apaches, Pimas, and Maricopas were employed.

By reference to the table for the Blackfeet Indian Reservation it will be found that the second item of labor has increased progressively every year beginning with $14,691 in 1908 and amounting to $72,954 in 1912. Total payments have increased in a similar ratio. The total payments for Indian labor and teams during the months of May, June, and July, 1913, are $47,178. August, September, and October are still to be heard from, and all indications are that the increase of 1913 over that for 1912 will be large.

The engineer in charge of the work on the reservation reports that at one time last year 174 four-horse teams owned and driven by Indians were employed on construction work and freighting. The largest number employed at one time this year is not as great, but those employed are working more steadily, so that the total amount of work performed by Indian labor per month is greater this year than last.

The engineer also reports that Indians are reasonably skillful in handling four-horse teams attached to fresnos, scrapers, to grading plows, and to freight wagons, but that in many cases they are not reliable, as they will quit without notice, and it is not always safe to trust an Indian to handle a plow team or freighting team where sudden, unexpected stoppage will cause serious detriment to the work and throw a large number of Indians out of employment. For this reason it is necessary to employ a few white men who either perform such duties or can hold themselves in readiness to take the place of Indians who suddenly quit. For the same reason it is necessary to have a considerable proportion of animals owned by the United States and handled by white men, otherwise the work would seriously suffer on account of the unreliability of the Indians and their teams. The Indians, however, have been steadily improving in this respect from an efficiency five years ago very near zero to a point where a considerable number of Indian foremen, plowmen, and freighters are employed with moderate satisfaction.

All of the statistics available and all of the information obtainable from the men who have conducted this work point convincingly to the conclusion that the Indians have greatly improved in skill, reliability, and willingness every year since this work was started on the Blackfeet Reservation. I am convinced that a similar degree of patience, persistence, and skill could succeed equally well in training the Indians to agriculture. At present there are over 26,000 acres of land under ditch which can be irrigated and which the engineer in charge stands ready to deliver water to upon demand. Not a single acre of this land is being cultivated by either Indians or white men. Not a drop of water is being delivered for irrigation from the constructive works. A small acreage is being cultivated by the agency farmer, a part of which lies under the ditch, but this is being cultivated without irrigation. I have not yet had an opportunity to visit this farm.

The land under ditch is situated in three separate tracts and is largely allotted in 40-acre units to Indian allottees.

If a few of the unallotted units were farmed by a skillful, tactful farmer with Indian labor, the Indians employed would learn farm work and would set an example to the other Indians by which they could learn how to handle the water and cultivate the soil. If at the same time moderate pressure by persuasison and personal necessity were exerted, it is believed that results could be obtained in agriculture within a few years that has been made in the past five years in training and inducing Indians to work on construction.

At all times when money is available for the purpose offer is made that all Indians and Indian teams who desire employment will be employed at a given wage. The first year very few Indians offered; these were very inefficient, most of them being almost worthless, and none would remain on the work any considerable time, so that practically nothing was accomplished the first year except to give a meager training to quite a number of Indians employed, each for a short time. The next year the effect of this training and partial habits formed showed and the number of Indians employed increased; they worked for a longer time and with greater efficiency, and each successive year has shown a similar progress.

One of the important factors in this success is the fact that in the immediate neighborhood of the work the Government has maintained a mercantile store where the Indian could purchase all the necessities and no "gew-gaws." He was furnished with such clothing and subsistence as was necessary to make him an efficient workman irrespective of whether he had earned these or not, if only the Indian agreed to work to pay for the material furnished. Though credit of this kind has been given to a considerable extent there has been practically no loss. The engineer in charge reports that not one cent has been lost this year through this cause. The necessity for credit, however, has steadily declined and very little credit has been asked this year.

To sum up, there has been a continual and fairly steady increase in the number of Indians working, the skill with which they work, and in the average reliability and industry.

The necessity of training the young as irrigation farmers is not confined to Indians, and the State of Montana is expending large sums training white boys in irrigation farming at polytechnic and other schools, and the number trained out of school by skillful farmers and employers is much greater. The Indian has no such advantages as yet on this reservation, and that he would respond if given an opportunity is indicated by the results upon construction work, and also by the results upon the Fort Peck Reservation, where the Indians are not only more efficient and industrious upon construction work than on the Blackfeet, yet even there the Government still breaks the virgin soil with traction machinery which the Indians have not yet learned to handle.

The Flathead Indians have furnished no such examples of progress. The land on that reservation is very productive, and their allotments are large, so that the average Indian family receives in rent from white farmers sufficient money for their meager wants, and they play the part of idle landlords in preference to work. It has been very seldom possible to induce any considerable number of Flathead Indians to work on construction, and this seems to be the main reason.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Mr. President, I feel that I ought to take the time of the Senate simply to say, in connection with this matter, that the various appropriations made heretofore by Congress to carry on this work amount in the aggregate to just $1,000,000, of which $16,047.43 lapsed, leaving $983,952.57 heretofore appropriated. These appropriations were all made in view of the act of 1907, which provided for the opening of the entire Blackfeet Reservation. It was contemplated that the amount chargeable to the Indian lands under the project would be paid out of the proceeds of the excess lands sold; but the department has reached the conclusion that that act ought not to be enforced, and consequently the expected revenues have not been received.

I feel it but just to say, also, that out of this entire amount practically one-half has been paid to the Indians themselves. The work has practically all been done by the Indians. Something over $440,000 of the amount expended upon this project has been paid to them.

I have before me here the report of the project engineer for the past year. He tells in detail of the number of Indians who have been employed, and the number of payments that were made to the Indians. It is accompanied with photographs showing the character of crops raised on the reservation by means of the water that was available.

A very gratifying feature of this matter, to which I think I ought to refer, is this: The Director of the Reclamation Service states that while it is true that a relatively small portion of the land is actually cultivated by the Indians, the area is increasing gratifyingly each year; and he expresses the firm conviction that if the same efforts were made to educate the Indians as irrigation farmers that are made to educate even white boys as irrigation farmers, the results would be even more gratifying. So, at least, for the preservation of the rights of the Indians to the water and the utilization of the system, so far as the Indians care to utilize it, the Indian Office feels that the appropriation asked ought to be made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, for the reasons given, in the case of the last amendment for striking out the words "and remain available until expended," I ask that the same words in this amendment be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be the order of the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I do not want to take but a moment of the time of the Senate. I shall vote against the whole proposition. I just want to read into the RECORD what we have in the way of information from the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Speaking of the Blackfeet Reservation, he says:

I am not sure that the Indians will make very much use of this irrigation project under present conditions on the Blackfeet Reservation. The Blackfeet Reservation, you will observe from the map, borders on Canada, and the climate there is not favorable to agriculture because of the early frost. If this project were coming up for the first time, so far as I am concerned, I should advise against the investment of a single dollar on the Blackfeet Reservation for irrigation purposes, because the reservation is primarily a grazing proposition and is more valuable for grazing purposes than for agricultural purposes.

Senator PITTMAN. Then, as I understand you, as an agricultural proposition it would not justify the investment—that is, the amount of money required to make the subject an agricultural industry—and that the return would not justify it?

Mr. MERITT. Not with the industry as shown by the Blackfeet Indians. If it were purely a white man's project, it might be made a success; but we must realize that the Indians do not come up to the white man's standard in industry and effort.

I will simply add that, in this connection, on this reservation we have already expended, in round numbers, $1,000,000, reimbursable out of the Indian funds. As a proof of what I have stated, I will read from what Mr. Meritt said:

I have been on that reservation, and it is my personal opinion that it was a mistake ever to have begun that irrigation project on the Blackfeet Reservation. The Government has expended already about a million dollars on that project, and the Reclamation Service has estimated that it will cost approximately $3,000,000 before the project is completed as planned by them.

I submit that all these irrigation projects are a speculation. In case they are unsuccessful the Indian is the loser; if they are successful, he has very little profit. The Indians do not utilize these irrigation projects to any considerable extent, as is shown by the statement just made by the Senator from Kansas.

Because of this fact, and because I think we are wronging the Indians by these irrigation projects, I deem it my duty to vote against all these appropriations.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PAGE. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the Senator if the Assistant Commissioner, Mr. Meritt, did not go further and state that it was necessary to appropriate this $50,000 in order to protect and save from loss all the work that had been done on the Blackfeet project, at a cost of about $1,000,000?

Mr. PAGE. Oh, yes; it is probably true that the $50,000 we propose to appropriate must be appropriated to save a bare something out of what has already been expended. I introduce these facts because I want the Senate to know that these projects have not been undertaken with good judgment. As a Federal Government should pay the losses, in case they prove white man's project I think they may be good. I think the failures, rather than take the money from the Indians' funds.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, before the question is put, I wish to say for the information of the Senate that it is my opinion that if the Indians are ever permitted to go into court with fair representation the Government will have to pay many millions of dollars in the way of claims for damages for legislation which has been passed by Congress which has not been in the interest of the Indians. I think there is a measure introduced as an amendment to this bill which allows some of them to go into the Court of Claims. If they do, I think they will be entitled to, and if the court is a just one they will get, the damages.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Oregon that I have introduced a bill which permits the Blackfeet Indians to go into court.

Mr. LANE. That is a good bill, and I hope the Senator will have it passed.

Mr. WALSH. I hope to have the help of the Senator from Oregon in getting it through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment just agreed to it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to expend the sum of $22,400 from any money now available for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet Reservation in Montana, in the purchase of lands embraced in the allotments of George W. Cook and David La Breche, described as lots 3 and 5, section 27, and lots 1 and 2, section 34, township 32 north, range 13 west, together with all the improvements thereon, in consideration of the relinquishment by the allottees of all their right, title, and interest in and to said lands and improvements, and of their right to select lieu lands under the provisions of section 14 of the act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., pp. 855, 859), and the release of all their claims whatsoever against the United States or the Blackfeet Tribe of Indians by reason of said lands being required for reservoir purposes in connection with the irrigation system on the aforesaid Indian reservation.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as I understand, this is the amendment that was asked for by letter last Friday.

Mr. WALSH. It is the same one that was adopted by the Senate on Friday last, and the explanation of the amendment will be found in the RECORD of the proceedings of that day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment just agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

The work to be done with the amounts herein appropriated for the completion of the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck projects may be done by the Reclamation Service on plans and estimates furnished by that service and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs: Provided, That not to exceed $19,575 of applicable appropriations made for the Flathead, Blackfeet, and Fort Peck irrigation projects shall be available for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for official use upon the aforesaid irrigation projects: Provided further, That not to exceed $8,865 may be used for the purchase of horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles, and that not exceed $1,500 may be used for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer as an amendment to the amendment the matter which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, following the word "vehicle," the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to announce, at such time as in his opinion seems proper, the charge for construction of irrigation systems on the Blackfeet, Flathead, and Fort Peck Indian Reservations in Montana, which shall be made against each acre of land irrigable by the systems on each of said reservations. Such charges shall be assessed against the land irrigable by the systems on each said reservation in the proportion of the total construction cost which each acre of such land bears to the whole area of irrigable land thereunder.

On the 1st day of December after the announcement by the Secretary of the Interior of the construction charge the allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner of such irrigable land which might have been furnished water for irrigation during the whole of the preceding irrigation season, from ditches actually constructed, shall pay to the superintendent of the reservation where the land is located, for deposit to the credit of the United States as a reimbursement of the appropriations made or to be made for construction of said irrigation systems, 5 per cent of the construction charge fixed for his land, as an initial installment, and shall pay the balance of the charge in 15 annual installments, the first 5 of which shall each be 5 per cent of the construction charge and the remainder shall each be 7 per cent of the construction charge. The first of the annual installments shall become due and payable on December 1, of the fifth calendar year after the initial installment: Provided, That any allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner may, if he so elects, pay the whole or any part of the construction charges within any shorter period: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior, may, in his discretion, grant such extension of the time for payments herein required from Indian allottees or their heirs as he may determine proper and necessary, so long as such land remains in Indian title.

That the tribal funds heretofore covered into the Treasury of the United States in partial reimbursement of appropriations made for constructing irrigation systems on said reservations shall be placed to the credit of the tribe and be available for such expenditure for the benefit of the tribe as may be made under existing law.

The cost of constructing irrigation systems to irrigate allotted lands of the Indians on these reservations shall be reimbursed to the United States as hereinbefore provided, and no further reimbursements from the tribal funds shall be made on account of said irrigation works except that all charges against Indian allottees or their heirs herein authorized, unless otherwise paid, may be paid from the individual shares in the tribal funds, when the same is available for distribution, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

That in addition to the construction charges every allottee, entryman, purchaser, or owner shall pay to the superintendent of the reservation a maintenance and operation charge based upon the total cost of maintenance and operation of the systems on the several reservations, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to fix such maintenance and operation charge upon such basis as shall be equitable to the owners of the irrigable land. Such charges when collected shall be available for expenditure in the maintenance and operation of the systems on the reservation where collected: Provided, That delivery of water to any tract of land may be refused on account of nonpayment of any charges herein authorized, and the same may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be collected by a suit for money owed: Provided further, That the rights of the United States heretofore acquired to water for Indian lands referred to in the foregoing provision, namely, the Blackfeet, Fort Peck, and Flathead Reservation land, shall be continued in full force and effect until the Indian title to such land is extinguished.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations and issue such notices as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act, and he is hereby authorized and directed to determine the area of land on each reservation which may be irrigated from constructed ditches and to determine what allowance, if any, shall be made for ditches constructed by individuals for the diversion and distribution of a partial or total water supply for allotted or surplus unallotted land: Provided, That if water be available prior to the announcement of the charge herein authorized the Secretary of the Interior may furnish water to land under the systems on the said reservations, making a reasonable charge therefor, and such charges when collected may be used for construction or maintenance of the systems through which such water shall have been furnished.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I may have misunderstood the reading of this amendment, but I understand that it provides that the cost of construction shall be paid in seven years. Am I right?

Mr. CURTIS. This amendment provides that it shall be paid in 15 years. It provides for the payment of 5 per cent annually for a certain number of years, and 7 per cent annually for the balance of the period.

Mr. GRONNA. They are given 15 years' time?

Mr. CURTIS. Fifteen years' time, according to my recollection.

Mr. GRONNA. If that is correct, I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH. It is intended to make the provisions conform to the present provisions of the general reclamation law, 15 years; but the initial payment may be deferred for five years.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I believe and therefore move that the word "the" should be inserted after the word "irrigation," on line 16, page 52 of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the chairman of the committee accept the amendment offered?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then that will become a part of the original amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Montana what is the maximum sum that in his judgment can be taken from the Federal Treasury under this amendment of the Senator from Kansas? As I understand, the proposal is to transfer the burden from the Indians to the Federal Treasury. The Senator is acquainted with all the surroundings. I should like to know the maximum loss he thinks may come to the Federal Treasury because of these projects?

Mr. WALSH. Why, Mr. President, I will say frankly to the Senator that I have not the slightest fear that the Government of the United States or the Treasury of the United States will ever lose a dollar.

Mr. PAGE. In the case of the Blackfeet project it seems to be generally conceded that there will be a loss.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think anybody has conceded anything of that kind. I will say to the Senator that, of course, if we do not open the Blackfeet Reservation the Indians will have no money from which this can be reimbursed, so that this is, in that view of it, a straight-out appropriation for the benefit of the Blackfeet Indians. But we hope you will be persuaded that the eastern end of the reservation should be opened, and then the white settlers who take the lands there under the project will contribute to the Federal Treasury whatever is assignable to their lands, and the proceeds of the sale of the Indian lands will be applied, so far as they belong to the individual Indians who take their allotments there, to reduce it, and I have no doubt in the world that as time goes on other portions of the reservation will be opened, because that is the history of these things in the past. Just as fast as the reservation opens the moneys will then become available to the liquidation of the indebtedness which now exists.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator is of course aware, as for instance in North Dakota, that some of these irrigation projects have been failures, and he is also aware that in the opinion of the department this Blackfeet project, upon which $1,000,000 has already been paid out, ought never to have been commenced as an Indian proposition. Am I right about that?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Meritt expressed that view, but I do not think when you speak about the department you ought to accept what Mr. Meritt says about a matter against what the special commission that was appointed by virtue of the act of Congress to go out and investigate the matter said. They say the project is all right and I tell you that it is all right, and the head of the Reclamation Service tells you it is all right. Now, Mr. Meritt does not tell you that it is not all right, but he says if the thing was to do over again he would not do it. I dare say in the business experience of the Senator from Vermont he has started enterprises that when he got through with them he would rather he had not started.

Mr. PAGE. But usually when I start on an enterprise and it is a failure I have to pay the loss out of my pocket.

Mr. WALSH. So I have tried to state. Of course if you do not wish to get the money out of the lands by opening the lands so that the Indians will have something to pay, the Treasury will always be out that amount.

Mr. PAGE. I was of the opinion that Mr. Meritt reflected the views of the department when he said that they had already paid out $1,000,000, and that it would cost $2,000,000 to complete the project, and that all he thought we ought to do was simply to tie up and make available what had already been expended, as far as we could by the expenditure of this additional sum, $50,000.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator from Vermont I do not think so. I thought Mr. Meritt, who told us he had been on this reservation, was expressing his own individual idea about it, because he has sent a letter, written this morning, asking that the appropriation be made.

Mr. PAGE. An appropriation of $50,000?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; which I have put in the RECORD. I think he was expressing his own opinion about it. Bear in mind, this is 1916 and the initial appropriation was made in 1908, eight years ago, and we have learned a lot about irrigation problems in Montana in eight years that we did not know then. We have learned that we can cultivate vast areas of our land without irrigation quite successfully. We have learned also, Mr. President, that there are many troublesome difficulties in connection with these irrigation projects of which we did not know anything at all, or knew but little, in 1908.

Mr. PAGE. I did not follow all the amendments of the Senator from Kansas very closely. Am I right in supposing that by this amendment we relieve the Indians from the burden of these projects in case there is a final loss?

Mr. WALSH. The amendments offered by the Senator from Kansas were prepared through conferences between the Montana delegation and the Indian Bureau. They are entirely satisfactory to the Indian Bureau. I want to say to the Senator briefly they provide that the provisions of the various acts by which in a way the avails of the Indian lands stood pledged for the expense of the projects have been in effect repealed. It ought to be said as well that the law likewise provided that the white settlers should pay their proportionate share of the cost so that the Treasury was to be reimbursed from the contribution made by the white settlers as well as by the Indian allottees.

Mr. PAGE. I understood that to be the case.

Mr. WALSH. The amendments now adopted provide that the individual share of the individual Indian in the tribal funds, the Indian who has land under the project, may be applied by the Secretary of the Interior to the payment of his share of the expense of the construction of the project, and that the settler who appropriates any of the excess land shall be charged his share and shall pay it, and that the Treasury shall be reimbursed in that way. Then it provides that the tribal funds of the Indians shall not otherwise be chargeable with anything.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to say that I am very happy because of this outcome. I have devoted a good deal of time to the study of these irrigation problems, and perhaps I have sometimes been offensive to my brother Senators in fighting what I have believed to be gross injustice to the Indian, a wrongful use of his money. So far as I can now see, I think this solution of the matter is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 16, to insert:

For the erection of a building for the display of Indian exhibits upon the fair grounds of the Western Montana Fair Association at Missoula, Mont., upon such plans as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall direct, $1,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make a point of order on this amendment that it is not germane.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to be heard on that.

Mr. CURTIS. I make a point of order and it is not debatable under the rule.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Where does the Senator get any authority that a point of order is not debatable?

Mr. CURTIS. I get it in Rule XVI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will presume to transfer the question to the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to say that Rule XVI——

Mr. CURTIS. Paragraph 3.

Mr. MYERS. That a point of order is not debatable?

Mr. ASHURST. May I have a moment?

Mr. CURTIS. I raise the point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not want to debate the point of order; I want to make a short statement.

I was going to say the situation before the Senate is such that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is going to press his military bill, and I want, if I can, to conclude the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill to-day. I appeal to Senators not on the other side but on this side of the Chamber to make just as few and as short speeches as their oratorical temperaments will permit. I appeal to Senators to sit and vote and to exercise their oratorical capacities on the military bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair claims no special knowledge in this direction, and desires to submit the question to the Senate whether the amendment is germane.

Mr. MYERS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson
Beckham	Curtis	Jones	Newlands
Borah	Gore	Kern	Norris
Brandegee	Gronna	Lane	Oliver
Broussard	Harding	Lodge	Overman
Catron	Hardwick	McCumber	Page
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Ransdell
Clapp	Hollis	Myers	Robinson

Shafroth	Smoot	Thompson	Walsh
Sheppard	Sterling	Tillman	Weeks
Sherman	Sutherland	Townsend
Smith, Ariz.	Taggart	Underwood
Smith, Ga.	Thomas	Wadsworth

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is absent on official business. This announcement may stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question is whether the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is germane. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senate decides that the amendment is germane. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate having agreed that the amendment is germane, the question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have no objection to the real merits of the amendment. It would perhaps be a good idea to erect buildings for the Indians to exhibit their products, but, Mr. President, when I presented the idea to the committee I was told that we must not establish this precedent. I did not press my claim any further. I simply abided by the wishes of the committee. How in the world the amendment has gotten on the Indian appropriation bill I do not know.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. MYERS. The amendment was adopted by a majority vote of the committee. I was there when it was adopted. I ask the chairman to bear me out in that statement.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not yield for a speech. The Senator will remember that on Saturday he declined to yield to me for a speech.

Mr. MYERS. But I never object to yielding for a question.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator wishes to ask a question, I will gladly yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall insist upon a record vote upon this amendment, and I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask the Senator a question. This money, I suppose, comes out of the Indian funds?

Mr. GRONNA. It does.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to make a correction there. It does not come out of the Indian funds. It is a gratuity out of the Treasury of the United States. I ask the Senator to read the amendment. It is not reimbursable. It is a donation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For what purpose?

Mr. MYERS. To encourage the Indians to make farming exhibits at a fair in Montana.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana upon what theory he thinks we are justified in appropriating money out of the Public Treasury to provide for an Indian exhibit at a fair?

Mr. MYERS. In order to encourage the Indians to engage in agriculture, and to produce crops and become farmers. We have spent thousands and thousands of dollars in hiring farming instructors, farm teachers, for Indians in order to educate them and make farmers of them, and I believe that this will do more toward making farmers out of the Flathead Indians than all the rest of the money that has been expended for that purpose.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Who is asking for this appropriation? The Indians?

Mr. MYERS. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Indians or the directors of the fair association?

Mr. MYERS. The request came from Maj. Morgan, the Indian agent of the Flathead Indians. I offered the amendment at his request, supplemented by the request of a large number of the Indians who met me on the fair grounds at Missoula, Mont., last fall, and joined in the request of the Indian agent. The directors of the fair knew nothing about it. It was a surprise to them when I offered the amendment. They were not consulted.

Mr. GRONNA. I still have the floor, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor, and will proceed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I wish to read the language of this amendment:

> For the erection of a building for the display of Indian exhibits upon the fair grounds of the Western Montana Fair Association at Missoula, Mont., upon such plans as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall direct, $1,000.

It does not provide that this money shall be taken out of the Treasury; it says at the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the only available money will be the Indian money. So I say to the Senator from Montana he is mistaken in stating that it will be taken from the Treasury.

Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. JONES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he does not think the provision would be even worse if it provided expressly that it was to be taken out of the Public Treasury?

Mr. GRONNA. I think it would be worse.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why should the people of Mississippi, and Georgia, and Alabama, and North Carolina, and New York pay to carry on an Indian fair any more than the people of New York and California and North Dakota should be called upon to pay for a State fair in Mississippi?

Mr. GRONNA. That is true. I agree with the Senator. Now, Mr. President, I have nothing further to say on this point.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to make a statement, and then I will yield.

Mr. JONES. Right in this connection I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. JONES. According to the language of the provision all that the commissioner has to do is to prepare such plans as the commissioner may direct, and the money must come out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. If it does, just as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said, it should not be done. Mr. President, I believe that if we are to commence to erect buildings for this purpose we should not erect them only for Missoula, Mont., but for every Indian agency in every State where we have Indians. I am opposed to this amendment going in at this time.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, just a few words. I agree with the Senator from North Dakota that if we would erect a building for each tribe of Indians in the United States in which to put their exhibits at some fair and thereby instill in them a spirit of competition, an incentive to industry and cultivation of the soil, making them self-supporting and making farmers of them, it would be money well spent, and I would favor doing it on every Indian reservation in the United States. This money is not to be reimbursable. That was discussed in the committee. It is a plain gratuity out of the Treasury of the United States to encourage Indians to follow agriculture, an incentive to develop them into farmers and to make them self-supporting. We spend hundreds of thousands of dollars for Indians in ways that are far less beneficial than this and much less judicious.

There seems to be some disposition to criticize very severely this amendment. I want to call attention to the fact that it is indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior. It came to the Committee on Indian Affairs with the indorsement of that official, who wrote a letter about it to the chairman of the committee, which is found on page 30 of the report of the Senate committee on this bill, and which is as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
> Washington, February 24, 1916.
> MY DEAR SENATOR: This will refer further to your memorandum transmitting for report copy of an amendment intended to be proposed by Senator Myers to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 10385), appropriating $1,000 for the erection of a building for the display of Indian products on the fair grounds of the Western Montana Fair Association, at Missoula, Mont.
> I am advised that for several years very successful exhibits of Indian products have been shown at this fair, and the Indians have won a number of prizes in direct competition with white farmers, which has not only tended further to encourage them in their industrial activities, but also to give the public correct ideas of present civilized conditions among the Indians.
>
> No specific information seems to be available as to the sufficiency of the quarters for housing the Indian exhibit at this fair, but the proposed amendment would seem to indicate that they are inadequate. Should Congress see fit to appropriate funds for this purpose I will interpose no objection thereto and will use every means to see that the best possible use is made of whatever amount is appropriated.
> Cordially, yours,
> FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.
> Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
> Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
> United States Senate.

Mr. PAGE. Will the Senator tell me from what page of the committee hearings he has been reading?

Mr. MYERS. I am reading from page 30 of the Senate committee report on this bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana if he knows what accommodations the fair association has at this time?

Mr. MYERS. I will answer that. I was just about to get to that. I am glad the Senator asks the question.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then, further, if there are not sufficient accommodations to accommodate all the exhibits that may be entered there, would it not be rather up to the fair association to furnish accommodations for exhibits, rather than to have the exhibitors themselves do it?

Mr. MYERS. It might be in some cases, but this has the approval of the Government. It is intended as an incentive to the Indians. I will say that at the Missoula fair last fall the Indians had a splendid agricultural exhibit—corn, wheat, grasses, oats, hay, vegetables, berries, fruit, and all the products of the soil, showing that the Flathead Indians are making a good beginning in agriculture. Their land has been alloted to them, and it is necessary that they should go on their allotments and cultivate them and make a living, unless they are to be forever wards of the Government. This would encourage industry in them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My suggestion——

Mr. MYERS. I will answer the question. There are no adequate quarters there for an Indian exhibit. Their exhibit is housed in quarters which are not nearly sufficient, and the Indians and the Indian agent want an Indian building, where the Indians can gather when they attend the fair and hold conferences and make their headquarters and have their exhibits; have them in a special building, put up especially for their use and designed according to their needs.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I merely wanted to remark that in other States where they have Indian exhibits at fairs the fair association provides most abundant and capacious rooms for them and they are very glad to do it. It forms added attractions to the fair association.

Mr. MYERS. I want to say in addition this is to be a gratuity appropriation, and on that account I expect it to have the very earnest and hearty support of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. In the debates Saturday about the appropriation for the Flathead reclamation project the Senator from Vermont complained that it was reimbursable out of the funds of the Indians and contended that was not fair to the Indians. I asked him how he thought the appropriation should be made and he indicated that he thought the fairest and best way would be a gratuity appropriation by the United States Government. He indicated very pointedly that he might be willing to vote a gratuity appropriation of about $6,000,000 to complete the Flathead reclamation project, for the benefit of Indians and whites on the Flathead Reservation.

Now, I am sure that, as an evidence of his good faith, he will vote for this little beginning, which is just a drop in the bucket, just as a grain of sand on the seashore, as compared with the enormous sum of $6,000,000 of which he was talking Saturday. Then he showed a strong disposition to change the plan of making Indian appropriations from reimbursable appropriations to gratuity appropriations. Then we were making reimbursable appropriations and he was strong for gratuity appropriations. Now this is a proposition to vote money directly out of the United States Treasury for the benefit of Indians. This would be a good beginning for him, a gratuity appropriation of just $1,000 instead of $6,000,000, and I feel sure of his very hearty support. Let him begin now to show his willingness to vote gratuity appropriations to Indians. This is a good time. Here is a good chance.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield with great pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Montana, I am quite sure, will remember that there were others who asked for appropriations like this.

Mr. MYERS. I do not remember any others.

Mr. GRONNA. It was suggested by other members of the committee that it was an exceedingly dangerous proposition to begin.

Mr. MYERS. I care not what was suggested; the committee recommended the amendment or it would not now be in the bill and before the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. MYERS. With great pleasure.

Mr. PAGE. I want to take but a moment of time to read what I said at the time we were discussing this matter before the committee.

Mr. MYERS. No; I was talking of what the Senator said Saturday, on the floor of the Senate, in debating the amendment for an appropriation for the Flathead reclamation project. It was that occasion to which I referred.

Mr. PAGE. That is right; but I am speaking about what I said in committee.

Mr. MYERS. All right.

Mr. PAGE (reading):

> Senator PAGE. I would like to say that I would not let the Senator from Montana say anything more than I can in regard to the beneficial results from competition at State and county fairs; but we seem to be entering upon a field here that I think we do not see the end of. If there is any reason why we should build a building for this county fair and should say it is a county and not a State fair, then why should we not open the doors wide and put up a building in every county in the Union where there are Indians?

That is my objection to this feature of the bill. I do not see any reason why we should make any exception of a State fair or county fair in Montana.

I stated further:

> If we are going to enter upon that plan of constructing buildings for the Indians everywhere, I say, amen; let us do it, but I think we are opening the door here to buildings that will be legion in number if we continue to build these buildings in all parts of the United States.
>
> I dislike to announce that I shall have to make a point of order on items of this kind, but if this item is put in I notify the committee I will make a point of order on it.

I feel that this is one of the worst pieces of legislation that we could adopt here, because any Senator who is on the Committee on Indian Affairs knows that from beginning to end there is one continuous application for funds for such purposes as this; and the only way we can stop such onslaughts is to refuse to establish the precedent, and then by saying that, unless we have a precedent, we shall not enter upon this kind of legislation. The item is small; I do not like to take up the time of the Senate in opposing it, but here is an item that is a beginning. I asked distinctly of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs if he had a precedent, and, if I remember correctly, he stated there might be some precedent, but he did not cite any. I still insist that we are entering upon a very dangerous class of legislation when we undertake to make appropriations for such purposes.

Mr. MYERS. This is one of the very meritorious items.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Montana whether he is in favor of a general policy which will result in appropriating money for holding these Indian exhibits in all of the States where Indian reservations are to be found?

Mr. MYERS. I think it would be money well spent to expend $1,000 of Government funds on each Indian reservation in the United States where the lands have been allotted to the Indians, where the Indians have been thrown on their own resources, and where it is necessary to teach them to become farmers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How large an expenditure would that amount to per annum?

Mr. MYERS. I do not suppose there are over a dozen such Indian reservations in the United States, so the expenditure would be approximately $12,000 a year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are more than a dozen places where Indians are engaged in farming upon their lands.

Mr. MYERS. I said Indian reservations, where the lands have been allotted to the Indians, where they are on their own resources, and are required to make a living on their own land. There is one reservation of that kind in Montana, and I doubt if there are more than three or four in the entire Union.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But this is not confined to Indian reservations. It says:

> For the erection of a building for the display of Indian exhibits upon the fair grounds.

Mr. MYERS. It refers to the Flathead Indians, on the Flathead Reservation, in Montana.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, no; it is a separate item, wholly independent of the Flathead Reservation or of any other reservation.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that this is an appropriation for the purpose of constructing a building.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. There would have to be an additional appropriation to make the display. This entire sum appropriated would be expended in the construction of the building for a State fair association in Montana. Has that occurred to the Senator from Utah? None of this money could be used to make a display of the exhibit, but the appropriation is simply for the erection of the building, so that an exhibit could be made if they could get the money for that purpose otherwise and bring the exhibit to the building.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I can foresee that if we enter upon this policy nobody can tell how much money we are going to appropriate hereafter, and I think we would hesitate if a general bill were brought in here providing for the expenditure of a thousand dollars in each of the States or, perhaps, in each of the counties in the western country where Indians are engaged in farming. I think we would hesitate a long time before we would accede to a general policy of that kind.

This is a small appropriation; but if we adopt it it is the beginning of a very large expenditure hereafter and for purposes which are not of a governmental character in any sense of the word.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think the chief objection to this proposition consists in what was just stated by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. It is a mere grain of sand out of a number on the seashore, and it can not stop with the Indians either, because if you once start the idea that you are to erect buildings to carry on county or State fairs—fairs on Indian reservations which are on an equal footing with county or State fairs—you have to go further.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] said that it might extend to every part of the country where there are Indians. Suppose it does. Shall it stop there? What is the matter with the white folk? If you are going to create emulation in agriculture by having the Federal Government construct buildings for the purpose of making better agricultural exhibits, why are you going to confine it to any one race upon the territory of the United States?

Mr. MYERS. I should like to answer that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one second, and I shall do so. Why should the Indians, or why should the darkeys, or why should anybody else possess any peculiar advantage over the white people of the country?

Mr. MYERS. Because the Indians are the wards of the Government, and the white people are not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, the Indians are considered the wards of the Government, and the darkeys have been considered the wards of the Government, and nearly everybody except white people has been considered a ward of the Government; but even being a ward does not entitle the guardian to take away from somebody else to whom it belongs a certain amount of money for advancing the interests of the ward. It only entitles the guardian to spend the ward's money in the manner most highly beneficial to the ward.

It is true that this particular guardian, the United States, has misspent a whole lot of these particular wards' money; it has misused it—misappropriated it; it has thown it away, and has kept bad faith time after time, and again and again; but that does not affect the fact that the only duty of a guardian is to use the ward's money for the benefit of the ward.

Now, the Senator from Montana tells us that these people are already so well advanced—or rather the Senator from Montana did not tell us that, but he read a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, which told us that these people were already so far advanced out there that they had taken prize after prize over the white farmers in their neighborhood. Well, then, if that be true, and the object of this appropriation be to better farming, we should try to better the white man's farming out in that country and let the under dog have a show.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we can not afford to take the first step which would carry us into that field of reservation and county and State fairs. We have already taken steps carrying us out into the field of national fairs, as we call them. I voted against every one of them; I never voted for one in my life. I can not conceive of the authority resting in the Federal Government to carry on a fair of any description. There was, however, some glamor around the word "national," spelled with a great big "N," but there is no glamor about the word "reservation" spelled with a big "R," or the word "county" spelled with a big "C," or the word "State" spelled with a big "S." I think the right place to stop this thing is the place where you stop a trip in the wrong direction, and that is just before you start out.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I raised the point of order on this amendment because I thought it should be defeated, and I hope that the Senate will vote it down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the yeas and nays on this amendment seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 58, after line 20, to insert:

For the improvement and maintenance for bathing purposes of the Camas Hot Springs, near the town of Camas, on the Flathead Indian Reservation, Mont., said bathing privilege to be free to the Indians, but all other persons shall pay such fee as shall be required by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and for the employment of a caretaker at such annual salary as may be fixed by said Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $5,000.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that that amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. MYERS. The amendment rests on the same basis as the preceding amendment, and that amendment was decided to be germane.

Mr. ASHURST. I raise the point of order that the point of order is not debatable.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question up to the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Might I speak a word in reply to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Regular order!

Mr. MYERS. I merely want to say a word.

Mr. CURTIS. I have made the point of order, and it is not debatable.

Mr. MYERS. I want to ask a question of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas if he does not think it rather unfair to cut off debate on a point of order like this?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The question is as to whether or not the amendment is germane. [Putting the question.] The "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. MYERS. I ask for a division. This amendment is just as germane is was the other amendment.

The question being put, on a division the amendment was decided to be not germane to the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. What became of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was decided to be not germane, and went out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the committee amendment in the paragraph will have to be first considered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the committee amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. We are only considering committee amendments at this time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to say that I have the consent of the chairman of the committee to offer this amendment as an amendment to the committee amendment. It has been considered by the Indian Bureau.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska offer his amendment as an amendment in lieu of the committee amendment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; but to add it at the end of the paragraph, in line 10, after the figures "$10,800."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that we have not reached that point in the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Nebraska," on page 59, line 5, to change the number of the section from 11 to 12, and in line 8, after the word "improvements," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$10,000," so as to read:

SEC. 12. For support and education of 400 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Genoa, Nebr., including pay of superintendent, $68,800; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; for new boilers at power plant, extension of lighting system and of water and sewer main, and for construction of septic tank, $10,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. President, my amendment follows, in line 10. It is an amendment which has been accepted by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, after the figures "$10,800," it is proposed to insert:

For suitable employees' quarters for physician, principal teacher, and clerks, $7,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator offering the amendment explain why the appropriation of $7,000 provided for is asked?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can do so perhaps best in the language of the Acting Secretary of the Interior, whose letter on the subject reads as follows:

The second proposed amendment provides $7,000 for employees' quarters. The Genoa school has no suitable quarters for its principal teacher. At present he occupies a small, poorly ventilated room in the academic building. Adequate quarters for the principal teacher are badly needed.

For many years this school has had contract physicians. Under this plan the physician lives in town and has an extensive practice there. Consequently, he gives comparatively little time to school work. A resident physician is needed who, in addition to treating pupils who are ill, will give lectures, aid in the inspection of buildings and pupils, and attend to sanitation of the school. A resident physician can not be employed until suitable quarters are provided. Unmarried employees at the Genoa school are comfortably provided for as to quarters, but married employees are not so well cared for.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought from the reading of the amendment, Mr. President, that it only applied to the erection of a building for the superintendent. I now understand that not only is it supposed to provide for the superintendent but also for the resident physician and other employees of the school?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have another amendment, which is in the nature of an emergency amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator desist one moment? The Chair is informed that the total should be corrected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the change in the total wait until I propose another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to follow the one just agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment just agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

For the purpose of making necessary repairs on the Government bridge across the Niobrara River near Niobrara, Nebr.; also to reconstruct one span of 90 feet over the back channel of the Niobrara River at the same point, the sum of $6,500; said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say by way of explanation that this is necessary because the two spans of the bridge have just been washed out, so that the accident occurred too late to have the matter of repairs considered when the pending bill was in committee. This is a Government bridge between the Santee Reservation and the Ponca Reservation.

Mr. ASHURST. And it is on a reservation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is on a reservation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, Mr. President, it will be necessary to change the total figure so as to read $103,100.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, line 11, the committee have reported an amendment, to strike out "$84,600" and insert "$89,600." It is now proposed to insert "$103,100" in lieu of "$89,600."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has been recognized.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I feel compelled to take the floor at this moment to interrupt the speeding of the Indian appropriation bill, which my friend the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs has been doing, especially as I am a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and the members of that committee appreciate his efforts to dispose of the appropriation bill to-day so as to permit the important Army reorganization bill to be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I merely desire to offer an amendment applying to the particular paragraph of the appropriation bill just under consideration. I do not think it will excite any discussion. The committee has already approved it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will yield with the understanding that I may proceed immediately after the matter is disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. It seemed to me that while we were on this particular paragraph it would be well to finish it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. JONES. I inquire if general amendments are in order as we proceed with the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that only committee amendments were in order at this time.

Mr. JONES. That is what I understood, that we were simply reading the bill for committee amendments at the present time.

Mr. NORRIS. We have just agreed to two amendments that were not committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is true; but it is contrary to the agreement.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection; but I have some amendments to offer, and I desired to know what course was being pursued.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that, by unanimous consent, it was agreed that amendments of the committee should first be considered.

Mr. NORRIS. The amendment to which I have referred has the approval of the committee; it is a report of the committee. It is in the shape of a bill on the calendar, unanimously reported by the committee, and in that sense is, in fact, as much a committee amendment as were either of the two amendments which have just been adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire action now?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the amendment disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 59, after line 11, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve the assessments, together with maps showing right of way and definite location of proposed drainage ditches to be made under the laws of the State of Nebraska upon the allotments of certain Omaha and Winnebago Indians in Wakefield drainage district, in Dixon, Wayne, and Thurston Counties in Nebraska.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay the amount assessed against each of said allotments: Provided, That said assessment shall not exceed $10 per acre on any allotment or portion thereof; and there is hereby appropriated for said purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $30,000, to be immediately available, the said sum to be reimbursable from the rentals of said allotments, not to exceed 50 per cent of the amount of rents received annually, or from any funds belonging to the said allottees, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to approve deeds for right of way from such said allottees or their heirs as may be necessary to permit the construction and maintenance of said drainage ditch upon the payment of adequate damages therefor.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to approve the assessments upon all other restricted allotments located within any proposed drainage district located and made under the laws of the State of Nebraska.

That in the event any allottees shall receive a patent in fee to any allotment of land in any lawfully constituted drainage district within the State of Nebraska before the United States shall have been wholly reimbursed as herein provided, the amount remaining unpaid shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of each patent in fee issued and the amount of the lien set forth thereon, and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount assessed against any allotment as herein provided shall, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, operate as a satisfaction of such lien.

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying these provisions into full force and effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

THE SUGAR INDUSTRY.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I had intended to have the Secretary read excerpts from an article published in the New Orleans Daily States of recent date, but, as there are portions of the article which are not germane to the matter, which I desire to discuss, I shall read the excerpts myself. I quote from the New Orleans Daily States of date March 17 of this year:

[By Arthur Ball (staff special to the States).]

LA FAYETTE, LA., March 15, 1916.

* * * * * * *

"I am no apologist for Mr. Ewing," said Senator RANSDELL. "He is well able to take care of himself. But I must tell you men, the men to whom I know to be interested in the sugar industry, of the work of Robert Ewing in behalf of sugar. You all must recollect my opposition to free sugar. Never have I gone through such a period as that in which the sugar tariff fight was waged; and I hope that I never again shall have to go through another such period. I fought against free sugar, but I could not win.

"When I saw that we faced defeat in that fight I suggested to the other opponents of free sugar that we should bring to Washington the one man who could do more for the sugar industry than all the Louisiana delegation combined—that man was Robert Ewing. I previously had arranged an interview with the President for Senator BROUSSARD and myself. That interview lasted 15 minutes—15 minutes was all the time that we Louisiana Senators could obtain to state our case to the President.

"But I knew that Robert Ewing, the greatest Wilson man in Louisiana before the Democratic nominating convention, the leader of the Wilson forces in Louisiana after the convention, a member of the Wilson campaign committee of 15, the personal friend of Postmaster General Burleson, who is one of Mr. Wilson's chief political advisers, could do more than we.

"And Robert Ewing came at our call. He stayed there in Washington for weeks at his own expense, was in constant conference with the leaders of both sides of the sugar-tariff fight. Never before have I seen a man work more earnestly for a cause than did Robert Ewing for Louisiana's sugar industry. He worked so earnestly that he assumed the chance of placing himself in bad odor with his party.

"Then the cry for free sugar became louder. Ewing pleaded for time; he begged the President to preserve the tariff for at least seven years. Just before the Underwood tariff bill went to the Senate the President called Senator BROUSSARD, Mr. Ewing, and myself into conference. We three pleaded with the President for a three-year extension of the tariff, but could not move him. Senator BROUSSARD and myself left, and Mr. Ewing remained behind with the President. The next day the tariff bill came out with the three-year clause. I think it is an act of justice to say that but for the efforts of Robert Ewing, the man who has been most maligned in this gubernatorial campaign, sugar to-day would be upon the free list."

FRANKLIN, March 16.

"Senator J. E. RANSDELL spoke to a large and enthusiastic audience here Tuesday night. Ex-Senator Murphy J. Foster presided over the meeting. On the sugar question Senator RANSDELL said:

"When the sugar fight came on all of the true friends of the industry of Louisiana felt that the fight had gone forth and that sugar would be placed on the free list. The Hon. Murphy J. Foster was doing all that he could. I was doing my best, and it was decided in a conference that the one man in Louisiana that could do more for sugar than anyone else was Robert Ewing, of the city of New Orleans.

"I made the original suggestion that he be sent for, and in response to our appeal he came to Washington at once. Mr. Ewing had led the fight for Woodrow Wilson at the Baltimore convention. He had worked for the nomination of Mr. Wilson, and after the nomination Mr. Ewing was one of the committee of fifteen who had charge of his campaign.

"Mr. Ewing was also very close to Postmaster General Burleson, who was one of the most influential members of the Cabinet.

"I can testify that no man worked more enthusiastically and unselfishly than Robert Ewing for the cause of sugar.

"He asked and worked for a reasonable duty to be retained on sugar, and did his utmost to secure it. Failing in that, he appealed to President Wilson to consent that the placing of sugar on the free list be delayed for a period of seven years. It was finally agreed to give them three years of grace.

"Your distinguished ex-Senator was there doing his utmost, and I was working with him. It was splendid team work; but if one man more than another was a leader in that fight, it was Robert Ewing, of New Orleans.

"To Robert Ewing more than to any other man in the State of Louisiana the sugar planters owe the three years' extension of the sugar tariff. I am no apologist for Mr. Ewing. He can and will take care of himself, but in simple justice to him I must tell you that the sugar planters of the third congressional district owe Mr. Ewing a debt of eternal gratitude for the fight he made for them at Washington.

"The fight that Mr. Ewing made at Washington almost estranged him from his own party, but nevertheless he made it honestly and sincerely.

"Mr. Ewing remained in Washington during the entire time that the sugar question was under consideration, and notwithstanding the very urgent offer of the sugar people to pay his expenses he refused to accept even that much for his services, not only giving his time and talent to the sugar people but paid every cent of his own expenses."

Senator Foster, before the meeting adjourned, said that in simple justice he wished to confirm the statement made by Senator RANSDELL, and that he wished to state publicly, what he had frequently stated in private conversation, that Mr. Ewing worked night and day in the cause of the sugar industry of this State on that occasion, and that he also agreed with Senator RANSDELL in his statement that it was largely, if not entirely, due to the work of Mr. Ewing that the three years' extension was inserted in the tariff bill."

Years devoted to the public service have taught me that no matter what may be the rectitude of one's course, one is sure at times to be misunderstood by well-meaning men and to be misrepresented by men of evil mind.

I have had my share of both these experiences, and, indeed, probably all men who have long served in a public capacity have met with the same fate. To be misrepresented, to have facts distorted, situations enlarged or minimized for selfish, malicious, or misguided purposes, is doubtless the price paid by those who occupy positions of trust. I have long since made it a rule to pay little or no attention to criticisms, no matter how unfair or unjust, believing that if one sort of criticism, unjustly applied, required a reply, all criticisms must lead to the same course.

But, Mr. President, the quotation which has just been read was uttered by a Member of this body and published in a newspaper owned and edited by the very individual whom he wished to praise and whose publications regarding myself have for many years been directed toward misrepresenting my position upon public questions, criticizing my course in public affairs, and which have been intended to destroy my usefulness as a public servant.

I feel that this is an unusual situation and that my duty, as much to myself as to the people whom the Senator addressed, who have honored me with unopposed election to the House of Representatives for 18 years, and who have helped so materially to promote me to my present position as a Member of this body, demands this course. The men to whom the Senator addressed himself are my friends and neighbors, one and all. They have known me from early childhood. A large portion of them are related to me by either blood or marriage. Their faith and trust in me have been abundantly proven, and the good name which I have built up among them for truth and loyalty to their interests is possibly the only thing in which I have grown richer with the years of my service in Congress.

These statements made by the Senator are at utter variance with what I have told them. If the Senator's statements be correct, then I am placed in the attitude of having been both deceitful and disloyal toward them in return for confidence and faith reposed in me by them. I can not remain silent without at the same time occupying a position of embarrassment and humiliation; but more, I can not remain silent without permitting them to be deceived as to those inimical and antagonistic to their dominant interest.

My relations with my colleague [Senator RANSDELL], covering a long association in the other branch of Congress, have been such that I regret beyond the possibility of expression that I am compelled to take issue with him upon any question anywhere, and more especially in this Chamber. From the bottom of my heart I wish some other course were open to me or that a commanding duty both to myself and to the people of Louisiana permitted me to remain silent.

My colleague recently returned from a tour of campaigning in Louisiana. So far as the papers have advised me, his efforts were addressed to the voters of the third congressional district of that State, the district I had for a long time the honor to represent in the House before becoming a Member of this body. About the time of his return the New Orleans States, an evening publication of the city of New Orleans, owned and edited by Robert Ewing, Louisiana Democratic national committeeman, reached me, containing a summary of the accounts of two meetings addressed by the Senator which I have just read.

I did not believe that the statements could be made by the Senator, and therefore withheld comment on them until I should, in justice to him, verify their correctness. At the first opportunity I submitted the newspaper account of the speeches to the Senator, requesting him to read it, and to inform me whether he was correctly reported. He informed me that he had read the statements and that he was correctly reported. True, that night he telephoned me to say that after rereading the report of his statements at Lafayette and Franklin in the Daily States he had found that he had been incorrectly quoted in two minor instances. I replied that his statements as reported were unwarranted and unjust, and I repeated to him my statement of the morning that it was my purpose to refute them in justice to myself, and as a warning to those who had read them; that these statements had received large circulation, and that his correcting any part of them to me over the telephone did not correct the evil of which I complained with regard to them, and could not remedy the evil unless given the same publicity which the statements themselves had received. I have waited a reasonable time to make this statement on the floor of the Senate, in order that proper correction might be made by the Senator. No such correction has been made, but on the contrary the offense is aggravated by the publication, in the same paper, of a stenographic report of the Senator's speech at Thibodaux, in which, substantially, the Senator repeats these statements. I have therefore concluded that I could not abstain longer from correcting the impression which these statements have made upon the people whose attention has been called to them by their publication.

This explains the necessity for my trespass upon the time and the patience of the Senate in order that I might discuss the verity of the statements.

I need not state to my colleagues on this floor that in a public service of 19 years in Congress I have left behind me in Louisiana my fair share of political enemies. All of us, doubtless, have accumulated these in any course of long service, and many of us are rather proud of our accomplishments in that direction. I can truthfully say that the crop which I have raised during my service gives me little concern on the one hand and, on the other, at times it is helpful. When these enemies can all be located, acting in unison upon a given question, I find little difficulty in determining the course that I should pursue.

Now, we all know that this has been an exceptionally important session of Congress. There has not been a day when anyone could foresee what the next day would bring forth. The President himself used a similar expression even long before the German controversy became acute, and before it became necessary for us to exert the arm of the military to protect American lives on American territory on the Mexican border.

I shall not now speak of the many vitally important matters to Louisiana that are pending at one or the other end of this Capitol. I need but say that as a member of the Military Affairs Committee in its efforts to reorganize the Army and to prepare for our country's defense, I have not found it possible to absent myself from the Capital at any time since the convening of Congress. My political enemies, great tacticians in the art of political maneuvers, have not been slow to take advantage of this situation. Claiming, on the one hand, an overwhelming victory for the Democratic ticket, persistent efforts have been made by them to compel me to abandon my duties here in order to take part in the pending campaign. The quoted statements from the Senator's speeches in my old district are, in my judgment, part of this plan. A simple quotation from the Senator's speech at Lafayette will describe the claims being made for the ticket:

"I believe that this is a Democratic audience and will agree with me.
"Put the crowd to a vote," said a man in the audience.
"That would be unnecessary, my friend," the Senator replied quickly. "We had an election in Louisiana on January 25, and out of a possible 142,000 voters 114,000 declared this State to be Democratic. And I know that most of those 114,000 men are honorable. They will not repudiate the Democratic Party after having participated in its primaries. I have been running for office nearly all of my life, and I know that honesty is the best policy in politics as it is in business."

I have courteously declined to leave my duties here to join in speech making in Louisiana during these critical days to our Nation; and, notwithstanding this overwhelming estimate of the Senator's, I find my enemies busy by every device to harass and embarrass me in this attitude. I have discussed this situation with the Senators who have control of this legislation in the Senate and who are aware of the work in which I am engaged, and they have urged me to remain here. Assuming, as I must, that my duty to myself and to the people of Louisiana require that I take cognizance of the Senator's statements, and realizing my inability to go to Louisiana to refute them, I see no way of correcting them other than in the manner I am pursuing.

Let us analyze the Senator's statements. At Lafayette the Senator said:

I had previously arranged an interview with the President for Senator BROUSSARD and myself. That interview lasted 15 minutes—15 minutes was all the time that we, the Louisiana Senators, could obtain to state our case to the President.

That statement is not true.

In the first place the instance to which the Senator refers occurred in the first part of April, 1913. At that time I was not Senator, but I was a Member of the House of Representatives, representing the people of the very district the Senator was addressing.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to his colleague?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to ask the Senator if I did not tell him on the night of the 21st instant, when I spoke to him, that I had read that interview very hastily on the train in Louisiana, and when I read it over carefully after he spoke to me on the floor of the Senate I noticed that it stated there had been an interview between the President, himself, and myself, and that this statement was an error; that the interview referred to had been between the President, ex-Senator Foster, and myself? Did I not explain that to the Senator?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. RANSDELL. That is my question.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senator did say that; and I called the attention of the Senator at the time to the fact that he could not go into Louisiana and secure the publication throughout the State of a statement that was not correct, and then correct it at night over the telephone to me; that he had to give the correction the same publicity that his statement had been given in the State of Louisiana through the papers that quoted him.

I wanted to be fair to the Senator. I submitted this statement to him, and asked him to read it and to correct it before I took any position; and the Senator glanced at it, said he had read it, and that he was correctly reported.

Mr. RANSDELL. That occurred on the floor of the Senate, did it not, when I was quite busy? That afternoon I read it carefully and called my colleague's attention to the fact that it contained misstatements in two particulars.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Oh, well, yes; it occurred upon the floor of the Senate; but I had gone to the Senator and told him that I intended to refute these statements in some way unless he told me that he was not correctly reported.

Mr. RANSDELL. Now I wish to ask the Senator——

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not want to engage in any controversy at this time.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not going to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana further yield to his colleague?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do. I want to give the Senator every opportunity. I have given him that opportunity and waited a week to see the publication, because any correction that the Senator might have made had to be sent to New Orleans, and then the paper had to be published and come back here. I have waited ample time for the Senator to correct not only this unimportant thing, but the important parts of this statement, which do me an injustice and do the people of the State an injustice,

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish again to ask the Senator if I did not specifically say to him that night—the 21st instant—that the reported interview was incorrect in using his name when it should have used ex-Senator Foster's name; and if I did not tell him that I had not had any interview with him in connection with President Wilson, when only 15 minutes' time was given us, but the interview I referred to was between ex-Senator Foster, the President, and myself, when we were given 15 minutes? I stated that to the Senator, did I not?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Oh, yes, Mr. President; and I called my colleague's attention to the fact that if he made any corrections they should be given the same publicity that the statement had received, since I was being criticized upon this question and I conceived it to be my duty to remain here and attend to the public business.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to ask the Senator if I did not also tell him at the same time that the reported interview quoted me incorrectly in saying that Mr. Ewing had more influence than all the Members of Congress combined?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will reach that point in a moment.

Mr. RANSDELL. That I had said that he had more influence than any other one man?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I want to submit to the Senator whether it is fair for him to go to Louisiana and in a public speech charge that two United States Senators here in Washington and eight Members of the House from that State had less influence than the national committeeman, and then come over at night and telephone me that he was misquoted in that paper, and make no effort to correct the impression that he had left behind in Louisiana? I ask him if he conceives that to be an adequate explanation of being misquoted?

Mr. RANSDELL. Did I not tell the Senator at the same time——

Mr. BROUSSARD. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL (continuing). That the interview from Franklin——

Mr. BROUSSARD. I decline to yield further for a question on that point. I do not deny and I have already stated that the Senator rang me over the telephone and corrected two statements with regard to that publication, and that I informed him that those corrections should be given the same publicity that the statements themselves had received. There is no necessity for having any discussion about that matter. I do not deny that the Senator said that. To the contrary, I said that he admitted having been misquoted, but he declined to pursue the course which I would have pursued if my attention had been called to a misstatement that did injury to anyone.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me——

Mr. BROUSSARD. I decline to yield further upon that point.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is not on that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator decline to yield?

Mr. BROUSSARD. No; I yield if it is on some other point.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator has two interviews before him there, in the same paper, and one of them is from Franklin,

Did I not tell the Senator that the Franklin interview was correct and the one from La Fayette was incorrect?

Mr. BROUSSARD. These are not interviews, Mr. President. They are speeches delivered by the Senator.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will not the Senator state whether I told him that the Franklin notice was correct and the La Fayette one was incorrect?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes; and the Franklin notice is no more correct than the La Fayette one, as I will prove.

Mr. RANSDELL. All right.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Nor had the Senator made any such engagement for me with the President; nor had I gone with him to see the President for 15 minutes or for any other period of time. The Senator should not belittle me, no matter what spirit possessed him to humble himself, that by contrast he might elevate the national committeeman, Robert Ewing, in the eyes of the audience which he was addressing.

At La Fayette the Senator said:

"Just before the Underwood tariff bill went to the Senate, the President called Senator BROUSSARD, Mr. Ewing, and myself into conference. We three pleaded with the President for a three-year extension of the tariff, but could not move him. Senator BROUSSARD and myself left, and Mr. Ewing remained behind with the President. The next day the tariff bill came out with the three-years' clause. I think it an act of justice to say that but for the efforts of Robert Ewing, the man who has been most maligned in this gubernational campaign, sugar to-day would be on the free list."

This statement, like the one first quoted, is also untrue. The bill was pending at the time before the Ways and Means Committee and the report of that committee was not to the Senate but to the House, nor was its report made "the next day." The visit to the President referred to by the Senator was on April 5, 1913. The report of the Ways and Means Committee was made to the House on April 21, or 16 days later than the Senator says. Nor did Senator Thornton, the colleague of Senator RANSDELL, visit the President that day or any other day with Senator RANSDELL, or alone or with anyone else. To substantiate this statement I quote Senator Thornton's testimony to the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee, page 967—speaking of the alleged visit of the Louisiana Senators to see the President:

Senator THORNTON. Pardon me, Mr. Chairman, you said that the Senators had been to see him—I have never seen Mr. Wilson on the subject.

There were many men from Louisiana in conference with us at that time—men engaged in the cultivation of sugar cane and in the manufacture of sugar. At a conference on the day to which the Senator refers it was decided that the Senator and the national committeeman should seek an audience with the President and present additional matters for his consideration, with a view of avoiding the pending ruin of our leading industry. Senator Thornton was in Louisiana and did not attend the conference. The appointment for them was made with the President for 8 o'clock that evening. Tired and worried over the arduous work which we were doing, as soon as the conference dispersed I repaired to my office in the House Office Building. Finding my secretary absent and with a view of eating dinner quietly, I went to the Powhatan Hotel, and there my secretary found me and informed me that the President had several times telephoned for me, saying that he wanted to see me at once. At the Powhatan I had met the Senator and the national committeeman, who had invited me to dine with them. My secretary and I repaired at once to the telephone, and he immediately secured connection with the President in person. Upon taking the phone the President informed me that he had been trying to reach me since 4 o'clock, and that he wanted to see me as soon as possible. I told him that I understood he had an appointment with the Senator and the national committeeman for 8 o'clock; that it was then 7 o'clock; that I was not only very tired but extremely hungry, as I had not eaten anything since early morning. I closed by saying that if agreeable to him I would eat my dinner, which had already been ordered, and would call in company with the Senator and the national committeeman. Together we three reached the President's office at 8 o'clock, and he was awaiting us. We discussed the matter in hand quite at length. I do not care to, nor is it necessary that I should at this time, relate any of the particulars of our discussion. At 50 minutes after 8, the President remarked the hour and said that he had an appointment with Congressman UNDERWOOD, then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, for 9 o'clock, and as he arose we also arose and moved toward the door.

The President not having had the opportunity to speak to me about the matter which he had in mind, and about which he had been telephoning me since 4 o'clock, came up to me and requested me to remain a moment; and while the Senator and the national committeeman moved out of the room and downstairs I remained to talk over with the President the matter about which he was anxious to see me. This will explain why it was I, and not the national committeeman, who was requested to remain to speak with the President when the conference was ended. It must have been 9 o'clock when the President and I parted and I went downstairs to join the Senator and the national committeeman. And as we walked out of the front door of the White House we met and stopped and shook hands with Congressman UNDERWOOD on his way to keep his appointment with the President. It is not true, therefore, that "the President called Senator BROUSSARD, Mr. Ewing, and myself [the Senator] into conference." Nor had Mr. Ewing remained to talk with the President while the Senator and I moved away, as the Senator says. It was I who remained to speak with the President of the matter which he had in mind and about which he had telephoned me. I have a most distinct and vivid recollection of the fact, as I have of every fact that transpired at that conference. The President had not had the opportunity to speak to me until the other two had left the room, and it was for that reason that he detained me and permitted the Senator and the national committeeman to withdraw from his presence. This was the last visit which I have had the honor to pay the President, and I can not be mistaken with regard to the circumstances I relate. If, therefore, the Senator means to convey the idea—as his language indicates—that in some mysterious way the national committeeman had whispered the word to the President which he and I had not heard, which caused the President to change his attitude on this question after our failure in a 50 minutes' discussion to convince him, it is evident that he draws his facts from his imagination.

But this is not all the evidence on the subject. After the conference we joined the delegation in order to enable the Senator and the national committeeman to report the result of the conference with the President. I was present when the report was made and no such report was made indicating in the slightest manner what the Senator now says had transpired at the White House. The gloom that settled on the assembly well depicted the nature of the report. I recall distinctly the ominous silence that prevailed like a pall on every hand. The despair of some of the people who were present, since to them it meant bankruptcy and utter ruin. Each could see the dire disaster that would follow the making of sugar immediately free. Those who felt that they might survive saw in their mind's eye their neighbors and friends driven to destitution. All realized that a catastrophe was imminent from which none would escape—neither rich nor poor, neither white nor black, neither young nor old, nor men nor women. No one of us entertained any hopes of anything but immediate free sugar, as the result of the report of that interview had by the Senator and the national committeeman with the President, which I had, as by accident, attended. Is it possible that while this scene was presented to the eyes of Robert Ewing, that he had securely locked in his bosom the assurance that there would not be free sugar for three years? If so, as the Senator would have us believe, then Robert Ewing paints himself a far worse man than I believe him to be. And when did the Senator first acquire the knowledge which he so flippantly imparts to an astonished people, after so long a lapse of time? I am curious to know, as that would prove the most important part of his revelations.

The newspaper accounts of that date bear out my statement as to the report made by the Senator and the national committeeman.

The Daily Picayune, of New Orleans, of April 6, 1913, contains this report:

WASHINGTON, April 5.

"President Wilson's proffered compromise on sugar, which should mean a 1-cent-a-pound duty for three years and then free sugar, was rejected to-night by Senator RANSDELL, Representative BROUSSARD, and Robert Ewing, Democratic national committeeman from Louisiana.

The Louisianians to-night carried to the White House a strong protest against free sugar adopted to-day at a meeting in New Orleans of the American Cane Growers' Association.

Deadlocked with the White House and standing fast for protection of sugar.

That was the situation late to-night in the Louisiana congressional delegation, who have not budged 1 inch from their original position that sugar must be adequately protected, and who have rejected to date President Wilson's ultimatum that a duty of only 1 cent per pound be placed on sugar, with the commodity free in three years, or the alternative of a free-sugar bill.

The situation to-day was practically the same as yesterday. The Louisiana Congressmen, and the other Louisianians here to fight to preserve destruction of the great industry, held two conferences—one at noon and the other late this evening. It was unanimously decided that it would be impossible to accept a 1-cent-per-pound duty, with free sugar in three years, and the delegation decided to stand pat and let President Wilson do his worst and carry out his implied threat to have the Ways and Means Committee bring in a free bill unless the 1-cent duty was accepted.

Telegrams from Louisiana sugar interests, principally from New Orleans, arrived in an avalanche to-day addressed to members of the delegation, saying that the 1-cent compromise, with free sugar in three years, was not wanted, and would not be acceptable.

The stumbling block is over the three-years' free-sugar schedule. 'Louisiana cane interests would accept a 1-cent net duty, but not free sugar in three years,' said the telegram."

* * * * * * *

"Mr. BROUSSARD explained to Mr. Wilson the Canadian sugar tariff, whereby for every ton produced in Canada 2 tons are admitted duty free. Mr. BROUSSARD suggested that a modification of this plan—one free ton for every domestic protected ton produced—might solve the problem. It was a new idea to Mr. Wilson, but the President intimated that it was now too late to adopt anything new.

Mr. Ewing told the President that a compromise might be effected so that a 1-cent duty could be placed on sugar, and it could be arranged that free sugar in three years be left discretionary with the President at the end of that time and not mandatory by act of Congress.

This did not strike Mr. Wilson favorably, but he said he would consider it. He listened attentively to the arguments, but his attitude, as it has always been, was noncommittal. The delegation got the impression, however, that Mr. Wilson intends to insist on his program.

Chairman UNDERWOOD, of the House Ways and Means Committee, reached the White House just after the Louisianians left. He brought a copy of the completed tariff bill for the President's final approval. Mr. UNDERWOOD discussed the proposed sugar compromise briefly with the President, but it was understood that no changes were made in the bill as it left the Ways and Means Committee to-day. It was carried to the Government Printing Office to-night by Mr. UNDERWOOD himself, and he expects to have it in readiness for consideration of the majority members of the Senate Finance Committee which will meet late to-morrow."

The Times-Democrat, of New Orleans, of the same date, contains this report:

WASHINGTON, April 5.

"President Wilson's proffered compromise on sugar, which would mean a 1-cent-pound duty for three years and then free sugar was rejected to-night by Senator RANSDELL, Representative BROUSSARD, and Robert Ewing, Democratic national committeeman from Louisiana. The Louisianians to-night carried to the White House a strong protest against free sugar adopted to-day at a meeting in New Orleans of the American Cane Growers' Association.

They predicted the ruin of the industry if the President persisted in his determination to eliminate all duty from sugar. They offered as a compromise the suggestion to the President that he indorse a 1-cent duty on sugar for three years, with the provision that sugar be made duty free at the end of that period if, in the President's opinion, it at that time was advisable. They pointed out to the President that such a proviso would enable him to investigate the claim that a great industry would be ruined by the removal of duty, and told him that he would be able to insist just as strongly upon free sugar then, if he saw fit, as he is doing now.

Although the delegation was in conference with the President for more than an hour, he gave no intimation as to whether he would consider their offer of a compromise.

Chairman UNDERWOOD, of the House Ways and Means Committee, reached the White House just after the Louisianians left. He brought a copy of the completed tariff bill for the President's final approval. Mr. UNDERWOOD discussed the proposed sugar compromise briefly with the President, but it was understood that no changes were made in the bill as it left the Ways and Means Committee to-day."

It is apparent from these reports that the Underwood bill having embodied a provision for free sugar, the President at no time, as reported to the delegation by the Senator and the national committeeman, wavered one instant or intimated in any way that he had in the least changed his determination to support the free-sugar clause. On the contrary, these reports bear me out that the President insisted on his position, and they may be accepted as conclusive proof that the President did not make any such promise to Robert Ewing as the Senator states.

At La Fayette the Senator said:

But I knew that Robert Ewing, the greatest Wilson man in Louisiana before the Democratic nomination convention, the leader of the Wilson forces in Louisiana after the convention—

And so forth.

From this statement it is evident that the Senator is as unfamiliar with what transpired at Baton Rouge on June 4, 1912, as his memory plays him false with regard to what transpired in Washington preceding the report by the Ways and Means Committee on the Underwood bill. True, the newspapers of the national committeeman had been supporting the candidacy of Gov. Wilson.

Before the State convention met an understanding was reached among the contending factions in Louisiana regarding both the personnel of the delegation to be sent to Baltimore and the adoption of the unit rule, which was inimical to the candidacy of Gov. Wilson. Robert Ewing was a party and a beneficiary of this political deal. I was in Washington, as were the other members of the delegation, including the Senator. Upon being apprised of the situation I repaired in great haste to Baton Rouge. I reached that city on the day prior to the meeting of the convention. I found that the entire delegation had already been selected in private conference, the two factions of the party in Louisiana having combined in the support of the candidacy of Speaker CLARK. The national committeeman's paper, the Daily States, in its edition of 2.30 p. m., June 4, 1912, contained a list of these delegates. The convention itself did not meet until 8 o'clock the same evening. Following this list, among other things, appears this item of news:

The meeting will be called to order by Thomas H. Lewis, chairman of the Democratic State central committee, and the temporary chairman, who will be made the permanent chairman, is L. E. Moss, of Lake Charles. Blanchard, Barrett, and Thomas were all eliminated in the interest of harmony. All this, barring the battle engineered by ROBERT F. BROUSSARD and F. C. Claiborne, planned last night and this morning at the last moment of the situation, does not indicate that the battle will develop into anything serious.

The national committeeman's paper carried, straight across the front page of that edition of the paper in large type, "The delegates stand 13 to 7 for Clark." And in large type, after naming those who would be delegates, giving to each his designation for Wilson or Clark, as the case might be, there appears the following paragraph:

It is practically agreed that the unit rule shall be adopted, that Gov. Hall will be the chairman of the delegation, and that the conference to decide upon the action in Baltimore shall be taken after the arrival of the delegation.

The other evening paper, the New Orleans Item, in the edition that reached Baton Rouge just prior to the convening of the convention, which was at 8 o'clock at night, carried across the page similarly as the States had carried it the following:

"Our delegation 14 to 6 for CLARK, and will vote as a unit."

This paper was supporting Speaker CLARK and gave him one more vote than the national committeeman's paper, supporting Wilson, conceded to the Speaker.

Speaking of Robert Ewing, the Item of that issue says:

"His papers indicate that he is forgetting a good deal about Wilson, and his activities here indicate that he is thinking deeply about Ewing."

That was the correct attitude of the national committeeman that day.

Now, no sooner had the convention convened, and before the temporary chairman had concluded his address, as I walked into the hall the delegates called for me. In a storm and uproar I was carried to the speaker's platform, the convention being held in the hall of the house of representatives. I spoke briefly against Speaker CLARK and the delegation's instruction to vote as a unit. As I concluded calls were made for Congressman Wickliffe, who had reached Baton Rouge shortly after my arrival there, and who was a supporter of Speaker CLARK. He spoke in the Speaker's behalf and for an instructed delegation to Baltimore. The delegates continued the uproar, demanding that I reply to Congressman Wickliffe, which I did in an address of not exceeding five minutes. The convention got down to work. The delegates were selected as secretly planned and then a motion was made to instruct the delegation to vote as a unit, which was the other part of the same plan agreed upon by the factions. The success of this motion necessarily would have given the majority of the delegation the right to vote the minority, and as Speaker CLARK was conceded to have a majority of the delegation, clearly the entire Louisiana vote would have been cast for the Speaker on the first ballot and permanently thereafter. Instead he received 12 votes to Gov. Wilson's 8 on the first ballot, reduced to 2 to Gov. Wilson's 18 on the last and many previous ballots.

The motion was promptly made to table the resolution of instruction. A roll call was demanded and carried. Upon the roll being called the tenth ward of New Orleans voted for the unit rule. Robert Ewing, said by the Senator to have been the leader of the Wilson forces in Louisiana, is the boss of that ward. In fact, he is much better known as boss of the tenth ward than as either national committeeman or newspaper man. He knew full well that the success of his vote meant a unanimous Clark delegation, yet he cast it in betrayal of the candidacy of Gov. Wilson, whose leader the Senator tells us he was. The resolution was nevertheless tabled and the fight I led for an uninstructed delegation triumphed. Thus it was that through the efforts of the Wilson forces, of which I had been the spokesman on the floor of the convention, Robert Ewing was saved from himself, and his vote preserved for Gov. Wilson even over his own protest.

But, Mr. President, how could the Senator know what was going on in Baton Rouge when these stirring events were transpiring? He was here at the Capitol, busy sending telegrams to Baton Rouge, urging the convention to come to the support of Speaker CLARK. He was ignorant of the movement which Wilson's friends, including myself, were engineering to save for Gov. Wilson the few votes which had been secretly allotted us by the national committeeman and his allies in the State in apportioning the delegation. The national committeeman was looking to his own candidacies. He was busy with more important things. He was looking to his trade for two positions for himself. We have already seen how he got one of these; and here is how he got the other:

The Times-Picayune, Sunday, March 12, 1916, says:

"John M. Parker, in a recent speech, charged Robert Ewing with having broken faith with the men who secured Mr. Ewing's reelection as Democratic national committeeman from Louisiana in 1912. He asserted that Mr. Ewing was made national committeeman by Gov. Hall at the request of a number of reform leaders, particularly Daniel D. Moore, editor of the Times-Democrat, and that after obtaining the office Mr. Ewing broke his solemn promise to these men to stand by the cause of reform, to fight the "ring," and to support the Hall administration.

Mr. Ewing, in his newspaper a day or two later, vigorously denied both propositions and asserted that his election was due to his great popularity and strength with the Democrats of the State.

Mr. Ewing is the storm center of the present State campaign. The political power, which he gained in large measure through the very maneuver in question, has made him a campaign issue. It therefore is considered fitting that a statement should be made at this time of the circumstances which led up to Mr. Ewing's election and of his subsequent actions. This narrative is based upon the statements of the men involved. The recollections of these men are agreed as to the details. Only Mr. Ewing's newspaper has a different version.

It will be recalled that Mr. Ewing broke with the city organization over the candidacy of John T. Michel for governor and supported Dr. James B. Aswell. Realizing that Michel's election meant his own elimination as a political factor, Mr. Ewing promptly declared for Judge Luther E. Hall, the Good Government League candidate, on the elimination of Dr. Aswell in the first primary. He later induced Dr. Aswell to follow him.

Through his newspapers and individually he announced his intention of supporting the Hall administration. The league faction in the tenth ward responded by giving their support to Mr. Ewing's candidates for the House and Senate in that ward. When this took place the Michel candidates withdrew.

The primary over, Mr. Ewing reached out for the Hall people, with the reelection of himself as national committeeman in view. He was a frequent visitor to the office of J. Zach Spearing, who, as chairman of the league's State campaign committee, naturally became one of the principal advisers to the governor-elect. Through Mr. Spearing Mr. Ewing reached a number of influential Hall supporters. He then let his candidacy become known.

Mr. Ewing's candidacy was received with favor among reform leaders. Judge Hall felt kindly because of the part Mr. Ewing had taken in breaking up the agreement of Dr. Aswell to support John T. Michel after the first primary. Among reform leaders in New Orleans, Col. Ewing was regarded as a valuable asset because of his knowledge of the inner secrets of the "ring," and the fact that Ewing's desertion would leave the "ring" without aggressive newspaper support in the city. The country leaders of reform were somewhat divided. Some doubted Ewing and others thought it good politics to reelect him national committeeman and keep him in line with the reform cause.

MADE NO INDORSEMENTS.

The editor of The Times-Democrat had refrained from indorsing anyone for appointment or election to any office after the primary. He desired to leave the new governor free to act on his own judgment, and personally to keep out of politics.

He was approached during this period by Mr. Ewing, who rehearsed his fight with the "ring" and declared he had burned the bridges behind him. He said he wanted to get out of local politics and intended to give up the leadership of the tenth ward and devote his entire time to his newspapers. He added, however, that he would be glad to cooperate with the Good Government League and intended to support the administration of Gov. Hall. He said most emphatically that under no circumstances would he go back to the organization and to Behrman. Then he asked Mr. Moore to use his influence with the governor in behalf of his candidacy for national committeeman.

To Mr. Spearing Mr. Ewing made very similar assurances. He said he would support the Hall administration and its measures. He made the reservation that he could not support the league in the city fight without a reorganization of its committees, but was specific and emphatic in his declaration that he would not support Mr. Behrman nor go back with the "ring."

RELIED UPON ASSURANCES.

On these assurances that he would support the governor and oppose the "ring," and on the urgent request of Mr. Ewing, the editor of the Times-Picayune called on Gov. Hall the day following the inauguration and urged that the executive give his support to Mr. Ewing.

The preceding day Mr. Ewing attended the inauguration of Gov. Hall and had given every evidence of being an enthusiastic supporter of the new administration.

The governor was much impressed; Mr. Moore and Mr. Spearing were convinced.

On the governor's decision the matter rested. With the governor's indorsement Mr. Ewing's election was assured. With the governor opposed, his election would have been impossible. Great bitterness still existed between Mr. Ewing and the city organization. Many country leaders still distrusted Mr. Ewing and viewed him merely as a boss temporarily at outs with his fellows. Except his own tenth ward delegation, Mr. Ewing had few friends in the State convention.

While inclined to be friendly with the tenth ward leader, Gov. Hall had remained noncommittal until the editor of the Times-Democrat made strong representations. Mr. Moore was of the opinion that Mr. Ewing should be reelected because of his fight against the machine and his promise to continue that fight. Mr. Moore believed Ewing sincere in his assurances for the future, and that depriving the "ring" of Ewing and the States in the city fight would create a highly favorable situation for reform. And he thought, moreover, that Mr. Ewing would in the end actively support the league ticket.

YIELDS TO REQUEST.

The governor yielded to the request of Mr. Moore. As he has said on numerous occasions since: "The Times-Democrat was one of the chief instrumentalities in my election. I counted on its support for my policies. I had confidence in the judgment of its editors, and felt that if they considered Mr. Ewing's election desirable as a means toward the success of their fight against the machine they knew what they were doing."

In this shape events moved up to the week of the convention. In the meantime, Mr. Ewing and the States had declared for Woodrow Wilson for the Democratic nomination. Gov. Hall favored CHAMP CLARK. By the Saturday before the convention the fight for the Louisiana delegation had become rather lively.

As the head of the Orleans group in the convention, Mayor Behrman called on Gov. Hall and suggested a working agreement. The mayor and all the Orleans leaders except Mr. Ewing were for CHAMP CLARK. The mayor suggested that the city was entitled to name three of the six delegates at large, provided, of course, the names suggested were not objectionable to the governor and his friends. The governor answered that he thought the proposal fair.

Word of this agreement reached the ears of Mr. Ewing. He wished to be one of the delegates at large, but did not want to put himself under obligations to Mayor Behrman. So he made a direct appeal to Gov. Hall explaining the situation. He asked the governor to suggest his name as one of the city's three.

The governor called on the mayor and asked the mayor to include Mr. Ewing as one of the three delegates at large to be named from the city. The mayor readily agreed, although he added: "We don't like and have no use for Ewing."

WAS DISQUIETING.

The situation, however, was disquieting to Mr. Ewing. The convention was for June 4. On June 1 Mr. Ewing went to the editor of the Times-Democrat much exercised over reports to the effect that he could not count on the support of the governor in the nomination. In the presence of Thomas G. Rapier, then general manager of the Picayune, Mr. Ewing urged Mr. Moore to go to Baton Rouge the following day (Sunday) again to urge the governor to support him for national committeeman.

Mr. Moore replied it was impossible for him to go, and in the light of his previous understanding with Gov. Hall he considered it unnecessary. But Mr. Ewing was so insistent that finally Mr. Moore agreed to send Norman Walker, associate editor of the Times-Democrat, to Baton Rouge to see the governor. Further, at the urgent request of Mr. Ewing, Mr. Moore agreed to call Gov. Hall by telephone Sunday morning and to inform him that Mr. Walker was on his way to see him on an important matter and that Mr. Walker spoke for Mr. Moore.

Mr. Walker saw Gov. Hall, and the governor again gave his assurances that he would support Mr. Ewing. The same day Mr. Moore left the State for a month's vacation, taken on advice of his physician.

The opposition to Ewing had not died, however. Ferd C. Claiborne and some other independent Democrats who refused to believe in Mr. Ewing's good faith threatened to fight anyway and attempted to organize an anti-Ewing movement among the convention delegates. The governor had to step in to placate these insurgents.

PROGRAM WENT THROUGH.

Except for a fight between the Clark and Wilson followers, in which the governor had friends on both sides, the chief executive's program went through the convention without a hitch. Mr. Ewing was elected national committeeman and a delegate to the Baltimore convention.

The next day, or possibly the second day thereafter, Mr. Ewing's paper, the States, made its first attack on Gov. Hall in an article which said the governor had been whipped in the convention.

Mr. Ewing went to the national convention; then to Sea Girt; and then to Chicago. He returned to New Orleans shortly before the city fight. Mr. Moore, absent from June 2 until the beginning of July, had not heard from him during this period. On Mr. Ewing's return Mr. Moore, Mr. Caffery, and others of the Good Government League made several unsuccessful attempts to see him.

But Mr. Ewing, already cool toward the governor, went the rest of the route and again combined with Mayor Behrman and the "ring."

His statements about Mayor Behrman were forgotten, as were his aims to get out of local politics. His definite promises to fight the "ring" and use his paper for better influences in politics were treated as unmade. The old harmony in machine ranks was restored with Ewing on top, the master of the situation. He had taught the other bosses a lesson, and they were prepared to obey."

Continuing the last-quoted sentence, in order to accentuate the influence exercised by Robert Ewing, the Senator says:

A member of the Wilson campaign committee of 15.

Yes; and it was in that capacity that Robert Ewing permitted the hireling of the Sugar Trust, F. C. Lowry, to insert in the Democratic Campaign Textbook a vicious attack upon the leading industry of his own State. It is for this, perhaps, that the Senator says that the sugar planters of the third congressional district are under "a debt of eternal gratitude to Robert Ewing." This Lowry textbook attack upon the domestic sugar industry was a palpable violation of the declaration of the Democratic platform, which has for its first declaration, among others, the following paragraph:

We recognize that our system of tariff taxation is intimately connected with the business of the country, and we favor the ultimate attainment of the principles we advocate by legislation that will not injure or destroy legitimate industry.

Now, Robert Ewing knew, as I told members of the Louisiana delegation and every delegate in the convention who took an interest in the matter, how this plank had been drafted. He knew how it had been drawn and who had drawn it. He knew I had brought the draft to Baltimore from Sea Girt, N. J. He knew that provision of the platform was intended specially to permit the domestic sugar industry to survive the proposed tariff reduction for which the plank declared. He knew these things, because I told them to him, and yet he permitted the one man in the country whom everybody knew was hired by the Sugar Trust to commit the Democratic Party to a policy in direct contravention to its platform declaration.

As a sample of the insert to which I have just referred, contained on pages 149, 150, 151, 152, and 153 in the Democratic

Textbook of 1912, I will quote a few excerpts pertinent to the Louisiana sugar industry:

The total cost to the American consumer annually by reason of the duty is $125,675,000. Of this, $52,300,000 goes to the Government in revenue; the balance goes into the pockets of the tariff-favored sugar interests of Hawaii, Porto Rico, the Philippines, Cuba, Louisiana planters, and promoters of beet-sugar factories as a bounty from the Government.

* * * * * * *

As only $52,300,000 is collected in revenue, the question naturally arises as to what becomes of the balance of $73,450,000 that the American people are called upon to pay. The answer is that it goes into the pockets of the tariff-favored interests of Louisiana, etc.

* * * * * * *

So far as the domestic interests are concerned, the profits go directly into the pockets of certain planters and the promoters of the beet-sugar plants. They are not divided with labor, for Louisiana pays lower wages than Cuba, etc.

* * * * * * *

Hence it is apparent that all of the profit derived from the tariff operates as a bounty not to the farmers or laborers, but to the promoters of the domestic beet factories and the various planters of our tariff-favored sections.

* * * * * * *

No one pretends that the American people are being taxed $125,000,000 annually so as to enrich the sugar planters of our insular possessions; therefore the present tariff is being maintained for the sole benefit of the domestic beet and cane sugar producers.

* * * * * * *

After receiving subsidies both through direct bounties and indirectly through the tariff for over 100 years, the sugar industry of Louisiana, if it can not stand alone, has no further claim upon the American people. It is absurd to ask the Government to continue to tax consumers through the tariff $125,000,000 annually so that Louisiana may produce a crop the yearly value of which is about $25,000,000. We should look to industries that could be of service to the American people and not to industries that the American people must serve.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HARDWICK. May I interrupt the Senator? The Senator has made one statement which, in justice to the gentleman to whom he referred, he ought to correct.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Have I made a mistake in saying that Mr. Lowry represented the Sugar Trust?

Mr. HARDWICK. He never did in his life. He never was allied with the Sugar Trust. The Sugar Trust is the American Sugar Refinery. The Senator knows that.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is commonly known in this country that the Federal Sugar Refining Co. is not the Sugar Trust, but the largest of the independent refiners, who compete with the Sugar Trust.

Mr. BROUSSARD. They are all in combination. The Federal Refining Co. and Havemyer have been acting together to exploit Louisiana and Cuba and all tropical sugar countries. I understand the Senator means that he has investigated that question as chairman of a committee of the House. As he knows, I am familiar with that, too. I believe I helped draft the resolution.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator ought not to say that the Federal is the Sugar Trust, because the Senator knows that the American Sugar Refining Co. is commonly known throughout the country as the Sugar Trust. The Senator further knows that Mr. Lowry never represented that company. I know that he does not and has never represented the trust.

Mr. BROUSSARD. He has represented the interests of that company——

Mr. HARDWICK. Never.

Mr. BROUSSARD. To this extent: He is employed by Spreckels.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is right.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But his activities have been for the last four or five years in behalf of the Spreckels Refining Co. and the common policy of the American Sugar Refinery and all other seaboard refineries in their effort to destroy the domestic sugar industry.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; the Senator is not correct about that. On the contrary, the American Sugar Refining Co. has always favored the sugar duty and the Federal has always been for free sugar.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The testimony of the American Sugar Refining Co. when I was on the Ways and Means Committee was to this effect——

Mr. HARDWICK. No, sir; in that very year I was present in the room during that very time when the president of the American swore he was opposed to free sugar.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will not discuss that.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is right. I just wanted to state the facts.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But, as a matter of fact, when I use the words "Sugar Trust" I refer to all seaboard refineries. They are all in accord on the policy of free sugar, and Lowry is the spokesman for the free-sugar propagandists.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I think what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has stated is true as to the former president of the American Sugar Refining Co.

Mr. HARDWICK. Atkinson?

Mr. SMOOT. Edward T. Atkinson. I do not think that the American Sugar Refining Co. is in favor of a duty upon sugar at present.

Mr. BROUSSARD. They are not.

Mr. SMOOT. But I do know that Mr. Frank Lowry, representing Mr. Spreckels, of the Federal Sugar Refining Co., in his testimony stated he wanted a duty of 50 cents per hundred, and if that rate of duty was in force, with the 20 per cent reduction for Cuban sugar imported, it would virtually destroy the sugar production in America and prevent any other sugar coming from any other part of the world except from Cuba, and it would have placed the refining and the selling and the disposition of all the sugar in the United States in the hands of the few sugar-refining companies.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will state to the Senator that the former president of the American Sugar Refining Co., Mr. Atkinson, was largely interested in sugar estates in Cuba.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. And as such he wanted the duty on sugar, so that he might get the preferential 20 per cent provided by the treaty. He so testified on the occasion to which the Senator referred.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, within 24 hours I have read his testimony, and he said he was for the duty on sugar because of the large interest that his American Sugar Refining Co. owned in the beet-sugar companies.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Of course; and the large planting interest in which he was himself interested.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; that he disposed of.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understand.

Mr. HARDWICK. He used to have them, but he had disposed of them.

Mr. BROUSSARD. But the attitude of the American Sugar Refining Co. to-day, as represented, is for free sugar.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; the Senator is mistaken. I challenge that statement. The trust has always opposed free sugar.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am sure I am correct.

To the constant reader of the Daily States these indictments of the Louisiana sugar industry, quoted from the Democratic textbook, have a familiar ring. What "a debt of eternal gratitude," indeed, these sugar planters owe Robert Ewing, my distinguished colleague. For fear that the statement which I have made, to the effect that F. C. Lowry, Sugar Trust agent, was permitted to insert in the Democratic Textbook of 1912 the matter which I have indicated, and to the end that there may be no misunderstanding as to the exact meaning of the thought which I have in mind, perhaps I had better insert here testimony adduced before the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee, the questions of Senator CUMMINS, of Iowa, and the replies of Lowry. This testimony will be found on page 1577 et seq. of the testimony adduced before the committee. It is as follows:

"Senator CUMMINS. I now show you a pamphlet which has no identification upon it, either in name or date. It is printed in green. I hand it to you and ask whether you did issue that document or whether you are responsible for it or whether you know anything about it.

Mr. LOWRY. The document that you hand me I am responsible for. That is a reprint of this small document which I have just taken from my pocket. That was distributed by the Democratic national campaign committee. I had it printed in a little larger type so as to be easier to read.

Senator CUMMINS. Now, I will take them both. I will have the smaller one marked "Exhibit Lowry No. 35." Referring to this smaller one, Exhibit No. 35, you say that it was circulated by the Democratic campaign committee?

Mr. LOWRY. Yes, sir; that is one of the original ones.

Senator CUMMINS. Who prepared it?

Mr. LOWRY. I prepared a good deal of the matter in it. I practically prepared it all.

Senator CUMMINS. To whom did you send the copy?

Mr. LOWRY. I was asked to go up to the Democratic headquarters in New York, and I had a talk with the gentleman who is now Secretary of the Navy, Secretary Daniels, and he suggested that I prepare for them something of that kind. I did so and sent the material up there and they went ahead and printed them and sent them out.

Senator CUMMINS. Who asked you to go there?

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Marsh, who was associated with them at that time.

Senator CUMMINS. Did you or the Federal Sugar Refining Co. pay for the circulation of the pamphlet, Exhibit Lowry No. 35?

Mr. LOWRY. We did not.

Senator CUMMINS. You do not know to what extent it was circulated?

Mr. LOWRY. I know that Secretary Daniels told me he thought he would get out about a million copies.

Senator CUMMINS. Look over it and find out what part of it, if any, you did not prepare.

Mr. LOWRY. This is practically all of my material. They changed it a little bit.

Senator CUMMINS. In what respect did they change it? I want to know just what you are responsible for.

Mr. LOWRY. I do not remember what changes they made. It was just a word here and there that did not suit them, and they changed it.

Senator CUMMINS. You do not know that they made any changes, do you?

Mr. LOWRY. Yes; I know they made some.

Senator CUMMINS. But you can not point them out?

Mr. LOWRY. No, sir; no material changes."

* * * * * * *

"Senator CUMMINS. I learned for the first time a few moments ago that you prepared the Democratic campaign circular that has already been introduced in evidence. That leads me to ask what you had to do, if anything, with preparing that part of the Democratic textbook of 1912 that relates to sugar?

Mr. LOWRY. This man Marsh, who was connected with the committee, came to me one afternoon and said that he had been commissioned to write up certain parts of the textbook. That was the first time that I had ever heard of a textbook. I did not even know they had one. Sugar was one of those parts, I said, that I had plenty of material, and I gave it to him, and he took it away; and then he came back, I think, the next day and said, "Here is what I have prepared." Some of the things he did not have quite clear, and I revised them, and he took them off, and that was the last I heard of it until it came out in the textbook. It was afterwards that he suggested that I go up and meet Mr. Daniels.

* * * * * * *

Senator CUMMINS. I call your attention to a pamphlet which is headed "Democratic Textbook of 1912," to page 149, and wish you would tell the committee what part of that you prepared and what part you did not.

Mr. LOWRY. I could not tell that. I think a good deal of it was taken directly from those pamphlets. There are a good many mistakes in it, I know that. The printer made a bad job of it.

Senator CUMMINS. What impressed me was a striking similarity between that and some of your literature."

These attacks upon the domestic sugar industry, cunningly inserted at the instigation of F. C. Lowry, the hired agent of the Sugar Trust, quite naturally had the effect of misleading those intrusted with public speaking in behalf of Wilson's campaign for President. The textbook of a party is the ex cathedra declaration of those in full charge of the campaign, and if the speakers were misled by the insertion it is not to be wondered that so much misinformation exists throughout the country regarding the attitude of the Democratic Party on the subject. The textbook of the Democratic Party—indeed, of all parties, for that matter—is intended to be an elaboration of the party platform. So that we find that through the indifference to or forgetfulness of Louisiana by Robert Ewing, as member of the Wilson campaign committee, this man Lowry became the sole interpreter of a plank of the Democratic Party enunciated at Baltimore. I desire to turn from the opinion of Lowry to the action of distinguished Democrats in this Senate in the construction of that paragraph of the Democratic platform. It will be remembered that the first Underwood free sugar bill had passed the House just prior to the convening of the Baltimore convention. About the time of the convention hearings were being held before the Finance Committee of the Senate upon that bill. Before the committee came to a conclusion in its consideration of the bill the Democratic platform was adopted, promulgated, and was well understood throughout the country. Of course its meaning was clear to the Democratic members of the Finance Committee of the Senate.

The report of that committee, consisting of men of distinguished ability, such as Bailey, of Texas; SIMMONS, of North Carolina; STONE, of Missouri; JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, of Mississippi; JOHN W. KERN, of Indiana; and CHARLES F. JOHNSON, of Maine, was signed by all of these distinguished Democrats. Free sugar was repudiated by them, and as a substitute a duty was recommended equivalent practically to the existing sugar duty.

In connection with this report it is but proper that I should quote a paragraph from the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who as the spokesman of the committee upon this report, in addressing the Senate on July 27, 1912, only a few days after the adjournment of the Baltimore convention, used the following language:

The Senator from Massachusetts says that if sugar were placed upon the free list—and by the way there is not the slightest anticipation in the mind of any intelligent man that it will be placed upon the free list, not even if a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House and a Democratic President comes into power—but he says that if sugar is placed upon the free list certain dire results would follow.

* * * * * * *

Mr. President, we are not attempting to put sugar upon the free list at this time. I myself agree that it ought not to be placed there. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts when he says that sugar is one of the best subjects upon which to raise revenue. It has been found so not only in this country but in all other countries, and as a tariff-for-revenue Democrat I would not be willing to surrender it as a subject for raising revenue for the Government. I think a mistake was made when the House proposed to surrender totally the fifty millions now raised in that way.

To this Lowry construction of the Democratic tariff plank in the Baltimore platform by his insertions in the Democratic textbook of 1912 is due all the trouble that subsequently befell the Louisiana sugar men. The Sugar Trust had failed in an open fight to place sugar on the free list, it was now accomplishing its purpose by stealth.

If Robert Ewing, the member of the Wilson campaign committee had been alive to the interests of his adopted State, with the knowledge which he possessed, both of the Baltimore declaration and the attitude of Democratic Senators in their interpretation of that declaration, he could easily have prevented the infliction upon that industry of all the calamity which later overtook it. He, indeed, then would have been entitled to the "eternal gratitude," to use the Senator's words, of the people of the third district. His remissness, his neglect, not to use a harsher word, were directly responsible for his later activities, so touchingly described by the Senator. Ordinary exercise of caution in the confidential position which he held as member of the Wilson campaign committee would have spared many a heartache to the very people whom the Senator was addressing; would have preserved many properties, large and small, that have traveled the course of the bankruptcy courts; would have saved the lives of important citizens in Louisiana, who in despair were driven to seek a suicide's grave.

The Senator said at La Fayette, continuing the same sentence from which I have heretofore quoted, intending to emphasize the great influence of this man:

"Robert Ewing, the personal friend of Postmaster General Burleson, who was one of President Wilson's chief political advisers"—

And so forth.

As in many of the expressions used by the Senator one is led to infer what thought he intends to convey. The inference in this case is palpable, and it is to the effect that Robert Ewing's influence, because he was a personal friend of Postmaster General Burleson, was exerted toward preventing the placing of sugar on the free list. I am perhaps the last man on the floor of this Senate who will say aught against the Postmaster General. I have served long with him in the House and I hold him in the highest esteem. I followed this free sugar contest, as every man knows who is acquainted with the contest, to stave off the disaster which free sugar meant to my State. If Postmaster General Burleson did anything to help in this fight, I am ignorant of it. I will not say that he did not; nay, I will go further, I will say that he did if my distinguished colleague asserts it. Without wishing to bring on a discussion of the Postmaster General, and simply because his name has been invoked by the Senator in his efforts to elevate Robert Ewing in the esteem of Louisiana, let me suggest to the Senator that I have heard it rumored that the effort in the House to put a production or consumption tax on sugar, which received seven votes in that body, met with the approval of the Postmaster General.

But there is pending in this Senate an amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to put a production or consumption tax on sugar equivalent to the rate of duty fixed in the Kitchin bill. This, of course, if successful, would at once stop every sugar factory, not only in Louisiana but in the beet section of the United States, as well as in our island possessions. If there was a thought in the country that Congress would sanction the Hardwick amendment, there is not a man engaged in the cultivation of sugar cane or sugar beets who would not be compelled to cease instantly, in my judgment, in his efforts to produce a crop this year.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to inject myself very much in the Senator's speech. The Senator knows very well, if he knows anything about it, that it was the European war, and that in Louisiana and in the western beet fields and beet-sugar factories and in our island possessions they have made untold profits since the war began.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The trouble, Mr. President, with the Senator from Georgia is that he wants this industry to thrive over the bloody acts being committed in Europe. I do not want to see the war continue.

In what the Senator says he is not exactly correct. If the Senator knew as much as I do about the Louisiana sugar industry, he would know that if he had the best plantation in that State he could not get an advance of a solitary dollar upon his present growing crop in Louisiana if it depended upon the war continuing in Europe to permit the reimbursement of the loan.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, just one question.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Let me finish this. I tell the Senator, if I have related the circumstances correctly, and I know I have, that credit will be cut off the moment his amendment becomes a law or there is knowledge of even the possibility of his proposed amendment becoming a law. How much of a crop will be made next year, even though the war in Europe may continue indefinitely, if the owners of the plantations are without the means of making a crop and advances are declined by the banks, as has been the case since the beginning of the war, up to the time of assurances that free sugar would be repealed——

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will permit me, I will answer that in my judgment a man in Louisiana is doomed and ought to be doomed if the industry can only survive as long as the abnormal condition like the war makes it profitable.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The Senator agrees with me, then?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I do not.

Mr. BROUSSARD. He thinks we ought to make sugar as long as there is war.

Mr. HARDWICK. If you can not make any profit in Louisiana with 2 cents, a protection resulting from the war. You have a protective wall resulting from the war and have not made any profits before the tariff was reduced, and the elimination of 3,000,000 tons of beet sugar from continental Europe is greater than 10 cents duty would be. There is no trouble about that. You have practically no competition from Europe. So if we adopted a consumption tax at once it would not hurt you one penny until normal conditions were restored after the European war.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I shall not pursue that. We shall have ample opportunity to discuss these matters when the bill comes up. I do not agree with my friend from Georgia, however, nor do I believe if he owned the best plantation in the State he could get credit from any bank in this country in the event his amendment were adopted.

Mr. President, since the passage of the Underwood tariff bill, I have kept the fires burning on every hill here in the Capitol, trying to point out to my Democratic colleagues the necessity of abstention from the punishment which that bill would impose upon the people of Louisiana. During all of that time I have had a resolution pending to avert this calamity, first before the House as a Member thereof and now before the Senate as a Member of this body. Time and time again the national committeeman to whom the sugar people of Louisiana, the Senator says, are under "a debt of eternal gratitude," has chided me for this through his newspapers; has called for a stop upon my proceedings, alleging that such a course on my part was intended to embarrass the administration. And yet, Mr. President, I have lived to see the honor conferred upon me by the Democratic leader of the House of Representatives, Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina, of adopting with the change of a single word every word of the resolution which the national committeeman, friend of the Louisiana sugar planters, according to the Senator, has been deploring and denouncing. The change of that word did not detract from the resolution which I have pending in this Senate, and which had been pending in the House, but to the contrary strengthens it and closes the argument so far as this question is concerned.

Looking at these things which I have jotted down as they have occurred to me, it strikes me that if the Louisiana sugar industry has had one persistent and consistent enemy within its own midst, who by acts of commission and omission, has brought more trouble and disaster upon it than any other, it is Robert Ewing.

And now I come to the final statement of the Senator to which I take exception. It is this:

"When I saw that we faced defeat," said the Senator, "in that fight, I suggested to the other opponents of free sugar that we should bring to Washington one man who could do more for the sugar industry than all of the Louisiana delegation combined—that man was Robert Ewing."

Mr. President, I resent that statement. I resent it personally, and I resent it on the part of those of my colleagues in the House who to my knowledge worked so sincerely and faithfully to try and preserve this industry from disaster and ruin. I have no objection to the assumption of that position by the Senator so far as he is himself concerned. I shall not quarrel with the Senator when, in the meekness of his spirit, he forgives or forgets that in derision and contempt Robert Ewing in the Daily States for many years dubbed him "Lumber Joe," because of the Senator's vote for a duty on lumber. That is strictly his personal business. I have this to say, however, if that be the Senator's conviction, it is a matter of wonderment to me that the Senator should continue to hold his seat in this body. With all the influence which this sentence conveys, why does he permit this man of such wonderful influence to remain in Louisiana occupied in the venal pastime of limiting the exercise of his great abilities toward securing political jobs for his henchmen? And right here is where the entire trouble starts. I have stated that the national committeeman was better known in Louisiana as the boss of the tenth ward than by any other appellation. He is the roughest enemy to those who will not do his bidding. Hence his antagonism to me. He is an unusually flattering individual to those who respond to his orders. Nothing is too good to say of those who recognize his claim to the position to which he aspires, that of being the boss of the State, instead of boss of the tenth ward; and nothing is too small for him to say of those who refuse to recognize any boss for the Democratic Party in the State.

In keeping with this policy Robert Ewing has persistently antagonized the Democratic administration of Gov. Hall, in Louisiana, and he has perpetually posed, as the Senator has described him, as the most influential man with the Democratic administration here in Washington. He has claimed the credit for every Federal appointment made in that State. And what sort of appointments have been made there? With few exceptions, those who have been appointed to Federal office had scarcely, when appointed, recovered from the political defeats with which they had met at the hands of the white people of the State. With scarcely an exception, all of them had gone down in overwhelming defeat, and had to be picked up from their place of retirement to take charge of Federal affairs in the State of Louisiana. This has been done over the protest of the right-thinking, independent Democracy of that State. With scarcely an exception, no one else was given recognition. Thus, the policy pursued by Robert Ewing, in attempting to domineer over the destinies of the State Democracy, and to cringe to the national Democracy that jobs might follow fawning, is alike distasteful to the self-respecting element of the Democrats of Louisiana.

Robert Ewing and his kind are but hangnails on the hands of the Louisiana Democracy. Until amputated they will continue to irritate and prevent the performance of those functions of government which will advance the State, for they are blind to this advancement, having an eye solely to the exploitation of public jobs.

If the Senator proposes to align himself with these, it is his business, and I shall offer no criticism of him for such conduct. But I warn him when inspired to praise the grandeur of Robert Ewing my name must be let alone. I have no ambition for comparisons with Robert Ewing, nor do I follow the banner of him or his class. And it might as well be understood now that I shall tolerate no such criticisms as those evidently intended by the remarks of the Senator as reported in the paper of Robert Ewing, the national committeeman from Louisiana.

I can not conclude this explanation, Mr. President, without notice of the fact that former Senator Foster, of Louisiana, is reported in the account of the Franklin meeting to have concurred in the statement made at that place by my colleague.

The former Senator was the chosen leader in the antilottery campaign. In fact, one can not think of the antilottery campaign without at the same time thinking of Senator Foster, Chief Justice White, and Gov. Nichols, the leaders in that fight against a vicious system, as they personified the issue. It was the first political campaign in which I engaged. Our main objective was the dominant necessity of destroying the lottery and the power of its allied bosses rather than the minor necessity of maintaining party regularity. In fact, the lottery company and its allied bosses had secured control of the party organization, and our efforts to destroy the baneful influences of both were directed of necessity without regard to party regularity. For a quarter of a century from that day to this, the former Senator enjoyed my political and personal confidence uninterrupted. If he at any time had any political aspiration to the accomplishment of which I did not lend my efforts, it escapes my mind at this moment. If at any time during that period there has been anything of a political nature that I did not confide to him and gave to, and I imagine received from, him the fullest confidence, the knowledge of it does not rest with me. I will not believe; I can not believe, upon the mere statement of a publication of the character of the "Daily States," under the controlling management of Robert Ewing, that former Senator Foster concurred in what my colleague stated, and which I have here refuted. Nay, Mr. President, I would not believe it on the statement of any man short of the former Senator himself.

In the many talks which I had with the former Senator regarding the details of these matters, I am quite clear in the statement that the facts which I recited to him are at utter variance with the statement of my colleague, in which the former Senator is reported to have concurred.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I very much regret that the speech, or rather the several speeches delivered by me in the political campaign in the State of Louisiana the week before last, should have been made the subject of a heated controversial address on the floor of the Senate by my colleague [Senator BROUSSARD]. I do not think the forum of this great legislative body is the proper place in which to wash soiled political linen, and I do not intend to engage in any controversy in regard to this matter. Matters of this kind should be settled in my own State.

In order, however, that the Senate may see exactly what I did say in my speeches in Louisiana, I wish to ask for publication in the RECORD of a stenographic report of my speech delivered at the city of Thibodaux, La., on the 16th of this month, in behalf of the Democratic candidate for governor of Louisiana and his associates on the Democratic ticket. It was the only speech of eight that I delivered that was taken down by a stenographer as the words fell from my lips, and so far as I have been able to go over it as it appears in the New Orleans Daily States of the 21st instant, it seems to have been correctly reported. I ask that it may be published in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The speech referred to is as follows:

"DEMOCRATIC PARTY IS ONLY REAL FRIEND OF THE SUGAR INDUSTRY, SAYS STATE'S SENIOR SENATOR—DEFENDS NATIONAL COMMITTEEMAN FROM UNJUST ATTACKS; SAYS HE SAVED PLANTERS THREE YEARS' GRACE; SCORES PROGRESSIVE PARTY; WHY DEMOCRATS SHOULD SUPPORT DEMOCRATIC NOMINEES; PAYS TRIBUTE TO THE NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION.

"The tour of Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL through the third district did much to stir the fighting spirit of the gallant Democrats who are fighting against great odds to redeem it to the Democratic Party. Large and enthusiastic meetings greeted him in nearly every parish in which he spoke.

"Below is given a stenographic report of the speech delivered by Mr. RANSDELL on March 16 at Thibodaux. He spoke with like vigor throughout the district. It is timely for the people of Louisiana to read the sparks which he flashed from the Democratic anvil:

"Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, I am delighted to be here this evening. I have met so many good friends and have had so many warm handshakes since I reached your little city this evening that I am feeling just now much like a certain young man did once, who for several years had been trying to pop the question. He was a timid young fellow, a farmer, very much in love with Mary, but he could not screw up his courage to the asking point, but finally one evening he got the fateful words out, and Mary promised to marry him. She had been ready to say 'yes' for several years. John was supremely happy when he left her that evening, and, in walking through the fields from Mary's house to his own, looked up into the bright blue sky, where the stars were shining beautifully, and, raising his hands, he said: 'Oh Lord God, I ain't got nothing against nobody.' And I am feeling very much that way this evening, myself. [Laughter and applause.] I have been through this district, where I heard there was some Progressive strength, for the last four days, and I am so thoroughly convinced that the Democrats are going to sweep it on the 18th of next April that 'I ain't got nothing against nobody' this evening. [Applause.]

"I came a long way to be with you; all the way from the city of Washington. Some of the opposition in Louisiana are pretending to wonder how I could leave Washington at this busy time. I will tell you why I left. Because the Democrats of this State called me, and I have never failed when Democracy calls. If I ever do fail I sincerely hope my right hand will wither and my tongue become palsied. However, in coming I knew there was nothing that really demanded my presence in Washington, for Thursday of last week the Senate began the consideration of the Tillman armor-plate bill, with a distinct agreement to vote on that measure on the 22d day of this month, to wit, on Wednesday of next week. That is the measure now being considered in the United States Senate. It is the unfinished business and will be considered until next Wednesday, when it will be voted upon, and before that I will be back there ready to vote.

"NO MEASURES UP IN SENATE DURING ABSENCE.

"While there are no measures coming up in the Senate during my absence that are of any special concern in Louisiana, there is a measure in the House of the greatest interest, and I have a message to give you about it which I received one hour ago. It reads:

"WASHINGTON, D. C., March 16, 1916—5.10 p. m.

"Hon. JOS. E. RANSDELL, Thibodaux, La.:

"Vote on free sugar repeal: Affirmative, 346; negative, 14."

"[Great applause.]

"Now, that is a message I know you will be glad to receive, and it tells of a vote by a Democratic Congress [applause], showing that a Democratic House of Representatives, controlled absolutely by a Democratic Speaker and Democratic Members, has repealed the free-sugar clause of the tariff act which is so harmful to the people of this district. [Applause.] They repealed it, my friends, because they knew that the party had made a mistake originally, and the President of this Republic, Woodrow Wilson, was big enough, wise enough, and broad-minded enough to acknowledge his mistake and ask them to repeal it. [Great applause.]

"The measure passed the House to-day and will be sent to the Finance Committee of the Senate, which will consider it for a week or 10 days, and probably by the 25th or 27th of this month it will be reported to the full Senate, and may be voted upon in that body about the 1st of next month. I sincerely hope it will, and long before it is ready to be voted on I shall be back to lend any assistance I can, if my assistance is needed. But it will not be needed, because we all know that it is going to pass, for there is no practical objection to it. [Applause.]

"WILL BE ON HAND TO URGE UNITED STATES FLOOD CONTROL.

"There is one other matter which, it is said, I ought to be in the Senate to look after, namely, flood control. I am going to tell you something about it. There is now before the House a bill referring to flood control. I am not a Member of the House, but was for many years, and am deeply interested in that subject, just as you are. On Friday last I went before the committee having this measure in charge, of which your distinguished Representative [Mr. MARTIN] is an active member, and made an argument giving the committee the benefit of such experience as I have had, and asking them as to how the measure should be constructed. They are working upon it now, and before very long will report their findings to the House of Representatives. In two or three weeks or longer that measure will be returned to the Senate, and I will be there to look after the interest of this district and State in that important particular. So, as I have said, there is nothing now to have held me in Washington, and none but matters of the greatest moment, requiring my constant attention in Washington, could have made me feel it other than my plain duty to respond to the call of Democracy. [Applause.]

"Prior to discussing several national issues which I wish to bring before you, I desire to say a few words about the State issues in this campaign and about the candidates.

"I have known Mr. Parker for many years. I esteem him as one of my friends. I have visited in his home and he has visited in mine. He owns a large plantation in East Carroll, where I live, and for many years I shipped cotton to him, because that is my business—a cotton planter in East Carroll. I have none but the very kindliest feelings for Mr. Parker, but I can not agree with his political principles, and anything that I say this evening about him must be understood with the explanation that personally I regard him most highly.

"TELLS WHY PARKER SHOULDN'T BE GOVERNOR.

"I think, however, it would be an extreme misfortune for Mr. Parker to be elected governor of Louisiana, and for several reasons. Democracy's candidate, Mr. Pleasant, has just brought out several points, and without desiring to repeat in detail what he has said, there are three things I wish to emphasize that Mr. Parker advocates which I can not agree to follow: First, he is opposed to primary elections; second, he favors the short ballot; and, third, he wishes a constitutional convention of 25 members.

"Now, do you think we should discard the primary and return to the old convention system? Mr. Parker has had a great deal to say about bosses and ring rule. I wish to ask the gentlemen in this audience who are past 40 years of age, especially those past 50, where the bosses and the rings get in their best work? Is it in the convention or in the primary? In the old convention days a few delegates would assemble in the courthouse here in Thibodaux, and would be ruled, absolutely, by four or five men, and when I say Thibodaux I use it as an illustration for each parish in the State. All the parish conventions which met throughout the State that I ever knew anything about were practically monopolized by four or five men. And the same was true of your congressional and State conventions. The boss can get in his work in a convention far better than he can before the people, and I think Mr. Parker, and everyone else who advocates a return to the old convention system, is making a grave mistake. I, for one, have far more confidence in the wisdom of a united Democracy and a united people of the State than I have in a little band assembled in convention. [Applause.]

"PARISHES WOULD NOT HAVE REPRESENTATION.

"In regard to this constitutional convention of 25, do you not think, my friends, if we have a convention which is to frame our organic law, the parish of Lafourche should be represented? Do you not recollect that great event in the history of this Nation, where our forefathers rebelled against the power of Great Britain, because they were taxed without representation? The imposition of that tax was the principal cause of the Revolutionary War. Yet Mr. Parker proposes a constitutional convention in this State, which is far more important than ordinary taxation, in which more than half of the parishes of the State would be without representation. He thinks there should be 25 members of that convention. There are 64 parishes in the State. He says there ought to be but two from each congressional district. Possibly Lafourche might win one, but if she should, several other parishes would be without any. His plan gives two from each congressional district, and nine to be selected in some other way. He does not tell you how. The supposition is that they might be named by the governor or the State central committee.

"Does that look as if he was opposed to bossism, when he advocates a convention, limiting its membership to 25, well knowing if he had the power of appointing 9 of those men or his intimate friends and political associates on his executive committee had that power they would have to secure control of only 4 others in order to absolutely dominate the convention and thus frame the organic law under which our people would live for perhaps a quarter or a half century?

"DISSECTS PARKER'S SHORT-BALLOT IDEA.

"Then take this short ballot Mr. Parker is advocating. He thinks we should elect a governor and a lieutenant governor, and let the governor name the men to fill the other important offices. You have just listened to an address by the gentleman who is the candidate for attorney general. Don't you like to have candidates for big offices come before you? 'In unity of counsel there is much wisdom,' says the Scriptures; and don't you think the united wisdom of the people themselves is just as great in the selection of an attorney general, a secretary of state, an auditor, a superintendent of education, register of the State land office, treasurer, commissioner of agriculture, etc., as would be that of one man?

"Do you wish to see inaugurated the centralized system of government which was advocated by that great Federalist, Alexander Hamilton, in the early days of this Republic? Do you wish to have a government by a few men or one 'of the people, by the people, and for the people,' as advocated by the father of Democracy, Thomas Jefferson? [Applause.]

"Mr. Parker, both by his speeches and the methods he advocates, indicates he is a believer in the doctrines of Hamilton rather than those of Jefferson, and that he has no confidence in the people.

"Let me cite one instance how his plan might work. Take the office of superintendent of public education. You have now a splendid man in that position who has filled it so ably and done so much for the cause of education that the people did not care to put up anyone against him, and he is therefore standing for reelection without opposition. Would you like to confer upon any governor the power, perhaps through personal pique or some political purpose, to set aside a man like Tom Harris?

"PARKER NOT IN ACCORD WITH COMMON PEOPLE.

"So on these three points Mr. Parker is not in accord with the common people; that he is really in harmony with the boss system; that he is in touch with the idea of control by a very few men. And you all know that when a few men get in power that the big interests usually can control them and that a few men control them very often to the detriment of the plain people. [Applause.]

"There has been a great deal said about bossism and ring rule and a bitter denunciation of Col. Robert Ewing. If you read certain newspapers and listen to many of Mr. Parker's speeches, you would think the issue in this campaign is Ewing—not Progressivism against Democracy, but against Ewing. My friends, suppose Col. Ewing should unfortunately die to-morrow, do you think Mr. Parker would quit the campaign? Oh, no; he would go on, and yet he is trying to make it appear that Ewing is the real issue.

"I wish to tell this audience in this great sugar parish a little piece of history in regard to Robert Ewing, and I preface my remarks by saying I am no apologist for Col. Ewing, for he is well able to take care of himself [applause], and I do this merely as an act of justice.

"When the great fight came on three years ago for the repeal of the duty on sugar and the passage of a general tariff act in Washington, you sent several representatives to confer and advise with the Congressmen from the sugar district and the Senators. I was in the thick of the fight, and, although I came from a cotton section of Louisiana, hundreds of miles away from the sugar section, no man worked harder for sugar than I. You recall that I spoke several times on the subject in the Senate. You recall, on account of sugar being placed on the free list, I voted against the entire tariff bill, although I approved of 99 per cent of it. [Applause.] I thought this one piece of injustice to my State was so great that I should vote against the measure as a whole, which I did, thereby risking my political fortunes; for, my friends, let me tell you there are a great many interests in Louisiana besides sugar [applause], and many people who do not care much about sugar [applause], and many of them became angry with me. I believe they have gotten over it. I hope they have, at any rate.

"PAYS HIGH COMPLIMENT TO ROBERT EWING.

"When the fight was going on we found that sugar was practically certain to go on the free list. Your representatives and myself conferred, and I suggested there was one man in Louisiana who could get closer to President Wilson than anybody else; who could secure constant interviews with him; who could appeal to him in a personal way, and on the ground of gratitude ask favors which no other could ask, and that man was Robert Ewing. [Applause.]

"Col. Ewing had been a leader of the Wilson forces prior to the Baltimore convention. After the convention nominated Mr. Wilson, Ewing was a member of the committee of fifteen that had charge of Mr. Wilson's campaign. He went to the city of Chicago and spent several months there, neglecting his own business and doing everything possible to elect Mr. Wilson. He became very close in a personal way with the Hon. Albert Burleson, afterwards made Postmaster General.

"I knew all of those things, and I knew from what I had heard Mr. Ewing say that he was a real and true friend of sugar, and so I suggested that he be sent for to help us in the fight. He came, armed with a resolution of the sugar people asking him to do what he could, and remained in Washington for several weeks, making a determined and vigorous fight. It seemed impossible to do anything.

"When Col. Ewing saw that he went to the President and appealed to him, saying: 'Mr. President, if sugar is to be put on the free list, give a few years of grace to those people. Give them a chance to get ready, an opportunity to go into some other kind of agricultural pursuit. The sugar business is the only one they know, and they could not change to any other immediately.' He urged upon the President the sugar people be given at least seven years.

"EWING GAINED GRACE FOR SUGAR PEOPLE.

"This was the situation until the President summoned to a final conference with him Col. Ewing, Senator-elect BROUSSARD, and myself. We went to the White House and had a heart-to-heart talk with the President. I never argued in my life, ladies and gentlemen, or fought as hard as I did that night with President Wilson for a three years' extension of the sugar duty. Mr. BROUSSARD and myself finally retired, leaving Col. Ewing with the President, and on our way from the building we saw Mr. UNDERWOOD, then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. He, too, had been summoned by the President, and the next day when the bill was reported to the House it carried a three years' grace for the sugar people; and I want to say to you, my friends, as solemnly as I ever said anything in my life, that to Robert Ewing a great deal more than to any other man you owe the extension of three years of the duty on sugar. [Great applause.]

"Suppose you hadn't gotten that extension? Sugar would have been on the free list two years ago. The duty would all have been taken off, and instead of having that duty extended, as it's going to be, and for an indefinite period—and right here I want to say I don't believe it will ever be taken off again—it would have been on the free list, and then it couldn't have been put back except as a part of a tariff bill. You see, when Congress is merely extending a duty that already exists—merely carrying for a longer period a tax that the people are now bearing—it's rather an easy thing to do; but if Congress attempted to impose a burden of 1 cent a pound on sugar when it had been free for several years it would be difficult to put through a measure of that sort. It couldn't be done.

"So to Robert Ewing more largely than to any other you owe the extension of the duty; and I want you sugar people to think about that when he is so bitterly assailed, and I want you to remember the part I took. I was there, fighting just as hard as I could, and I would do the same thing again if it became necessary. I believe, with many others, that my party made a mistake, but I also know that it is big enough and has courage enough to correct its mistake, which it is doing now. [Great applause.]

"Should I leave my party and join the Progressives because of one mistake? Should I give up my principles because my party made a mistake on one or two things, or should I stand by it and try to correct the errors in its ranks? We should all stay in the ranks, and especially so when we belong to a party which, although it may make some mistakes, yet in the vast majority of cases has proved far more beneficial to the plain people of the country than the Republicans. [Great applause.]

"I stayed, and I was glad to stay, and I want to tell you of some splended things this party has done for the Nation. Before doing it, however, before I get away from this talk about bosses, bossism, and ring rule, I am tempted to tell you another story. On a certain occasion there was a big religious gathering up in the mountains of Tennessee, and when the excitement grew rather intense one of the lay brothers, who stood about six feet two in his stocking feet and had a tremendously loud voice, raised that great voice of his and shouted so loud that one could hear him for nearly a mile, 'Tally ho, hell and damnation.' Then he walked over to another part of the building and again raising his voice, shouted out, 'Tally ho, hell and damnation.' He repeated that several times, and finally the minister in charge of the meeting went to him and said, 'Brother Smith, what do you mean by saying "Tally ho, hell and damnation"? I am familiar with the Scriptures from Genesis to Revelations, and never have I read anything that sounds at all like "Tally ho, hell and damnation." Now, what does it mean?' 'Oh,' said he, 'Brother Brown, it don't mean anything, but it's a powerful thing to sound on.' [Applause.] I am sure you see the application. All this talk about ring rule and bossism does not mean anything. There will always be rings, for as soon as one faction is overthrown its successor forms its ring, and if you put down the present ring in New Orleans there would be another one formed immediately. That is one of the penalties we pay for a democratic form of government, and if one ring does not suit us we put it out at the end of four years and create another. All of this talk about rings and bosses 'don't mean anything.' But it is being used like many other things to catch votes with. In other words, 'it's a powerful thing to sound on.' [Applause.]

"THINKS T. R. IS IN REPUBLICAN PARTY.

"I promised to tell you of some of the things that the Democratic Party has done, but before coming to that I must say a few words about the Progressive Party. I do so in the kindliest spirit, for I do not like to speak other than good of the dead and dying. Who is the Progressive Party and what is it? Theodore Roosevelt has constituted for a good while the Progressive Party, but I do not believe he constitutes it now. I think he is practically in the Republican Party, but if not I am sure he will be there very soon. Are you good people in this section of Louisiana ready to go into the Republican Party or have you simply risen in protest against fancied wrongs by the Democratic Party? I think most of you have joined the Parker movement as a sort of protest against what the Democratic Party has done that you think is wrong. Suppose Mr. Parker is elected governor of Louisiana and the Progressive Party dies in June, after the meeting of the Republican convention in Chicago, then what is going to happen to Mr. Parker? Do you think he will come back to the Democratic Party? I hardly think so. He voted for Mr. Taft, the Republican candidate for the Presidency in 1908, and he voted and worked for Mr. Roosevelt, the Progressive candidate, in 1912. He has been antagonizing in every imaginable way the Democratic Party and its policies for many years, and surely he can not come back into the Democratic Party. He must logically go into the Republican Party, and if he does that are you prepared to follow?

"Why do I say the Progressive Party is going to die next June? I say it because it is practically dead now. It is now so considered in Washington, as it has only six Members in the House and one in the Senate. Two great parties are in existence to-day—Republicans on the one hand and Democrats on the other. Mr. Roosevelt received an enormous vote in 1912, but at the congressional elections in 1914 the Progressive Party practically died away. There were then very few Progresssive votes cast because they had gone back to their former allegiance—the Republican Party.

"CONVENTIONS SAME DAY, SAME CITY.

"What happened when the Progressive national committee met in Chicago some weeks ago to issue a call for a national convention? It passed a resolution providing that the Progressive national convention should be held in Chicago on the same day the Republican convention is to meet there, and it expressed the hope that the Progressives would nominate the same man as the Republicans and be governed and controlled by the same principles. Let me read to you from the call:

"We call the national convention of the Progressive Party to assemble in Chicago at the same time the national convention of the Republican Party is to assemble there. We take this action believing that the surest way to secure for our country the required leadership will be by having, if possible, both the Progressive and the Republican Party choosing the same standard bearer and the same principles.

"Does anyone want to tell me the party is not dead, when its national committee says it will meet in Chicago the same day as the Republican Party, and 'hopes it will choose the same standard bearer and adopt the same principles'? It can not be a separate and independent party when that state of facts exists; and it concludes its call by saying:

"We are confident that the rank and file of the Republican Party and the very large independent vote of this country will support such an effort.

"SERIOUS TO FOLLOW PARKER INTO REPUBLICAN PARTY.

"So, my friends, if you are consistent and vote the Progressive ticket, you will simply be voting for Mr. Parker; and if you do that to be consistent, you should follow him into the Republican Party, and that will be a serious thing to do.

"I wish to tell you another story, and it is not a humorous one this time. It is related on one occasion the Shah of Persia, in his city of Bagdad, heard a man in the streets crying in a loud voice, 'If anyone will give me $5,000, I will tell him something of great value.' The Shah had the man brought before him, who said: 'Your Majesty, never do anything without first considering well what the end will be.' The money was paid to him, and the attendants of the Shah said the story told by this man was a ridiculous one, but the Shah had respect for what the man had told him and said he was glad to pay $5,000 for such advice. And he ordered the words 'Never do anything without first considering well what the end will be' inscribed on the walls of the palace and on his gold and silver plate. Several days later the Shah was taken sick, and sent for a doctor, who, before starting to bleed the Shah, drew from his pocket a lancet, and happening to glance at the golden vessel that had been brought in to receive the blood, suddenly turned pale, put the lancet back, and drew out another and was about to proceed with his work when the Shah said in a sharp voice: 'What did you mean, sir, by changing that lancet? Why didn't you bleed me with the first lancet you took out of your pocket?' The doctor fell on his knees and confessed that he had been hired by the grand vizier to bleed the Shah with a poisoned lancet, but when he looked in the vessel and saw inscribed there these fateful words, 'Never do anything without first considering well what the end will be,' it flashed through his mind 'What will my end be if I bleed the Shah with this poisoned lancet? The grand vizier, who employed me to do this deed, will immediately have my head cut off in order that the evidence against him might be destroyed.'

"CAN NOT CONTROL DEMON ONCE TURNED LOOSE.

"My friends, apply that case here. Think long and well what the end will be before you go into the Republican Party. And what will the end be? I do not believe there is a single white Progressive in this parish or State who wishes to see the negro brought back into politics, and I know John Parker does not wish it; but, my friends, things sometimes happen entirely beyond our control. We unloose forces sometimes which we can not manage. There is not a boy of 10 in this audience who could not go out on the banks of the great Mississippi and with a sharp spade cut a ditch across the levee in one hour's time that would release the floods of that great stream and produce ruin and devastation, but what could that boy do to control those vast floods after he had turned them loose? Absolutely nothing. He can turn a demon loose, but could not control it after it was loose.

"You can create another white political party in this State, Mr. Parker, but if you do you will create a force that you can not control. The Negro is a factor in the border States, like Tennessee and Kentucky; in the Western States, like Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio; and in the Eastern seaboard States, like Maryland, Delaware, and New Jersey, he is a prominet factor. It would be impossible to keep him out of politics if we had two white parties in this State almost equally divided and each contending for the mastery. Automatically he would come back.

"I am free to say that the Progressives now in this district would oppose his coming back, but when there is put up a Republican ticket from governor to constable, and a Democratic ticket from governor to constable throughout the State, most of the candidates would be anxious to get in and, seeking the flesh pots of Egypt, would get all the votes they could. It is not so many years since we had the Negro in politics, and so certain as you occupy your present seats in this hall, he would come back again under the conditions I have named, and it would be a source of great sorrow to Louisiana.

"WOULD SETTLE TROUBLES 'AMONG OURSELVES.'

"Do we want to bring about this condition? Oh, no; we do not. Let us settle our troubles among ourselves. Suppose the Democratic Party does things that do not suit you, have you got to bring in another party to settle your differences? Can not we get along by ourselves, and can not we in a primary election name men who should be selected for our local offices—our constables, justices of the peace, police jurors, judges, district attorneys, and so forth? Can not we nominate and select our governors and all the officers who are to manage our State affairs, and can not we, if necessary, frame a new constitution? Can not we do all of those things just as well among ourselves, fighting, if you please, in a good family row, if need be? Oh, yes. We have gotten along splendidly in the last 20 years, since we got rid of the negro constitutionally. Louisiana has grown and blossomed as the rose. She has prospered marvelously with one white political party. All the States of the South are controlled by one white political party. They do not need but one. We do not need but one. Then, in God's name, let me beg of you not to do something that is going to give us two parties, which will bring the negro back into politics and make Louisiana different from her sister States. [Applause.]

"Now, let me state a few things the Democracy has done in a national way and what she is going to do.

"TELLS OF WILSON'S ACHIEVEMENTS.

"The greatest piece of constructive legislation enacted in this country in the last 50 years is the Federal reserve act passed by the Wilson administration. When the war in Europe broke out in August, 1914, there was financial gloom and almost despair staring our people in the face. The cotton exchange in New Orleans, the cotton exchange in New York, and stock exchanges in a number of the larger cities closed. We thought we were face to face with the most terrible financial panic in the whole history of this country. People were looking aghast at each other. They knew not what to think. They had seen panics occur before under far less dangerous conditions. Then it was that William Gibbs McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, came to the front with the Federal reserve act and amended the Vreeland-Aldrich Act, stepped into the breach and poured into the money centers something like $386,000,000, telling the financiers they could get all the money they needed and there was no cause for alarm. He commanded the waves of unrest to be stilled, and they were stilled. Business became stable and has continued so ever since, in spite of the most terrific upheaval across the water the world has ever known. We have gone on, continuing to prosper, and during the past year the United States has enjoyed the most unrivaled prosperity in all its history, largely as the result of that splendid Democratic legislation. [Great applause.]

"The Republicans were in power, as you know, for a great many years. Why did not they enact some laws of that kind? They knew that the national-banking law was defective. They knew it had brought on a panic no longer ago than 1907, but they did not act.

"TALKS ABOUT RURAL CREDITS ACT.

"At the present moment there is pending in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, under Democratic guidance, a measure that is of special interest to the farmers throughout the Union, which is known as the 'rural credits act.' Now, where did we get the idea for this? Not from Mr. John M. Parker, who has put it in his platform, as I understand, but from the great wise people of 'La Belle France'; from the far-seeing people of Germany, of Italy, and of Austria, who many years ago adopted and put into effect a system of rural credit banks which loaned money to the farmers at rates of interest so low as to seem ridiculous to us—3½ and 4 per cent. The Democratic Party, as soon as it got into power, created a commission and sent it to Europe to study the banking and rural credit systems of those countries, which it did systematically. Finally a report was made to Congress as the result of its labors, in favor of creating 12 land banks, to be located throughout the Nation, each with a capital of $500,000, which are to be affiliated with associations of farmers.

"EXPLAINS HOW SYSTEM WORKS.

"Suppose we have one of those banks in New Orleans, and the farmers in this vicinity should wish to borrow money with which to improve their plantations, to build new houses, to buy improved machinery, or to do any of the hundreds of things to make a farm successful, you will organize a farmers' loan association, which will affiliate with this bank. And those who desire to borrow money will give a mortgage on their country real estate, and they will pay back the principal and interest at the rate of 6 to 7 per cent per annum. Money can be gotten very cheaply when it is fully secured; and this money will be secured, first, by a mortgage on the land; second, by the obligation of the loan association; and, third, by the joint and solidary obligation of all the 12 land banks for each and every loan of the whole association, which will be responsible for them. So there can be no better security. Government bonds would afford no better security. That money thus secured can be be had at not more than 4 per cent interest. It will cost about 1 per cent interest to take care of it, which makes 5.

"Now you can settle the principal, under this system, by paying 1 per cent per annum for 36 years. So you pay 5 per cent for interest and expenses and 1 per cent on the principal, or a total of 6 per cent, and the whole debt, principal and interest, is wiped out in 36 years. That is a splendid piece of legislation that the Democratic Party has been looking after in the interest of the people; not particularly interested in the rich, not working up a system that is going to make Rockefellers and Carnegies, who have each given away more than $300,000,000, and have so much money they do not know what to do with it, but the Democratic Party is trying to get a system under which the poor man can get some good out of life. That great measure will become a law within the next few months, and the farmers will get the benefit of it. [Applause.]

"FEDERAL INCOME TAX DEMOCRATIC MEASURE.

"Let me remind you of another measure that was passed, namely, the 'Federal income tax.' Not until the Democrats came into power was there any tax on incomes. There is not a poor man in this audience or anywhere in the United States who has a horse and buggy, a wagon or a pair of mules, a little house or a little farm, who has ever managed to escape the tax collector. He always finds you and makes you pay, but when it came to the enormously rich man, much of whose property was in stocks and bonds, he frequently escaped taxation thereon, but under this new law he is compelled to pay. It is a tax that does not reach the poor man, because if your income is under $3,000 a year you pay nothing. If you happen to be a bachelor or a maiden lady, or if you are married, you pay nothing on an income up to $4,000.

"There is another measure which we are about to get through, one dear to my heart and one in the interest of every person in this section of Louisiana, namely, flood-control legislation on the Mississippi River. Theodore Roosevelt, the demigod of John M. Parker and the Progressive Party, was President of the United States for seven years and was responsible for forcing through Congress some great pieces of legislation for which I give him due credit. He forced through, to a great extent, the Panama Canal legislation, under which we have constructed the mightiest piece of engineering in all time, a piece of engineering that cost about $400,000,000. Through his influence Congress passed the national reclamation act, which has for its purpose the placing of water on arid lands, and under that act the Government has spent about $100,000,000 in irrigating the arid lands of the West and converting them into productive areas.

ROOSEVELT DID NOTHING TOWARD FLOOD CONTROL.

"But how much money did Roosevelt ever persuade Congress to spend to protect Louisiana from the floods of 31 States? Did he ever have any money spent in a businesslike way to relieve us of the awful burden of these waters? Oh, no. Mr. Roosevelt could have put through that legislation, just as he did the other, if he had kept behind it with all the power of his great position. But he did not seem to care for us. He loved the people of the arid West; he constructed the mighty Panama Canal; but did nothing for the Mississippi Valley, although he secured a small annual appropriation in the rivers and harbors bill, the same as he did before he became President. When Mr. Taft was President we got a little more money, although he made no special effort to give us more.

"What is the record of the Democratic Party? When it came into power it wrote a rivers and harbors bill which carried for the Mississippi River $8,000,000, the greatest sum ever carried in a single bill. And what happened to the bill? It was filibustered against by three Republican Senators—Burton, of Ohio; GALLINGER, of New Hampshire; KENYON, of Iowa—and by long and determined filibustering, coupled with the necessity for a great variety of legislation just at the time of the outbreak of the war in Europe, they were able to delay action on this bill until the closing days of Congress, when the Democrats were forced to accept a compromise measure of $20,000,000 as a lump-sum appropriation for all the rivers and harbors of the country, instead of $54,000,000, which the bill carried as it came from the Democratic Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House and the Democratic Senate Commerce Committee. That was in 1914. In the spring of 1915 the Democrats had another rivers and harbors bill prepared which carried $7,000,000 for the Mississippi, which also met with filibustering tactics by the same Republican Senators, and we were forced to compromise on that bill also, getting a lump sum of $30,000,000 for all waterways of the country, instead of $44,000,000, which the bill originally carried, and in that $44,000,000 was $7,000,000 for the Mississippi River. Those were two Democratic measures, both of which were killed by the Republicans.

"DEMOCRATS COME TO AID OF VALLEY.

"And then what happened? When Congress met last fall the Senators and Representatives from the valley got together and decided to put through as a part of the Democratic program a piece of legislation that would control these floods for all time. We knew the President was friendly, and when a committee in the House of Representatives was created to take it up the President named a committee of three members of his Cabinet to advise him thereon. At this moment there is being framed in the Flood Control Committee of the House of Representatives a bill which will place in the hands of the Mississippi River Commission sufficient money to build levees along this river so high and so strong that they will control any flood that can come against them, or, at least, any flood of which we have any record since the great flood of 1844, and also to do whatever else is deemed best by the commission. [Applause.]

"It was my pleasure on Friday last to appear before that committee and do all within my power to have them make the bill so broad and so comprehensive and so general that it would take care not only of the Mississippi River but also the lower ends of the great streams which empty into it, such as the Ohio, the St. Francis, the White, the Arkansas, the Yazoo, the Red, and most of all, the complete control of the Atchafalaya River down to the Gulf. [Great applause.] That bill is going through beyond question.

"In conclusion, let me remind you what Woodrow Wilson, the greatest President who has occupied the White House since the days of Abraham Lincoln, has done for this Nation. He has kept it at peace when the world is aflame. Bear in mind that there has been an awful war on our southern border for several years. Remember that the people of Europe are engaged in the greatest struggle of recorded history. Millions of men have been killed and billions of dollars of property have been destroyed during this war. Many prominent men of this country have tried to get us involved in the struggle. You have read about it from time to time. You know Theodore Roosevelt has been preaching blood and thunder and fight. You have read that Elihu Root, ex-Republican Senator from New York, made a bitter speech against President Wilson in connection with this European war. He has been assailed time and again by public men in and out of Congress and by newspapers, but with the wonderful poise of the truly great man, calm, and clear in his views, firm as the Rock of Gibraltar, he said to his traducers and to the American people, 'I will hold the helm of the ship of state steady and firm. I will preserve the peace of this Nation with honor against all the world.' If he had done nothing else but this, nothing else except to keep us at peace with all the world, it would be the greatest act that any President could do for us, and enough to earn the eternal gratitude and respect of every citizen of this Republic. [Great applause.]

"Just these final words. I am glad to have come among you, to have had the opportunity of addressing this splendid audience. I hope my feeble arguments may have some weight with you. I hope, my friends, you will consider carefully 'what the end will be' if you carry out this Progressive movement, which, if successful, you will find to be like the fabled Pandora box, which, when opened, gave forth a legion of evils which could not be controlled.

"HAS NO FEAR OF RESULT IN STATE.

"But, my friends, I have no fear the manhood of this State will ever allow this calamity to happen.

"One hundred and fourteen thousand Democrats, a great majority of the white voters, have participated in a primary election as fair and as square as any ever held in this State. They have bound themselves to support the candidate nominated. They have solemnly declared themselves to be Democrats, and have entered the councils of the party. In so doing they have incurred the plain obligation to abide by the result. True, that obligation is not one which can be enforced at law, but it is one just as binding as an obligation to pay a gambling debt or a debt barred by proscription. What think you of the man who, being able, refused to pay such a debt? Equally dishonest is the voter who violates his obligation to stand by a party into whose ranks he voluntarily enters and whose plans for facing an enemy he helps to make. So, on this account, I have confidence in the 114,000 sturdy Louisianians who took part in the election that decreed that splendid north Louisianian, Ruffin G. Pleasant, to lead the Democratic hosts of this State.

"Morally and mentally Democracy's candidate is the equal of the Progressive-Republican candidate. The policies that he advocates are as far-reaching and desirable as those of his opponent, and his ability to enact them into law is certain on account of the legislature being overwhelmingly Democratic, whereas if Mr. Parker were elected the State would be thrown into great confusion and uncertainty in all public matters, and his administration, rather than being a blessing, would make for disorder and chaos.

"So for these reasons, on the 18th of April next, go to the polls and retake your stand with the party of the white men of the South, to which you are bound by every tradition of a noble past and by every promise for the coming years—with the party of Jefferson, Jackson, and Wilson, of McEnery, Nicholls, and White. [Great applause.]"

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States, from time to time, in his discretion, all moneys derived from the sale and disposition of surplus lands, within the limits of the former Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak., arising under the provisions of the act approved June 1, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 455), together with the accrued interest thereon, and distribute the same per capita to the Indians entitled thereto in the following manner, to wit: To competent Indians in cash share and share alike and to incompetent Indians by depositing equal shares to their individual credit in banks bonded and designated as depositories for individual Indian moneys, subject to expenditure for the benefit of the Indians entitled under such rules as he may prescribe, and hereafter annual distributions shall similarly be made of funds accruing under the provisions of the act herein referred to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, while, of course, I understand what is intended, I do not think the following language in the amendment is quite clear:

Subject to expenditure for the benefit of the Indians entitled under such rules as he may prescribe.

The word "he" refers to nothing in that sentence, although I suppose it is intended to refer to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ASHURST. To what line does the Senator refer?

Mr. LODGE. I refer to line 24, on page 64, which reads "under such rules as he may prescribe." Of course, the language refers to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ASHURST. I think the Senator's criticism is a very proper one, and that the pronoun is too far from its antecedent. The words "the Secretary of the Interior" ought to be inserted there.

Mr. LODGE. Yes. Those words occur only in the preceding sentence. I move that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, line 24, before the word "may," it is proposed to strike out "he" and to insert "the Secretary of the Interior," so as to read "under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," and so forth.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 65, after line 2, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to redeem a mortgage on the allotment selection of Starr McGillis, a Turtle Mountain Chippewa Indian, described as the northwest quarter of section 34, township 164 north, range 70 west of the fifth principal meridian, North Dakota, $1,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the said sum to be reimbursed from the rentals of said allotment not to exceed 50 per cent of the amount of rentals received annually: Provided, That in the event a patent in fee shall be issued for this land before the United States shall be wholly reimbursed as herein provided the amount remaining unpaid shall become a first lien on such allotment, and the fact of such lien shall be recited on the face of the patent in fee and the amount of the lien set forth thereon, and the receipt of the Secretary of the Interior, or of the officer, agent, or employee duly authorized by him for that purpose, for the payment of the amount of the mortgage, when duly recorded by the recorder of deeds in the county wherein the land is located, shall operate as a satisfaction of such lien.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, after line 22, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to reimburse Benson County, N. Dak., for moneys actually paid to the State of North Dakota for care and maintenance of insane Indians at the State insane asylum, as follows: Joseph Langer, $457.44; Mary J. Pejihutaskana, $410; Alfred Littlewind, $630; in all, $1,497.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Oklahoma," on page 66, line 6, to change the number of the section from "17" to "18."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 67, after line 18, to insert:

To pay the Women's Board of Domestic Missions, Reformed Church in America, $10,000 to reimburse said board for buildings on the Fort Sill Military Reserve, in the State of Oklahoma, constructed by said board with the consent of the Government and utilized for the education and civilization of the Fort Sill Apache prisoners of war until the removal of said Indians from said Fort Sill Military Reserve.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not allow that amendment to go over?

Mr. OWEN. Let the item go over, Mr. President.

Mr. ASHURST. We may finish the bill to-day.

Mr. OWEN. Of course, if it goes over it is only temporary. If it is proposed to conclude the consideration of the bill to-day, it will have to come up before the bill is disposed of. With that understanding, I agree that the amendment may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 68, after line 20, to insert:

For continuing the relief and settlement of the Apache Indians formerly confined as prisoners of war at Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., on lands in Oklahoma to be selected for them by the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War, $40,000, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War may prescribe, and to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may that amendment go over in connection with the one which the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] has just asked to have passed over?

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to the amendment going over temporarily.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Five Civilized Tribes," on page 69, line 20, to change the number of the section from "18" to "19," and in line 22, after the word "employees," to strike out "$175,000" and insert "$185,000, of which $10,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 19. For expenses of administration of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, and the compensation of employees, $185,000, of which $10,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, although we have passed the North Dakota items, I observe that through some typographical or other error there has been omitted one item which was approved by the committee, as Senators will remember. I will read the item, which I will ask to have inserted in the bill:

For the erection of a headstone to mark the grave of Scarlet Crow, a Sioux Indian, chief of the Wahpeton Tribe, who was buried March 13, 1867, in the Congressional Cemetery at Washington, D. C., in a grave marked "76-R A. 22," $100.

That amendment was agreed to by the committee. I ask that it be agreed to by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Where does the Senator desire the amendment to be inserted?

Mr. ASHURST. On page 66, after line 4, at the end of the North Dakota items.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 70, line 17, after the word "act," to insert "except where contracts have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with existing law, which contracts the Secretary as authorized to settle and discharge"; so as to make the clause read:

Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act except where contracts have been heretofore approved by the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with existing law, which contracts the Secretary is authorized to settle and discharge.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to move an amendment to come in at the close of the amendment just read. The amendment consists of the following words:

Provided further, That the payments made under such contracts shall not exceed $1,950.

I understand, Mr. President, that that is the aggregate amount of the contracts proposed to be paid under this amendment. If that be true, I think it would be well to make the limitation explicit.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if my memory serves me correctly, my impression was that the claim was for $1,500, but if the Senator from Oklahoma, who has made the computation, says it amounts to the sum indicated by him, I have personally no objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, line 20, after the word "discharge," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the payments made under such contracts shall not exceed $1,950.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I do not know that I am justified in taking the time of the Senate in commenting upon this section of this bill, which proposes to make per capita payments of $300 each to the Choctaws and $200 each to the Chickasaws; and yet I feel that at least a few words ought to be said to the Senate setting forth what this provision really accomplishes. It means that we shall pay out to the Indians of Oklahoma more than $7,000,000; I think, with the other appropriations made for Oklahoma, it means that we will pay out from eight to ten million dollars this year. I do not object that this money does not belong to the Choctaws or the Chickasaws. I think the funds are in the Treasury which belong to them; but, in conferring with those who are conversant with conditions there, I am told that there is no probable question that within 60 days from the date that these sums are paid over to the Indians one-half of them will be separated from their money; indeed, one man with whom I conversed—and he was friendly to this legislation—said he had no doubt that within six months 75 per cent of the money would be gone.

In families, say, of five or six, each drawing $200 or $300, the aggregate amounts to $1,000 to $2,000 per family, and in some families much more. My judgment is that these large sums should not be given them without some safeguard. We ought to pay it out in smaller sums; at least, that is my judgment, and I give utterance to my judgment because I think I have some regard for the welfare of the Indians to whom these funds will go. It is true the money will find its way into Oklahoma; somebody there will get it; but our wards, for whom we have been conserving this fund for a good many years, will, in my judgment, be very little benefited by this legislation so far as more than 50 per cent of them are concerned. The money will be spent, and spent foolishly, in very many cases about as soon as the Indians get it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, this per capita payment to the Choctaws and Chickasaws has been long delayed. It is a distribution to them of the proceeds of their property which was promised to them by the agreement of 1902. It has now been held for 14 years, and in that time nearly one-half of those people have died without getting the benefit of the property which was promised to them. Practically the only point, as I understand, which was made against paying these people what was promised to them by the United States is that they will be separated from their money. I will say, in answer to that, that I hope in due course of time to receive my salary for this month, and to be separated from it very promptly thereafter, and I do not want denial made to me on any such grounds. I take it that nearly every Senator will expend what is coming to him in due course; and it is no reason on earth for the United States refusing to pay a debt on the ground that the man to whom it is due and paid will spend it. There remains about $31,000,000 undistributed of this property.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I confess to the truth of all the Senator has said. He is absolutely right in saying that it is the money of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and they ought to have it; but if you were to make the proposed distribution by a separate bill with a caption of its own, if that caption described the real purpose of the bill it would read, "An appropriation for the benefit of a goodly number of whites in Oklahoma—men having no Indian blood in their veins."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there have been very few more tragic occurrences in the history of the American people than the treatment by the United States Government and by the Oklahoma Choctaw Nation of the Mississippi Choctaws, and there have been a great many tragic and unjust things in our history. Shakespeare says that—

> Oh, it is excellent
> To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
> To use it like a giant.

The white race has very frequently used its strength like a giant. In no one particular has that been better illustrated than in the treatment of the Mississippi Choctaws.

In 1830 "Old Hickory," with his unbending will, decreed that there should be a treaty with the Choctaw Indians in the State of Mississippi to remove them west of the Mississippi River. Many years later than that, when Andrew Jacokson died, it was said that one of his negro slaves said to another, "Do you reckon Marse Andy is in heaven?" The other said, "Of course he is; didn't you hear him say he was gwine there before he died?" So, when he made up his mind that there should be a treaty with the Mississippi Choctaws removing them west of the river, he had already made up his mind that they had to remove.

There are few more disgraceful pictures in the history of the country than the means resorted to in order to persuade those people to consent to go west of the river. They possessed upon the Yioughenougheny River and upon Pearl River, in the State of Mississippi, the happiest hunting grounds in the Union. They are happy hunting grounds even yet, notwithstanding the intrusion of population, and notwithstanding the change of the character of population under which most people are now not hunters, but merchants, lawyers, or something else.

When finally the treaty was entered into even Old Hickory found that he had to agree that those of the "Mississippi Choctaws," or those of the Choctaws who remained in the State of Mississippi and would not consent to the surrender of their tribal and thereto treaty rights, had to have an agreement with them that they were to have "all the privileges of citizens of the Choctaw Nation," even without removing from Mississippi, except that they could not share in "the annuity" given to those who did remove.

Year followed year, decade followed decade, and finally the time came when they proceeded to find out what were "the privileges of the citizens of the Choctaw Nation" in the Indian Territory—the old Indian Territory, consisting of the present State of Oklahoma as a part of it. These people had no vote in the State of Mississippi. They had cut themselves off from that. There are a lot of you who disapprove of Mississippi's attitude with regard to the idea that the governing force in the State must be members of the white race; but, whether you disapprove of it or not, the fact remains that these people, by our policy and their consent, had no vote in the State of Mississippi. They were included under the general term of "Indians not taxed" and did not vote, under the clause of the Constitution which prevented certain people from voting, amongst them "Indians not taxed."

Mr. President, they are a simple folk. They are an honest people. I said upon the floor of this body once before—and I hesitate to repeat myself, but still the chances are that the men who heard it before were not the men who are now here present—that when I wanted to hire a white man or a negro to go into the woods and split rails for me, or do any other odd job that Indians do, I counted the white man's rails, and I counted the darkey's, but it was never necessary to count the Indian's. He was honest. When he came to me and told me he had split 10,000 rails I knew he had split them, and when he told me where I could find them I knew I could find them.

Now, they have no votes; they are nothing politically to me; and yet, Mr. President, I have stood here two Congresses, and I have stood in the House—I do not remember how many Congresses—and I have defeated Indian Affairs Committee after Indian Affairs Committee with a vote of one House or the other. I have defeated the Indian Affairs Committee of this House—the Senate—twice, and once when I was sick in bed and could not come here the Senate, by procrastination and filibustering, carried over the Indian appropriation bill, under the guidance and leadership of my colleague, until the Indian appropriation bill itself was defeated, rather than leave these people without their rights under the law; and the Indian Affairs Committee in this appropriation bill, under the dominancy of the State of Oklahoma, has paid no more attention to the views of the Senate than if the Senate of the United States had not existed.

I went to the chairman of the committee the other day and proposed, and I renew the proposition now, that if he will reduce the amount of per capita allowance from $300 to $200, so that I will know that there will be enough money left in the Treasury for my Mississippi Choctaws—I do not call them mine in a political sense; they have not a vote, and the Oklahoma Choctaws have a whole lot of votes, and that is the difference between them—if he will do that, I will let the question rest, so that I may hope at some time in the future to have the entire question submitted to the Committee on Claims, and I shall introduce a bill to leave it entirely to them to judge not only of the legalities and the equities but of the moral and tribal rights of the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. President, citizenship in an Indian tribe was never based upon territoriality. It was always based upon consanguinity. If there had never been one word said in the Dancing Rabbit treaty about the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws, they still would have continued to be citizens of the Choctaw Nation by consanguinity, just as in ancient Rome and in ancient Athens, long after so-called civilization, men obtained their citizenship in each city because of their tribal relationship; and it was long and long and long afterwards before territoriality was considered—the tribal membership constituted citizenship. So with the Iroquois; so in Australia.

Because we are at a critical point in the affairs of the Nation I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he can not agree to reduce this per capita allowance to $200? Then I will know that after that is paid there will be enough left for my people, or rather these people, if the Court of Claims decides in their favor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the distinguished senior Senator from Mississippi, I want to say, first, that I know that his polite and parliamentary gibe at the committee being under the domination of the Senator from Oklahoma——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I did not say "the Senator from Oklahoma"; I said the State of Oklahoma—in the other House and in this.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not taking exception to it. I want to say, on behalf of the Indian Affairs Committee of the Senate, that the language employed in the bill is the identical language which came over from the House, and the committee did not make any change in that part of it. Now, I may not state the situation accurately, but I will say to the distinguished Senator that my best information is that if this per capita payment of $300 were made there would still be ample funds to settle any possible, even conjectural, claim which might be made on behalf of the Mississippi Choctaws. Speaking further, I think I state the facts when I say there are $31,000,000——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it a Chickasaw and Choctaw fund, or purely a Choctaw fund?

Mr. OWEN. Jointly.

Mr. ASHURST. It is a joint tribal fund.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, but we have no claim upon the Chickasaw part of the fund.

Mr. ASHURST. I am advised by one of the Senators from Oklahoma that only a fourth of it could be or would be charged to the Chickasaws, leaving three-fourths——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator means, only a fourth of it would be credited to the Chickasaws.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; I thank the Senator for the correction. Leaving three-fourths—I speak in round numbers—of $31,000,000 that are available for the Choctaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I recognize that the American people are just at this time in a parlous situation. Mexican troubles are crowding us, European troubles are beginning to crowd us more and more acutely than ever before, the recent sinking by submarine boats not only of belligerent vessels but of vessels of neutral powers without warning—all of that sort of thing is rising above the horizon. I am the last man who wants to take up the time of this body and of American preparation for possible trouble in what might look like the useless consumption of time for a purpose that is not as vital as the things with which we must soon deal.

I offered to two appropriation bills the following amendment:

The Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and directed to enroll as members of the said Choctaw Tribe of Indians all persons—

I ask the attention of Senators to this now—

All persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, under the provisions of section 21 of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1898, in the roll and report of said commission dated March 10, 1899, and in subsequent reports of said commission, which persons have not hitherto been finally enrolled.

Now, let me explain that; and I especially want the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], because he was at that time a member of the Indian Affairs Committee in the House of Representatives, and, if I mistake not, the chairman of that committee; and I can not mistake this, if I am not mistaken about the contemporaneousness of things, he was the ablest chairman of that committee that we ever had, with the possible exception of Mr. SHERMAN, of New York.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not finished my question.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to correct the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the Senator, I think, will bear me out in this: After procuring this amendment, of which what I have read is a part, I ascertained that the committee had put upon the provision a proviso that these people should move to Oklahoma.

I was at that time minority leader of the House. I had very little time to do anything except to lead the minority. I was informed that what I wanted was upon the bill. Later I found that a provision was upon it saying that these people should remove from Mississippi to the Indian Territory. I did not know that until afterwards. Of course, in requiring that they should remove, the whole contention that they were citizens by consanguinity and not by territoriality was surrendered. Then I came to the House as soon as I could, and I got an appropriation of $20,000 out of the Treasury to remove them. And after that the Secretary of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs wrote to those people and to me, in the State of Mississippi, when they had written to ask about removing, and informed them and me that if they did remove to the Indian Territory, as it was then constituted, they might possibly be removed as "intruders"—as intruders! At that time the now distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] was the attorney of the Mississippi Choctaws—Winton, Owen & Winton, or Owen & Winton, or whatever the firm was—and was the first man in the world who ever brought to my attention the consanguinity rights of the Mississippi Choctaws. And that condition of things lasted until it was too late for those people to remove, and very few of them took advantage of the $20,000 appropriation.

Now I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state, just to get the RECORD correct, that I was not chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House. I was chairman of the subcommittee having charge of the Indian Territory legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And Mr. Sherman was chairman of the committee. I got it wrong.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is also mistaken in reference to the dates of the appropriations. It is true that it was by and through the efforts of the Senator from Mississippi, in 1898, that provision was made for taking care of the Mississippi Choctaws. Later on the fight came up in reference to the time for their removal, and, if the Senator will remember, he asked for a year, and we compromised on six months.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now I want to read something, although I hate to take up the time right now.

After the passage of the legislation to which we are both referring, the Dawes Commission was directed to "identify" and prepare "a roll" of those "entitled to the privilege of Choctaw citizenship under section 14 of the removal treaty of 1830," which was the Dancing Rabbit treaty. The commission submitted a roll containing the name, age, sex, and residence of 1,925 full-blooded Choctaws. Shortly thereafter, before the approval of this roll, Congress enacted a law recognizing the rights of these Choctaws to full citizenship and allotment in the Choctaw Nation west, as other Choctaws residing in the Indian Territory, but requiring them within six months—and that is the point to which the Senator from Kansas was referring—to remove to the Indian Territory. The Department of the Interior suggested, or somebody suggested, a year. I suggested no time at all, because I was basing my claim upon consanguinity and not upon residence in a given territory. This law as passed, however, required them, within six months after identification, to remove to the Indian Territory and to reside there for three years.

Oh, Mr. President, think of that—the technical cruelty of this Republic! Hunters and fishermen and rail splitters, with not money enough to provide themselves with rations one month in advance, and they were to remove to the Indian Territory and there maintain themselves for three years!

The Dawes Commission subsequently submitted about 2,500 names of identified full bloods, which enrollment was approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The vast majority of these full bloods were informed on February 14, 1903, that their time for removal would expire on August 14, 1903—March, April, May, June, July, August—six months. It was known that they were financially unable to go west under the requirements of the law, as the commission in its report had fully explained their "ignorant and impoverished condition." On March 3, 1903—giving only four months' time—as the Senator from Kansas will remember, Congress, under a motion of mine, which was adopted in the Indian Affairs Committee in the House, appropriated $20,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to aid in their removal.

"Now follow certain almost unbelievable facts, fully verified by the records of the Interior Department, by original documents, and by sworn statements. The Secretary did not designate any person or agent to do this work until July 20, 1903." They had to move on August 14. It gave them less than a month.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. "The agent they appointed arrived in Mississippi on July 27, 1903, 17 days before these 2,500 people, scattered over half the State of Mississippi and southern Louisiana, must, under the six-month requirement, be in the Choctaw Nation in the then Indian Territory."

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. On that day he had circulars printed and mailed to these people. The agent on that day had circulars printed and mailed to these people, notifying them of the necessity for their removal, and that they must be in Meridian, Miss., prepared to leave, by August 11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment. As these Choctaws lived a long distance from a post office—most of them lived in Leake County, without a railroad; a large number of them lived in Neshoba County, at that time without a railroad, though it now has one—ignorant, unable to read, unable to write, they could not see nor read nor understand notices of any description.

Mr. President, there is one other point to which I want to refer, and then I will yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, if he desires.

Capt. McKennon, of the State of Arkansas, was at that time chairman of the subcommission that went to the State of Mississippi to make this enrollment to "identify" these people as Mississippi Choctaws. Capt. McKennon and the two other members of that subcommission agreed to this rule of identification, because they were sensible men, and therefore knew a white man from a negro, and knew a negro from an Indian, and knew an Indian from either of the other two, to wit, that a full blood was entitled to identification and enrollment. There never had been any Indians in the State of Mississippi except Choctaws and a few Pascagoulas down on the seacoast, who never had gone beyond the fishery radius of the Gulf coast, and a few of the Natchez Tribe, on the southern part of the Mississippi, and of Chickasaws, in northwest Mississippi, who were early all removed to reservations. Whenever a full-blooded Indian presented himself to them, the Pascagoulas having passed out and died long ago, there being no Pascagoulas left alive, and all the others being removed, and all except the Choctaws having been the enemies of the English-speaking white man, they said, "There never have been any Indians in the State of Mississippi except the Chickasaws, in the northwest district, who all removed to the Indian Territory; the Pascagoulas, who are dead; the Natchez, who are dead or gone; and the Choctaws, who are left remaining there alive"; so that whenever a full-blooded Indian came they identified him as a Mississippi Choctaw, "the white man's friend," who was allowed to remain.

Can you imagine what the Interior Department did later? Why, Mr. President and Senators, the Interior Department decided that an ignorant Choctaw Indian—illiterate, impoverished, a hunter and a fisherman and a rail splitter—had to prove by affirmative and specific testimony that he was the descendant of a Choctaw in Mississippi living in 1830 and claiming as such under the Dancing Rabbit treaty.

Did you ever think about how many white men, intelligent, educated, could prove that they were descendants of somebody who lived in 1776? Did you ever think about how many white people there are who have kept family records could prove who were their great-great-grandfathers? Have you ever thought of how many could add to this evidence aliunde? It was not remarkable, then, when the ruling was made in the court out in Oklahoma, in the interest of the Oklahoma Choctaws, that these people must prove not only that they were full-blood Choctaw Indians living in the State of Mississippi, but that they were by specific testimony descendants of some Choctaw ancestor and ancestress living in 1830, that virtually none of them could prove it. The only men who could prove it were the men with a little splash of white blood in them, and their proof was suspected of perjury.

Now, Mr. President, I have paid my tribute to the Mississippi Choctaw Indians; and notwithstanding the fact that the chairman will not agree to reduce the amount from $300 to $200, I rest satisfied for the present with merely putting in a plea in this court for future consideration; and I give notice now that I will never again while I am in public life consent to another allotment to the Oklahoma Choctaws after this date—having the Senate behind me against your committee twice already upon the proposition, but not desiring now to take up the public time—I will never hereafter, I say, consent to another per capita allotment to the Oklahoma Choctaws until their brethren by blood and by national citizenship, by all laws of savage or semisavage Indian tribes, have been considered. The only reason why I consent to it now is that the chairman of this committee, in whom I have the very highest degree of personal confidence, assures me that there will be enough money left to take care of the rightful claims, I started to say, of my constituents—but they are not even my constituents; they are nobody's constituents on the surface of the earth, unless they are God's.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think the Senate must metaphorically lift its hat to the generosity and the chivalry of Mississippi's distinguished Senator, and both Senators; but ever since I have been in the Senate the senior Senator from Mississippi has been urging the claims of these illiterate, as he says, homeless Indians.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And honest.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no doubt they are honest. Their situation, Mr. President, appeals to me. These speeches which the Senator has made, not only to-day but at previous times, and the speeches which his colleague [Mr. VARDAMAN] has made appeal to my sense of justice. I believe now, as I have always believed, that Congress should do something for the Mississippi Choctaws. But, Mr. President, with the greatest respect—and I differ with my friend with considerable reluctance—with the greatest respect to him, I can not as a Senator vote to take money away from the Oklahoma Choctaws, when, according to the lights as I see them, I could not do so without violating a trust. That is a point of difference between the Senator and me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course he and I know that there are no better friends than he and I. Did not the Senator suggest to me not long ago, or did he—if I am mistaken, I hope he will state so—that the proper arena, or rather the proper treasury from which I ought to secure relief for these people, was the United States Treasury?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly; not the funds of the Indians.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In suggesting that, the Senator admitted that they had rights. Now, no ward ever had a right for his guardian to make up a deficiency due from another ward. I do not contend that these people have any claim against the United States Treasury. They have none. They have only the claim growing out of consanguinity as citizens of the Choctaw Nation. If they have not that, they have none. I myself can not now see how I could vote for an appropriation to them out of the United States Treasury unless I voted for it as a gratuity or a charity on the ground that they had been harshly dealt with.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, while I do not in any way concede, directly or indirectly, that the Mississippi Choctaws have any claim on this particular fund with which we are dealing to-day—I shall not go into the legal phase of it—I do want to read——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If they have not a claim on that, on what have they a claim?

Mr. ASHURST. Upon the Federal Treasury, just like any other homeless Indian; just as the homeless Indians in Nevada, for whom we appropriated $15,000 to-day to buy lands—the claim that any people would have on a Christian and an honest Nation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Have they any more claim than any other class of homeless, friendless people?

Mr. ASHURST. My opinion is that they have a claim, founded possibly in conscience, against the Federal Treasury, not against the money that belongs to the Oklahoma Choctaws, for the reason, among others, that article 2 of the treaty of 1830 says:

> The United States, under a grant specially to be made by the President of the United States, shall cause to be conveyed to the Choctaw Nation a tract of country west of the Mississippi River in fee simple to them and their descendants, to inure to them while they shall exist as a nation and live on it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is making a mistake there. I did at a previous session of the Senate offer an amendment, but I am now offering no amendment, and I am not offering it for two reasons. The first great reason is that this nation is in a situation where I do not want to defeat an Indian appropriation bill, although I have done it before, and the second reason is that I think there will be money enough back for these people to obtain justice after a while, and, third, because so many Senators are busy and absent who, when they come in without hearing debate, would say, "What is my vote?" and then vote with the committee. I am assured that there will be funds enough left, and I know when the Senator from Arizona assures me of it that he, at any rate, believes it, and I think he has sufficient knowledge of the situation to make his belief equivalent to a fact so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator for his very generous reference to myself. I hope to merit that. Briefly to answer his question as to the amount of the fund, I wish to say this bill distributes to the Choctaws——

Mr. WILLIAMS. In one word, I would like to add to what the Senator from Oklahoma said, to wit, that "the Choctaws in Oklahoma are dying while they are waiting for the allotment"; that these Choctaws in Mississippi are also dying while they are waiting for their allotment. The sanitary condition in Mississippi is a little better, perhaps, than in Oklahoma, and therefore not quite as large a percentage, but a percentage, in Mississippi have died and gone away "to rest under the shade of the river" with no satisfaction of their just claims and rights.

Mr. ASHURST. Permit me to give the figures as they have been made up for me and as I understand them, and I believe them to be correct. We are distributing under this bill $6,239,700 to the Choctaws and $1,260,800 to the Chickasaws, being a total of $7,500,500, leaving $24,003,454, so I am advised by the Indian Department, in cash and profit to the credit of these two tribes, one-fourth to the credit of the Chickasaws and three-fourths to the credit of the Choctaws. Those figures have been furnished to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How much will be left for the Choctaws?

Mr. ASHURST. Three-fourths of $24,003,454.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I shall take only a few moments of the time of the Senate, and would make no answer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], but I can not permit what I think is a very erroneous impression to be left on the mind of the Senate with regard to the Mississippi Choctaws. It is not true as a principle of law that consanguinity gives to the Mississippi Choctaws or to any nonresident Indians the right of a distributive share in the Choctaw property west. That principle has not been observed in other cases.

There are full-blood Seminoles in Florida who upon a claim of consanguinity could demand a part of the Seminole property in Oklahoma, but who make no such pretenses. There are full-blood Cherokees in North Carolina who on the theory of consanguinity could demand a part of the Cherokee property in Oklahoma. Full-blood Creeks in Alabama on such an absurd theory could demand participation in the property of the Oklahoma Creeks, but neither the eastern full-blood Creeks or Cherokees make any such unfair claim.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. OWEN. I do not wish to be interrupted, if the Senator please. The same principle—living with the tribe as a condition of citizenship—applies with regard to the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. OWEN. I hope the Senator will excuse me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am necessarily called to a subcommittee meeting.

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say that the difference between those cases and this is that the Dancing Rabbit treaty expressly reserved every right to the Mississippi Choctaw and citizenship in the Choctaw Nation except a share in the annuities. The Senator will remember that.

Mr. OWEN. I remember the treaty of 1830 very well, and that very treaty itself is a denial of the plea of consanguinity, because if consanguinity were sufficient it would not be necessary to have a statutory provision or a treaty reservation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a recognition of it by treaty, which makes it all the stronger.

Mr. OWEN. That is a statutory provision. So far was it true that consanguinity did not give this right of citizenship that when the Government of the United States, in its desire to move all the five tribes from the east of the Mississippi River to the west of the Mississippi River, expressly stipulated the Choctaws should agree to remove west—1830. The Mississippi full-blood Choctaws not being willing, that is, a considerable number of them not being willing, to move west of the Mississippi River at that time—1830—refused to make the treaty of 1830 unless there was an express provision put in the fourteenth article that the individuals who took land under the fourteenth article, amounting to 640 acres to an adult and a smaller amount to minors, should not lose thereby—that is, taking land in Mississippi under article 14—their right in the Choctaw Nation as citizens, but the treaty provided if they removed they should enjoy no part of the annuities. It was provided in that treaty that they should live five years in Mississippi and become citizens of the State. It was not contemplated by many of these people that they ever would move at all or repossess themselves of citizenship as they had reserved the right to do; others thought they might move later on. In point of fact, nearly all the original members either moved west or died, and it is now nearly a hundred years later that their descendents or those claiming to be their descendants, referred to in this loose way as Mississippi Choctaws, have the right to citizenship with the western Choctaws, even without removal, because their great-grandfathers stipulated that they should not lose their rights in the Choctaw Nation by their failure to move in 1830.

In point of fact, the "Mississippi Choctaws," under the statutes of the United States, comprise only those persons of proven Choctaw blood who moved west under the agreement of 1902 and were included as "Mississippi Choctaws" on a special roll under the terms and conditions of that particular agreement. The Indians in Mississippi may be of Choctaw blood, many of them probably are, but they may be of Creek, Chickasaw, Seminole, or Pascagoula Indians or of mixed tribes.

The Supreme Court of the United States in the so-called Cherokee case decided that the full-blood Cherokees in North Carolina who did not move to the west were not entitled to citizenship there; that if they desired to enjoy citizenship they must first move into the Cherokee country west and there be adopted into citizenship by the proper authorities.

The Choctaw-Chickasaw treaty of 1866 required all Choctaws seeking allotments to establish bona fide residence in the Choctaw-Chickasaw Nation.

When Congress came to divide up these lands and sent the Dawes Commission in 1893 to the Five Civilized Tribes, Congress passed some immediate legislation requiring all Indians of the Five Civilized Tribes seeking allotment to establish bona fide residence. In the Curtis Act of 1898 an express provision was inserted that no Indian should be enrolled by the Dawes Commission who had not previously to that time established residence in good faith in the tribe in which he claimed citizenship. I was then representing the Mississippi Choctaws and I asked an exception in their behalf in order that they might have time within which to make the removal and in which they might conform to the unbroken rule of residence. The Senator from Mississippi supported that proposal. I made the draft of the language myself and it became a part of the statute. It was put on the so-called Curtis Act by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] in the House, and a further time therefore was granted to the Mississippi Choctaws by that act. I made the most resolute effort to have Congress waive the requirement of removal and residence for the Mississippi Choctaws, and Congress was unwilling to do so and did not do so.

I pause to emphasize that the treaty of 1866 expressly required that in the contingency of the Choctaw and Chickasaw lands being allotted five years should be permitted within which Choctaws and Chickasaws residing east of the Mississippi River or elsewhere might be given an opportunity to reestablish their citizenship and become members of the tribe for allotment. It was the fixed policy of the United States to require removal and bona fide residence and no exception has ever been made to it in a single case.

The Dawes Commission was instructed by Congress in 1898 in the Curtis Act to identify persons claiming to be Mississippi Choctaws still living in Mississippi. In January, 1899, the Dawes Commission sent Capt. McKennon, who spent three weeks in Mississippi, and in that three weeks he identified 1,943 Choctaws, so called, 177 of whom were confessedly of mixed blood. He stated in his report that he found that these persons so identified and who appeared to be of Choctaw blood were not able to prove that their ancestors had complied with the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830, and that they were unable in the second place to prove that they themselves were the actual descendants of persons who claimed as Mississippi Choctaws to have taken lands under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830.

So their line of proof failed on two points; first, that their ancestors had complied; second, that they were descendants of such ancestors. Whoever their ancestors were they could prove nothing. They kept no records; they had no English patronymics; no baptismal register, no birth register, no death register, and they had no family register. They had to rely upon the memory of man, and after 70 years, when all the original fourteenth article claimants were all dead, it was impossible to make any proof. The consequence was that when this question came up in making the agreement of 1902 the Choctaw and Chickasaw authorities west drafted a provision that all persons duly identified as Mississippi—mark those words, duly identified—should be enrolled for an allotment on certain conditions of removal and residence.

The Dawes Commission at that very time had, upon a careful and critical examination and under the influence of legal and technical arguments of attorneys representing the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations west, already determined that these people were not duly or legally identified, and in their report of May 24, 1902, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior they found that none of the people enrolled in 1899 as Mississippi Choctaws could prove themselves entitled under the law, and that they were not legally identified, or entitled to identification, with the exception of five persons, Josephine Hussey et al. I think there are some five persons embraced in that family. In that contingency an appeal was made by me to the Congress and the executive department on behalf of the Mississippi Choctaws, as they were entirely unable to prove their case. An appeal was made to the Congress of the United States that, in view of their ignorance, in view of their poverty, in view of their honesty, they might be permitted to have the question of proof waived in behalf of those who were actually of the full blood. That applied only to the heads of families and not to the children of the heads of families, because a child of a half blood or of a mixed blood was not entitled under that agreement, and it was so held afterwards by the Attorney General in construing it.

So this rigid rule of legal proof was waived in behalf of all the Mississippi Choctaws who could show that they were full bloods, and on the condition that within six months after identification they could remove and be allotted, not as the Senator from Mississippi states, in six months from the date of the agreement, but within six months after they had been identified—a very different thing. Some of them were not identified for two or three or four years. After they were identified they were notified they could move with safety and establish bona fide residence, and not be under the threat of being held as intruders, as the Senator from Mississippi stated. The Senator is mistaken about that. The law did not require them to move and then be held as intruders, as he states. When they did move they moved after they had been identified for removal and could not be held as intruders. The statement which the Senator from Mississippi made was due to forgetfulness on his part.

In February, 1896, he wrote a letter to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs asking what the right of the Mississippi Choctaws was, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs notified him that they would be regarded as intruders if they moved to the Choctaw country west before they had been recognized by the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation as entitled to citizenship. That letter of 1896 the Senator confuses with 1902, 1903, and 1904, and he is entirely in error. Of course, the Senator did not intend it. But these people who did remove under the agreement of 1902 removed only after they were identified under that agreement, and they had the right given to them then of property which is estimated by the best authority for 1,634 enrolled and allotted Mississippi Choctaws as worth $15,000,000. Over 1,600 of them did remove and establish bona fide residence, and now, after they have been given the time to move from 1896 up to 1907, Congress, by an act in 1906, directed the rolls which had been under consideration for 10 years to be closed as of March 4, 1907, 9 years ago. They had 11 years theretofore in which to move, establish bona fide residence, and to be recognized. They did not choose to avail themselves of it. It was not because of poverty, because there were very many companies of men who were engaged in leasing the Choctaw lands for grazing and for agricultural purposes who scoured Mississippi urging these identified Indians to move to Oklahoma, and those of them who did not come exercised their own free will and option in refusing to come, because they preferred the beautiful country where they had been so long living; they preferred their local attachments to allotments in Oklahoma, and their love for the Mississippi valleys and streams was stronger than the desire for gain, and they refused to go west.

Now, after these rolls have been open from 1896 to 1907—11 years—and have been closed for 9 years—20 years in all—the Senators from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS and Mr. VARDAMAN] show their loyalty and affection for the Mississippi Choctaws by pleading for the reopening of the rolls closed 9 years, and pleading that the Choctaws west shall be required to divide with persons in Mississippi (who claim to be Choctaws and can not prove it) the property which they bought and paid for and which they earned by living on it for nearly a century, because that land was first granted to them in 1820, not 1830, and the patent issued on condition that they should live on the land.

I wish to put into the RECORD with regard to this matter several statements by the attorney of the Choctaw Nation, which gives in brief quotations from the treaties and quotations from the decisions of the courts and Indian department; the unanimous report of the special committee of the House who examined this case at very great length. The House and Senate have heard this ad nauseam and decided it adversely on various occasions. Four different secretaries have decided against this claim of the Mississippi Choctaws—Republican secretaries and Democratic secretaries—and there is no longer any ground whatever either of law or morals or of ethics why this matter should be reopened. Nor have the Mississippi Choctaws any claim on earth against the United States except the claim of a dependent, impoverished people for whom the United States has always shown generous care. On that ground I would favor dealing with generosity with the Mississippi Choctaws, but not on any ground of a legal right or a moral right to any further concessions than have been made in the premises.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF P. J. HURLEY, NATIONAL ATTORNEY FOR THE CHOCTAW NATION.

IN RE ENROLLMENT MATTERS.

The following is a brief statement outlining generally the history and the present status of the claims which are now being presented by persons for enrollment as citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations.

MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

On March 10, 1899, the Dawes Commission reported that there were extremely few, if any, Indians in Mississippi who could prove their right to enrollment as citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of September 27, 1830. At that time there was much agitation for the enrollment of the so-called Mississippi Choctaws, and in the agreement between the Choctaws and Chickasaws and the United States, approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641), a compromise was reached on the Mississippi Choctaw claim.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws agreed to enroll, as a gratuity, all full-blood Choctaws who then resided in Mississippi if they would remove to and establish a residence in the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nations.

Under this agreement 1,634 Mississippi Choctaws were enrolled and received allotments in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. With a few exceptions, the entire 1,634 were enrolled under the full-blood rule of evidence and were not required to prove a right to enrollment. The approximate value of the property received by these 1,634 persons is $15,000,000. This is the price paid by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for a settlement of the Mississippi Choctaw claim in 1902.

In consideration for this concession on the part of the Choctaws and Chickasaws the Government agreed to close the rolls, to sell the residue of tribal property, and distribute the proceeds per capita among the enrolled members of the tribes. The United States Government has not performed its part of the agreement.

The agreement of 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641), above referred to, contained the following provision:

"No person whose name does not appear upon the rolls prepared as herein provided shall be entitled in any manner to participate in the distribution of the common property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, and those whose names appear therein shall participate in the manner set forth in this agreement."

The act of April 26, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 137), declared the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations closed in the following language:

"Provided, That the rolls of the tribes (Choctaw and Chickasaw) affected by this act shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any persons after that date."

The rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations are therefore closed and have been closed since the 4th day of March, 1907.

The claim which is now being presented by the proponents of the legislation for the enrollment of Mississippi Choctaws has heretofore been fully considered and decided adversely to the so-called Mississippi Choctaws by the following tribunals and officials:

(1) 1897: The Federal courts of Indian Territory. (Jack Amos v. Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. Jurisdiction affirmed by Supreme Court, Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S., 445.)

(2) 1898: The Dawes Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes. (See reports Jan. 28, 1898, and Mar. 10, 1899.)

(3) 1902: The Choctaw and Chickasaw people and the United States Government in the preparation of the supplemental agreement of July 1, 1902. (32 Stat. L., 641.)

(4) 1906: The Congress of the United States, which by the act of April 26, 1906, finally directed the closing of the rolls March 4, 1907. (34 Stat. L., 137.)

(5) 1912: Hon. Samuel Adams, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior. (See report dated July 2, 1913, addressed to Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, House of Representatives.)

(6) 1915: A subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives. (See report H. R. No. 12586, dated Jan. 2, 1915.)

(7) 1915: Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior. (See report dated Jan. 8, 1915, addressed to Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives.)

The United States Government is bound by solemn agreement to sell the residue of Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal property and distribute the proceeds among the enrolled members of the tribes. Fulfillment of this obligation has been, and is being, prevented by the representatives of the alleged Mississippi Choctaws and by the proponents of legislation intended to be of assistance to the alleged Mississippi Choctaws.

It has been repeatedly shown that the Mississippi Choctaws have no legal, equitable, or moral right to share in the property of the Choctaw Nation.

CLAIMANTS FOR CITIZENSHIP OTHER THAN MISSISSIPPI CHOCTAWS.

It has been contended by attorneys and agents representing claimants for enrollment as citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations that there was a period immediately before the closing of the rolls on March 4, 1907, during which action on all pending cases was rushed, and that the applicants were not given the benefit of a cautious consideration of their cases.

This contention is very misleading, because it is a fact that the cases which were considered during the so-called "rush period" had been considered before—some of them had been considered and determined a number of times, and were pending on motion to review, or on appeal from the order denying a motion to review. Very few, if any of them, were pending on a direct appeal from the original decision of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, and none of them were pending for a consideration on the merits of the cases—the merits having theretofore been passed upon by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.

All of these matters have been under consideration almost continuously since the closing of the rolls March 4, 1907. At one time the agitation for the reopening of the rolls of the Five Civilized Tribes became so great that the matter was brought to the attention of the President of the United States, and afer having fully considered the matter, President Taft wrote the following letter to Richard C. Adams, an attorney at law, of Washington, D. C.:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 20, 1910.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter which you visited my office with Mr. Creager, of Oklahoma, to hand me. Your letter deals with the question of claims of Indians against the Government. Of course I am in favor of facilitating the hearing of those claims as much as possible; and as to the second, I am opposed to the reopening of the Indian citizenship rolls. It seems to me it would be like opening a Pandora's box. Exceptional cases that present great equities might be considered by special legislation.

In conclusion, I can only say that no one is more anxious than I am to close out these Indian disputes and put Indians on the basis of other citizens, in so far as it is possible to do so without exposing those who are uneducated and unable to look after their own interests to the fraudulent manipulation of unprincipled persons.

Sincerely, yours,

WM. H. TAFT.

Mr. RICHARD C. ADAMS,
Bond Building, Washington, D. C.

(See H. R. Rept. No. 2273, 61st Cong., 3d sess.)

It will be noted that the President was opposed to the reopening of the rolls, but said "exceptional cases that present great equities might be considered by special legislation."

On February 12, 1910, Hon. R. A. Ballinger, then Secretary of the Interior, addressed a letter to Hon. MOSES E. CLAPP, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate, in which he made the following recommendation:

"In conclusion, I am constrained to believe, and therefore recommend, that the rolls be not opened up, but that proper legal authority be given the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the rolls those Indians (about 52 in number) whose applications were approved by the Commissioner to the Five Civilized Tribes and were transmitted to Washington before the 4th of March, 1907, but did not reach the department until after the rolls were closed; and, furthermore, that proper authority be given the Secretary of the Interior to examine and place upon the rolls the minor orphan children, incompetents, and Indians in incarceration whose claims were not presented in due time for adjudication. I am informed that this class numbers about 200. No one seems to have taken the responsibility of presenting the claims of this class for consideration. They could not look after their own interests." (See S. Doc. No. 1139, 62d Cong., 3d sess.)

The Secretary in this letter recommends against the reopening of the rolls, but favors special legislation for the relief of 52 persons, whose names were omitted from the rolls through inadvertence, and recommends that authority be given for the examination of the cases of certain other persons, not to exceed 200 in all.

Both President Taft and Secretary Ballinger, after having fully considered the question that is now under consideration, both decided against the reopening of the rolls. They considered, however, that there were a few exceptional cases wherein the applicants had strong equities and were in justice entitled to some relief.

Two investigations were made by the Interior Department to ascertain the names of all persons who were legally or equitably entitled to enrollment as citizens of the Five Civilized Tribes and whose names were not upon the finally approved rolls.

With the consent and upon the advice of the attorneys for the tribes, Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN, a Member of the United States Senate from Oklahoma, addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior asking that he be furnished with the names of persons who, upon investigation, had been found apparently equitably entitled to enrollment.

On April 24, 1914, Senator OWEN received the following letter from Hon. A. A. Jones, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, April 24, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your request of April 22, I am inclosing herewith a list of the names of persons who, upon the investigation heretofore made, have been found apparently equitably entitled to enrollment on the rolls of the various tribes composing the Five Civilized Tribes, of Oklahoma. The data as to each of these names have heretofore been submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, and may be found in Senate Document No. 1139, Sixty-second Congress, third session.

This list contains the names of all those whom the department has found equitably entitled to enrollment, omitting, as suggested, the names of newborn Choctaw freedmen.

Very truly, yours,

A. A. JONES,
First Assistant Secretary.

Hon. ROBERT L. OWEN,
United States Senate.

The list transmitted to Senator OWEN with the above letter contained the names of 318 persons. The Indian appropriation bill which became a law August 1, 1914 (38 Stat. L., 582), carried a provision authorizing the enrollment in the respective tribes of the persons whose names appear upon said list. All of said persons have since been enrolled and have received their distributive share of the property of the tribe to which they belong.

The letter of Secretary Jones, and the list, are set forth in full in Senate Document No. 478, Sixty-third Congress, third session.

Inasmuch as it has been repeatedly shown that the so-called Mississippi Choctaws have no right to enrollment, and inasmuch as all those residing in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations who appear to have been equitably entitled to enrollment have been enrolled, the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes can not understand why the Government of the United States does not comply with the terms of its agreement made with them in 1902.

There appears to be no just reason why the residue of tribal property should not be sold and the proceeds arising from such sale distributed per capita among the enrolled members of the tribes in compliance with the terms of the treaty of 1902.

A considerable amount of tribal property has been sold and the money is now on deposit. There have been partial crop failures in Oklahoma for the past four years—in some sections the failure was almost complete. There are many Choctaws and Chickasaws who have been, and are now, in destitute circumstances and are in dire need of the money that belongs to them. The United States Government should at once pay them the money that is now on deposit to their credit.

For this reason we respectfully request the enactment of the provision now carried in the Indian appropriation bill, authorizing a distribution of all funds now to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, as shown by memorandum of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs transmitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives on December 15, 1915. Said memorandum is in full as follows:

"The books of the Indian Office show that on December 15, 1915, there was in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaw Nation, Okla., the sum of $3,360,620.11, and in banks in Oklahoma to the credit of said nation the sum of $4,071,733.13, the total Choctaw tribal fund being $7,432,353.24. The books of the Indian Office further show that on said date there was in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Chickasaw Nation, Okla., the sum of $778,471.51, and in banks in Oklahoma to the credit of said Chickasaw Nation the sum of $1,143,638.97, the total Chickasaw tribal fund being $1,922,110.48, the aggregate fund of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations being $9,354,463.72. The deferred payments on the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal lands heretofore sold approximate $6,000,000 and the estimated value of the unsold land and other property of said nations approximates $16,149,491.23. Thus the total funds and other property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations approximates $31,503,954.95.

"Twenty thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine enrolled citizens of the Choctaw Nation are entitled to share in any per capita distribution of the funds of said nation, and 6,304 enrolled citizens of the Chickasaw Nation are entitled to share in any per capita distribution of the tribal funds of that nation.

"For the purpose of further carrying out the Atoka agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes (see act of Congress of June 28, 1898, 30 Stat., L., 495, 512, 513) and the supplemental agreement with said Indian tribes adopted by the act of Congress of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641–654), and in view of the general needy conditions existing in said nations it is recommended that an appropriation be made out of the Choctaw tribal funds for a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Choctaw Tribe or to the heirs of deceased enrolled members, and out of the Chickasaw tribal funds for a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Chickasaw Tribe or to the heirs of deceased enrolled members of said tribe, and that it be provided that such payments shall be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and that in cases where the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or their heirs are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians.

"Inasmuch as a $100 per capita payment was made to the enrolled members of the Chickasaw Nation under the act of August 1, 1914, at which time no payment was made to the enrolled members of the Choctaw Nation, it is therefore recommended that the enrolled members of the Choctaw Nation should be paid $100 per capita more than the amount provided for the enrolled members of the Chickasaw Nation. These payments would be made from the tribal funds belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and would not be a tax on the Federal Treasury."

P. J. HURLEY,
National Attorney for the Choctaw Nation.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3, 1915.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Indian appropriation bill, which is now being considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate, contains a provision authorizing a per capita payment of $200 to the enrolled members of the Choctaw Nation and a payment of $100 to the enrolled members of the Chickasaw Nation.

Every member of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes is the owner of an equal undivided interest in the tribal property of both tribes. The Chickasaws received a per capita payment of $100 last year. The Choctaws received no payment. The provision now carried in the bill, if enacted, will equalize the amount received from tribal funds by the Choctaws and Chickasaws.

I am advised that an effort will be made by those who espouse the claim of the so-called Mississippi Choctaws to prevent the enactment of the provision referred to and that an attempt will be made to reopen the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for the enrollment of the alleged Mississippi Choctaws.

I call your attention to the fact that on March 10, 1899, the Dawes Commission reported that there were extremely few, if any, Indians in Mississippi who could prove a right to enrollment as citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. At that time there was much agitation for the enrollment of the so-called Mississippi Choctaws, and in the agreement approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641), between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and the United States a compromise was reached on the Mississippi Choctaw claims.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws agreed to enroll, as a gratuity, all full-blood Choctaw Indians who then resided in Mississippi if they would remove to the Choctaw or Chickasaw Nations.

Under this agreement 1,634 Mississippi Choctaws were enrolled and received allotments in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. With a few exceptions the entire 1,634 were enrolled under the full-blood rule of evidence and were not required to prove a right to enrollment. The approximate value of the property received by these 1,634 persons is $15,000,000. This is the price paid by the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for a settlement of the Mississippi Choctaw claim in 1902.

In consideration for this concession on the part of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, the Government agreed to close the rolls, to sell the residue of tribal property, and distribute the proceeds per capita among the enrolled members of the tribes. The United States Government has not performed its part of the agreement.

The agreement of 1902, above referred to, contained the following provision:

"No person whose name does not appear upon the rolls prepared as herein provided shall be entitled in any manner to participate in the distribution of the common property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes, and those whose names appear therein shall participate in the manner set forth in this agreement."

The act of April 26, 1906, declared the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations closed in the following language:

"Provided, That the rolls of the tribes (Choctaw and Chickasaw) affected by this act shall be fully completed on or before the 4th day of March, 1907, and the Secretary of the Interior shall have no jurisdiction to approve the enrollment of any person after that date."

The rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations are therefore closed, and have been closed since the 4th day of March, 1907.

The claim which is now being presented by the proponents of the legislation for the enrollment of Mississippi Choctaws has heretofore been fully considered and decided adversely to the so-called Mississippi Choctaws by the following tribunals and officials:

1. 1897: The Federal courts of Indian Territory. (Jack Amos v. Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations. Jurisdiction affirmed by Supreme Court, Stephens v. Cherokee Nation, 174 U. S., 445.)
2. 1898: The Dawes Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes. (See reports Jan. 28, 1898, and Mar. 10, 1899.)
3. 1902: The Choctaw and Chickasaw people, and the United States Government in the preparation of the supplemental agreement of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641).
4. 1906: The Congress of the United States, which by the act of April 26, 1906, finally directed the closing of the rolls March 4, 1907.
5. 1912: Hon. Samuel Adams, First Assistant Secretary of the Interior. (See report of July 2, 1912.)
6. 1915: A subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives. (Copy of report attached.)
7. 1915: Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior. (Copy of report dated Jan. 8, 1915, attached.)

The United States Government is bound by solemn agreement to sell the residue of Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal property and distribute the proceeds among the enrolled members of the tribes. Fulfillment of this obligation has been and is being prevented by the representatives of the alleged Mississippi Choctaws and by the proponents of legislation intended to be of assistance to the alleged Mississippi Choctaws.

It has been repeatedly shown that the Mississippi Choctaws have no legal, equitable, or moral right to share in the property of the Choctaw Nation.

A considerable amount of tribal property has been sold and the money is now on deposit. There have been partial crop failures in Oklahoma for the past four years—in some sections the failure was almost complete. There are many Choctaws and Chickasaws who have been, and are now, in destitute circumstances and are in dire need of the money that belongs to them. The United States Government should at once pay them this money in compliance with the terms of the agreement of 1902.

In view of these circumstances we respectfully solicit your assistance in preventing the reopening of the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and in securing the enactment of a law authorizing a per capita payment.

Yours, respectfully,

P. J. HURLEY,
National Attorney, Choctaw Nation.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR ON THE HARRISON BILL (H. R. 12586).

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 8, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: I have the honor to refer herein to a communication of August 12, 1914, from Hon. C. D. CARTER, then acting chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives, with which was inclosed a copy of H. R. 12586, entitled "A bill to reopen the rolls of the Choctaw-Chickasaw Tribes and to provide for the awarding of the rights secured to certain persons by the fourteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, of date September 27, 1830." He also referred to H. R. 4536 and requested that I consider the two bills together and make a report thereon.

Upon examination of H. R. 4536, I find that said bill is identical with H. R. 19213, introduced by Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi in the Sixty-second Congress, second session, upon which last-mentioned bill the department submitted to your committee a report dated July 2, 1912. H. R. 12586, introduced in the present Congress by Mr. HARRISON, is a similar bill to the above-mentioned bills, except that in said H. R. 12586 an additional paragraph is included in section 2 to provide for the enrollment of all persons who were identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission in its report of March 10, 1899, commonly known as the McKennon roll, and of all persons identified as Mississippi Choctaws by the Dawes Commission from March 10, 1899, to March 4, 1907, whose identification was approved by the Secretary of the Interior but whose names did not appear on the final citizenship rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations.

The claims of Mississippi Choctaw Indians to recognition as citizens of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma and to share in the property of said nation are based upon article 14 of the treaty of September 27, 1830. (7 Stat. L., 335.) Pursuant to the terms of the treaty, a large number of Choctaws were transferred from Mississippi to the country west, later known as Indian Territory. These Choctaws who so removed and their descendants now constitute the main body of what is known as the Choctaw Nation. There were, however, a considerable number of Choctaws who remained behind in Mississippi, some of them under the provisions of article 14 above mentioned.

Said article 14 provided that the person who claimed thereunder should not lose the privilege of a Choctaw citizen, but if they ever removed were not to be entitled to any part of the Choctaw annuity. The Indians who remained behind under the provisions of said article 14 received either land in Mississippi or scrip, which gave the applicants the right to enter upon public lands in certain Southern States. A part of said scrip, however, was later commuted by a money payment. Some of the fourteenth-article claimants later made their way west and joined the main body of the tribe in the Indian Territory. The Choctaw Council by various acts recognized the right of said absentee Mississippi Choctaws to remove to the nation, and actually invited them to do so.

Under the provisions of the Atoka agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes contained in the act of Congress of June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 495), the supplemental agreement contained in the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641), and later acts of Congress for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said agreements, the claims of individual Mississippi Choctaw Indians to be identified and to be enrolled as entitled to share in the property of the Choctaw Nation were fully considered by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes and by the department after full hearing, at which the claimants had ample opportunity to present all the evidence which they could procure in support of their claims. Very few claimants were able to prove descent from an ancestor who received or applied for benefits under the provisions of article 14 of the treaty of 1830.

The history of the Dawes Commission enrollment work relative to Mississippi Choctaw claimants is very fully set out in a communication of April 14, 1914, from William O. Beall, at one time secretary of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes. A copy thereof is inclosed for your information.

For your further information as to the history of the Mississippi Choctaw claims and of the department action in the preparation of the final rolls there is inclosed a copy of department letter of July 2, 1912, to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives.

Judge William H. H. Clayton in his decision in the case of Jack Amos v. The Choctaw Nation, a copy of which may be found in the appendix of the annual report of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1901, said that no treaty or acts of the Choctaw Council or of any officer of the Choctaw Council since the treaty of 1830 could be cited, or at least he had not found them, whereby any right or privilege had been conferred, granted, or recognized in or to a Mississippi Choctaw so long as he remained away from his people, and that no right was recognized or conferred upon such absent Indian except upon the condition that he should remove to the nation, and the right was not to be consummated or enjoyed until actual removal.

Mississippi Choctaw Indians who, while the opportunity was theirs under the privileges accorded them, refused to emigrate with the tribe to the new country west, and who never shared in the burdens and hardships of the pioneer life incident to the establishment of the new tribal government west of the Mississippi, have at this late date (now that the tribal property of the Choctaw Nation made valuable by the emigrants is being divided per capita among the enrolled recognized citizens of the nation) no equitable right to share in said property.

With respect to the persons who were identified by the Dawes Commission as Mississippi Choctaws under the provisions of the act of Congress of June 28, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 495), but who failed to remove and make settlement in the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, as required by the act of Congress of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641, secs. 41, 42, 43, and 44), it may be said that, irrespective of their unfortunate condition of poverty and ignorance, there is no ground, legal or equitable, for holding the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations responsible for the failure of said identified persons to comply with the law as to removal and settlement. No obligation rested upon the United States to provide means for the removal of such Indians.

Referring to the class of claimants whose names were contained in an identification roll submitted by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes on March 10, 1899, but never approved by the Secretary of the Interior, your attention is invited to the fact that the commission soon recognized the inaccuracy and incompleteness of that roll and requested the department to disregard it and to return the same to the commission. In order that there might be no doubt as to the standing of said roll, it was disapproved by the department on March 1, 1907. The larger part of the persons whose names were contained on that disapproved roll were afterwards placed on the approved identification rolls, and those who complied with the law as to removal and settlement were enrolled on the final rolls of Mississippi Choctaw Indians.

In the investigation and examination of Mississippi Choctaw claims made in 1900 and the years following by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes every effort that was possible to be made was made by said commission to reach all persons who had any equitable claim to recognition as Mississippi Choctaws, and especially to find those who were full-blood Choctaw Indians.

H. R. 4536 and 12586 in effect provide, so far as the Mississippi Choctaw claimants are concerned, a general reopening of the rolls of the Choctaw Nation, necessitating a review of all the cases which had been adversely decided by the United States courts, the Department of the Interior, and the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, as well as the consideration of claims not heretofore presented or considered, and empower the Secretary of the Interior to determine the rights of the claimants upon such evidence as may be produced by the applicants, without regard to any adverse judgment or decision heretofore rendered by any court or commission to the Five Civilized Tribes or the Department of the Interior, and without regard to any condition or disability heretofore imposed by any act of Congress.

The records of the department show the Mississippi Choctaw claimants have been to an unusual extent the victims of numerous extortionate contracts, and the correspondence in many cases indicates that contracts were obtained through misrepresentations as to the facts, and in some cases that such contracts were obtained from claimants who believe that the persons obtaining the contracts were Government agents. Your attention is invited to the report of Inspector McLaughlin, of this department, which report appears in print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 10, 1914, commencing on page 13022.

Referring to section 9 of said bills, I am of the opinion that, in view of the large amount of tribal property yet to be disposed of and of other matters affecting the tribes, it would be advisable to abolish the tribal organization of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations at the present time.

In view of the facts as presented to me, I am of the opinion that no legislation should be enacted for the reopening of the rolls of the Choctaw Nation for the benefit of the Mississippi Choctaw claimants.

Very truly, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

REPORT ON H. R. 12586.

JANUARY 2, 1915.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman House Committee on Indian Affairs,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your subcommittee appointed to investigate and report on H. R. 12586 begs leave to submit the following observations:

A careful and painstaking investigation of all treaties, laws, and other records bearing on this claim, including hearings lasting from April 1, 1914, until August 27, 1914, was gone into by your committee.

H. R. 12586 directs:

1. The Secretary of the Interior to enroll certain Mississippi Choctaws upon the rolls of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma, with a full participation in their tribal estate.

2. To reopen the Choctaw rolls for the adjudication of 20,000 or more alleged claimants.

There are some Choctaws still remaining in Mississippi who have persistently refused and successfully resisted all efforts of the Federal Government and the Choctaw Nation to have them move west and affiliate with the tribe.

The testimony before the subcommittee discloses many thousands of persons of doubtful descent, African and other, living in Mississippi and surrounding States, who have attempted to assert claims as Choctaw Indians.

Such Indians of real Choctaw blood as still reside in Mississippi appear to take little interest in the claims asserted by their alleged attorneys. On the other hand, those claiming remote Indian blood and of doubtful descent have manifested much interest in being enrolled and sharing in a division of the Choctaw funds in Oklahoma.

The contention of these latter seems to have been inspired and augmented by certain attorneys who have sent agents among these people advising them that they were Indians and taking contracts for their enrollment for a contingent fee of from 30 to 40 per cent of recovery, and in many instances a small cash retainer in addition.

According to statements and admissions of these attorneys and their agents, two firms alone, those of Cantwell & Crews, of St. Louis, Mo., and Ballinger & Lee, of Washington City, D. C., and Ardmore, Okla., hold contracts with 15,596 individuals, carrying provisions for fees aggregating $10,882,815.

The testimony further shows that a syndicate for the purpose of securing the enrollment of Mississippi Choctaws and a participation in the tribal estate of the western Choctaws has been formed under the name "the Texas-Oklahoma Investment Co.," capitalized at $100,000, $25,000 of which has been paid in and used. The directors of this corporation are S. L. Hurlbut, of El Campo, Tex.; H. Masterson and W. A. Smith, of Houston, Tex.; and T. B. Crews and H. J. Cantwell, of St. Louis, Mo.

This claim of the Mississippi Choctaw attorneys for enrollment of their clients and participation in the Choctaw Nation's estate is by no means a new contention. The claim was, under direction of law, fully adjudicated by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes (H. Doc. 274, 55th Cong., 2d sess.) and afterwards by the Federal court, to which appeal was taken (Jack Amos et al. v. The Choctaw Nation, Decisions of United States Courts in Indian Territory, 465), both decisions being adverse to the Mississippi Choctaw contention for enrollment.

In rejecting the claim of nonresident Mississippi Choctaws the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes said in part:

"This historical review of the acquisition of this territory by the Choctaw Nation and its subsequent legal relations to it makes it clear in the opinion of this commission that the Mississippi Choctaws are not under their treaties entitled to all rights of Choctaw citizenship except an interest in the Choctaw annuities and still continue their residence and citizenship in Mississippi." (H. Doc. 274, 55th Cong., 2d sess.)

In affirming the decision the United States District Court for the Central District of Indian Territory closed its decision with the following paragraph:

"To permit men with, perchance, but a strain of Choctaw blood in their veins, who, 65 years ago, broke away from their kindred and their nation, and during that time, or the most of it, have been exercising the rights of citizenship and doing homage to the sovereignty of another nation and have become strangers to the people, to reach forth their hands from their distant and alien homes and lay hold on a part of the public domain, the common property of the people, and appropriate to their own use, would be unjust and inequitable. It is, therefore, the opinion of the court that the absent Mississippi Choctaws are not entitled to be enrolled as citizens of the Choctaw Nation. The action of the Dawes Commission is therefore affirmed, and a decree will be entered for the Choctaw Nation." (Jack Amos et al. v. The Choctaw Nation, Decisions of United States Courts in Indian Territory, 465.)

An apeal was taken from these decisions by the attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws to the Supreme Court of the United States and the Jack Amos case was dismissed upon motion of the attorneys for the Mississippi Choctaws (190 U. S., 873).

Several years subsequent to the date of these decisions excluding the Mississippi Choctaws from enrollment this matter was again taken up and readjusted by the legally constituted authorities of the Federal Government and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, by which agreement the Mississippi Choctaws were given additional time for identification and establishment of bona fide residence in the Choctaw Nation in Indian Territory. (Supplemental agreement, "An act to ratify and affirm the agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, etc.," approved July 1, 1902.)

The Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma has dealt justly and liberally with the Mississippi Choctaws, always granting them full citizenship in their nation, with all emoluments thereto, whenever they would agree to affiliate with the tribe, and the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma is under no legal, equitable, or moral obligation to enroll the Mississippi Choctaws as citizens of the tribe in the West at this time.

By the agreements negotiated between the Federal Government and the Choctaw Nation, all native western Choctaws were required to be on the reservation by June 28, 1898, or stand debarred from enrollment and participation in the tribal estate forever thereafter, and this rule has been strictly adhered to.

The time for establishment of residence on the reservation was extended to the Mississippi Choctaw claimants until July 1, 1903, giving the Mississippi Choctaws five years to move on the reservation after the time for establishment of such residence had been closed to the native Choctaws.

After 11 years were consumd by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes in making up the rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations such rolls were affirmatively closed by action of Congress on March 4, 1907.

The rolls of the Choctaw Nation were held open to the Mississippi Choctaws from 1830 until March 4, 1907, giving the Mississippi Choctaws 77 years in which to complete enrollment with full benefits of citizenship.

The Federal Government as such is neither legally nor equitably obligated to enroll Mississippi Choctaws with the Choctaws west, and is under only such moral obligation to the Mississippi Choctaws as is due to dependent North American Indians who were originally occupants and owners of the soil and who have been deprived of their patrimony by white settlers.

The passage of H. R. 12586 would completely upset and undo 11 years of careful, painstaking work of the Interior Department in settling the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes, turn the wheels of progress backwards for more than 20 years, and, as has been said by President Taft, "open up a Pandora's box of troubles, which the life of the present generation might not see closed."

The passage of H. R. 12586 would doubtless result in stupendous claims of millions of dollars against the Federal Government on the part of the Oklahoma Choctaws, because of a division of their funds among persons whom the Federal commissions and Federal courts have decided were not entitled thereto.

Its passage would lend encouragement to grafting attorneys with contracts for enormous attorneys' fees, running into millions of dollars, and hold out inducement for procuring additional contracts from spurious claimants.

Your subcommittee therefore recommends that the Harrison bill (H. R. 12586) be not favorably reported by the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

Respectfully submitted.

C. D. CARTER, Chairman.
J. D. POST.
ROBT. P. HILL.
P. P. CAMPBELL.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate. I have already detained the Senate 12 minutes, and that is long enough on this threadbare pretension.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, this question is old, and any discussion of it will be a twice-told tale, vexing the dull ears of a very tired Senate, I know, and I am not going to add to the discomfort of Senators by indulging in a lot of fruitless talk.

My colleague, the senior Senator from Mississippi, has covered the ground very thoroughly. The equity of the Mississippi Choctaw in this fund is, to my mind, unquestionable. He probably failed to go to Oklahoma according to the terms of the law, but the United States can not afford to take advantage of that. He is the ward of the Government, and it is the duty of the Government to take care of and protect his interests. Any other view of the question is, to my mind, untenable and indefensible.

I had intended to move to amend the bill by striking out "$300" and inserting "$200," to be paid out per capita to the Choctaw Indians in Oklahoma. There seem to be, however, some sort of agreement or understanding among the friends of the poor, old, indigent, homeless, slandered, and abandoned Mississippi Choctaw to permit this bill to go through without amendment, trusting to God and the generosity of the American Congress to do something for him in the future. To my mind, his treatment is a crime against humanity—a blot upon the pages of American legislative history.

I do not think Congress can be or will be pardoned for the treatment the Choctaw Indian has received; but, as was so graphically and so eloquently stated by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], he has no voice in the Government; he is merely flotsam and jetsam on the sea of life. He is dying out very rapidly, and it will only be a few years before there will not be any of these Indians left; but I suppose the only thing we can do now is merely to wait and hope—hope, if for nothing more, that if he is denied justice in this world he may find it with compound interest in the realm of the happy hunting ground across the great divide.

I do not want to deny to the Oklahoma Choctaws their rights. They are interested in a part of this fund. It is the duty of the United States Government to give it to them; and if Congress should at any time come to a consciousness of its injustice, or if the Congress should be so moved by an outraged conscience as to do them justice, I suppose there will be enough of the corpus of the fund left in the hands of the Government to give the Mississippi Choctaws what they are entitled to. With this short statement, Mr. President, I shall permit the wrong to be perpetrated without further comment, because I am sure that further comment would avail nothing.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, as no amendment has been proposed to strike out the provision for the per capita payment I do not feel under any obligation to discuss the merits of this measure at this time. On a previous occasion I exhausted the subject and exhausted the Senate by such a discussion. I then undertook to show that the Government of the United States had on three several occasions undertaken to adjust the claims on the part of the Mississippi Choctaws at the expense of a great deal of land and at the expense of a great deal of money. I undertook to show that this claim on the part of the Mississippi Choctaws had been repeatedly considered and repeatedly rejected. I am willing to deal justly with the Mississippi Choctaws; I am even willing to deal generously with them, but not at the expense of the Oklahoma Choctaws. Further than that, I have nothing to submit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, at the top of page 71, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Seminole Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribe, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribe in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, $300 per capita: Provided, That said payment shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That in cases where such enrolled members or their heirs are Indians who belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members or their heirs as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act. There is hereby appropriated a sum not to exceed $2,000 out of the funds of said Seminole Tribe for the payment of salaries and other expenses of said per capita payment or payments.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before we leave the matter of the per capita payment of these Indians I wish to have inserted in the RECORD a statement made by the Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs to the House committee.

Mr. OWEN. I wish the Senator from Arizona would also ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Franklin K. Lane.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask also that the letter referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma may be inserted in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the request will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. MERITT. Mr. Chairman, I am authorized by Commissioner Sells to make the following statement in regard to the per capita payment to Choctaws and Chickasaws:

The books of the Indian Office show that on December 15, 1915, there was in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Choctaw Nation, Oklahoma, the sum of $3,360,620.11, and in banks in Oklahoma to the credit of said nation the sum of $4,071,733.13, the total Choctaw tribal fund being $7,432,353.24. The books of the Indian Office further show that on said date there was in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Chickasaw Nation, Oklahoma, the sum of $778,471.51, and in banks in Oklahoma, to the credit of said Chickasaw Nation, the sum of $1,143,638.97, the total Chickasaw tribal fund being $1,922,110.48, the aggregate fund of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations being $9,354,463.72. The deferred payments on the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribal lands heretofore sold approximate $6,000,000 and the estimated value of the unsold land and other property of said nations approximates $16,149,491.23. Thus the total funds and other property of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations approximates $31,503,954.95.

Twenty thousand seven hundred and ninety-nine enrolled citizens of the Chocktaw Nation are entitled to share in any per capita distribution of the funds of said nation, and 6,304 enrolled citizens of the Chickasaw Nation are entitled to share in any per capita distribution of the tribal funds of that nation.

For the purpose of further carrying out the Atoka agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes (see act of Congress of June 28, 1898, 30 Stat. L., 495, 512–513) and the supplemental agreement with said Indian tribes adopted by the act of Congress of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., 641–654), and in view of the general needy conditions existing in said Indian nations it is recommended that an appropriation be made, out of the Choctaw tribal funds, for a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Choctaw Tribe or to the heirs of deceased enrolled members, and out of the Chickasaw tribal funds for a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Chickasaw Tribe or to the heirs of deceased enrolled members of said tribe, and that it be provided that such payments shall be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and that in cases where the enrolled members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations or their heirs are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians.

Inasmuch as a $100 per capita payment was made to the enrolled members of the Chickasaw Nation under the act of August 1, 1914, at which time no payment was made to the enrolled members of the Choctaw Nation, it is therefore recommended that the enrolled members of the Choctaw Nation should be paid $100 per capita more than the amount provided for the enrolled members of the Chickasaw Nation. These payments would be made from the tribal funds belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations and would not be a tax on the Federal Treasury.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 8, 1916.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. STEPHENS: Reference is made herein to H. R. 11479, entitled "A bill making a per capita payment to the Seminole Indians," and to your request of February 17, 1916, for a report thereon for the information and use of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House of Representatives.

There is inclosed for your information a copy of a report of February 15, 1916, from the Acting Superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes relative to the status of the undisposed of tribal land and funds of the Seminole Nation. It appears therefrom that only a few tribal matters remain undisposed of, and that on January 20, 1916, there was to the credit of the Seminole Nation in the Treasury of the United States and in banks in Oklahoma the sum of $1,580,260.14.

It was provided in the agreement of the United States with the Seminole Nation of Indians of Oklahoma, contained in the act of Congress of July 1, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 567–568), that $500,000 of the funds belonging to the Seminoles held by the United States should be set apart as a permanent school fund for the education of children of the members of said tribe and should be held by the United States at 5 per cent interest or invested so as to produce such amount of interest, which should after the extinguishment of the tribal government be applied by the Secretary of the Interior to the support of the Seminole schools. This fund should not be considered as available for per capita distribution to the members of the tribe at this time. Reserving said fund and in addition thereto the amounts necessary to provide for outstanding unpaid claims of individual members of the nation, there remains sufficient tribal funds to provide a $300 per capita payment to the 3,127 enrolled members of the nation.

In view of the provisions of the agreement with the Seminole Nation of Indians as contained in the above-mentioned act of Congress of July 1, 1898, the practical completion of the work relating to Seminole tribal property and affairs and the general needy conditions existing in the Seminole Nation a per capita distribution should be made. As to the Indians of the incompetent or restricted class, it should be provided that the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of said incompetent or restricted Indians.

I therefore suggest that H. R. 11479 be amended by omitting lines 8 to 12, inclusive, on page 1 of the bill and substituting therefor the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Seminole Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribe, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribe in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $300 per capita: Provided, That said payment shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That in cases where such enrolled members or their heirs are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members or their heirs as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act."

I recommend the enactment of H. R. 11479 if amended as above suggested.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice at this time that, with the permission of the Senate, after the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow, I shall submit some remarks upon the rural credits bill which has been introduced in the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 28, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 27, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, our heavenly Father, pour out Thy spirit upon us and kindle in our hearts a flame of sacred fire which will illumine our minds, quicken our conscience, ennoble our desires, and bring us into closer relationship with Thee; that our work may live to the betterment of every home throughout the land, to society, and our beloved Republic, which we all love. So may Thy kingdom come and Thy will be done in all our hearts. To the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 25, 1916, was read and approved.

SANITARY CONDITIONS OF DAIRIES.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, immediately after the business on the Speaker's table, I may address the House for 15 minutes on House resolution 137, providing for a committee to investigate the sanitary conditions of dairies of the country.

SPEECH OF MR. DAVIS OF TEXAS.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present at this time a privileged report and resolution, and ask for the immediate consideration of the same. (H. Res. 186, Rept. 429.)

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a privileged report and resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The select committee, appointed by the Speaker on the 24th day of March, 1916, upon the following motion made by Mr. MADDEN, "That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to investigate the language of this speech and report whether it should remain in the records," beg leave to respectfully report as follows:

Your committee invited Mr. J. H. DAVIS before it, and, after listening to his statement and carefully considering his speech inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on March 22, at pages 5344, 5345, 5346, and 5347, recommend that the language in said speech hereinafter designated be stricken from the RECORD. It is proper to say that these recommendations have the consent and approval of Mr. DAVIS himself.

On page 5345, first column, in lines 7 and 8, strike out the words beginning with the word "uncaps," in line 7, and ending with the word "page," in line 8.

On page 5345, first column, in lines 9 and 10, strike out the language beginning with the word "This," in line 9, and ending with the word "page," in line 10.

On page 5345, first column, line 18, strike out all of said line after the word "poltroon" and the first three words of line 19, ending with the word "cutters."

On page 5345, second column, beginning with line 23, strike out all language, beginning with the words "I don't know this man," down to and including the words "Gen. Miles and me," in line 47.

On page 5346, first column, strike out the language in the last paragraph of said column, beginning with the words "But I am thankful," down to and including the word "depraved," in line 4, in the second column of said page.

On page 5346, second column, line 27, strike out all language in said line after the word "Chronicle."

On page 5346, second column, line 49, strike out the word "kept" and insert in lieu thereof the word "subsidized."

On page 5346, second column, strike out all language in paragraph 6, beginning with the words "Some days ago" and ending with the words "and his colleagues."

The committee therefore recommends the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the foregoing language referred to in the speech of Mr. J. H. DAVIS, Representative in Congress from the State of Texas, and printed in the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 22, 1916, be stricken from the permanent record.

E. Y. WEBB.
ALBEN W. BARKLEY.
A. J. MONTAGUE.
HENRY ALLEN COOPER.
EDMUND PLATT.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, before moving the previous question I desire to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina yields three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think there are Members on this floor, numbers of them, who know that my life has been one of exasperation by certain elements with whom I have had to contend, and that most men who have endured what I have for the last 25 years have done well to come out alive and without being anarchists. I thank my God that I have never lost hope in the great mass of the common people among whom I have lived and had my being, and that faith in them and faith in God have kept me alive, full of good cheer. There has been a great deal said, especially in the press, about my heading that speech "Patriotism and Americanism." I did not put that heading over it. I put no heading over it whatever. When it came back to me the Public Printing Office had put that over it, which I took as a great compliment, and thank them sincerely. [Laughter.]

Regarding this whole matter I wish to state that I inserted that speech in the RECORD with a full knowledge and measure of every word in it. The reason I said nothing when I was branded as seeking to make the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a "cesspool" was because I was trying to compose myself and praying God for forbearance. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] moved to expunge my speech I resolved to stand on my rights and defend every word. But some friends, whose judgment I valued with great esteem, told me there were a few paragraphs in it which, while not obscene, were too harsh and vengeful to comport with my well-known Christian standing. [Laughter.] Whether this was flattery or sincere it had the desired effect. I took the speech, edited it, leaving out those paragraphs, and the special committee practically accepted the speech as I had revised it. That is true, is it not?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir; that is true, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I now state to the gentleman from Illinois that I have spent a large part of my life cleaning up "cesspools" in this country, and will likely make about 10 speeches this summer in Illinois helping to clean up some legalized "cesspools" in that State, and will be glad to have him meet me in joint debate. I think I can promise him some of the most interesting times he ever had in his life. [Laughter and applause.]

I want to gratefully thank many friends on both sides of this House for their tender of unqualified support.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution and report.

The resolution and report were agreed to.

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the House resolves itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 10384. To regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7 strike out lines 21, 22, 23, 24, and all of page 8, and all of page 9 down to and including the word "territory."

The CHAIRMAN. All debate having been exhausted, the question is on the amendment.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, all time has been consumed, as I understand, but for the information of Members not present when the amendment was offered I will say that this is the literacy test.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order; nothing remains but to vote on the amendment.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, can we have the words read that are proposed to be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the language in the bill read which is proposed to be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the language proposed to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

That after three months from the passage of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age, physically capable of reading, who can not read the English language, or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien, or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not; and such relative shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in some one of the various languages or dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who have resided therein continuously for five years, and who have in accordance with the law declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States and who return to the United States within six months from the date of their departure therefrom; all aliens in transit through the United States; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to strike out the language which has just been read from the desk.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were 74 ayes and 209 noes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. BURNETT, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SABATH.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 82 ayes and 225 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 24, after the word "religious," insert the words "or political."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that all debate is exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does this amendment apply to this section?

Mr. SABATH. It does.

Mr. GARDNER. I raise the point of order that no debate is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is trying to find out what portion of the section the amendment applies to. The limitation of debate was entirely as to the Sabath amendment and not with respect to the section generally.

Mr. GARDNER. The Chair is quite right as to its not applying to the section generally, but it was limited as to the literacy test, and this amendment applies to the literacy test.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair was trying to ascertain from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. The limitation of debate was to my amendment and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the limitation was to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois and the subject matter to which his amendment was directed.

Mr. SABATH. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes on this amendment, and in connection with that request I wish to say that I shall have but one more, or not more than two amendments, to offer to the entire bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent, in connection with his amendment, to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. I will make no objection to that if I may have five minutes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, and I shall not object, but I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to say that he would have only two amendments. Of course that statement only affects the gentleman from Illinois for some of us have amendments to offer, and I did not want the impression to prevail that there are only two amendments on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement of the gentleman from Illinois only affected himself.

Mr. SABATH. I have no authority to speak for any other Member.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, have five minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] have five minutes on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is enlarged so as to include five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, the Committee on Immigration, in reporting this bill, has made an exception in the case of certain people to whom the literacy test should not apply. I am thankful for that exception, which is that the literacy test shall not operate as to those who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution; and here I desire to offer my amendment, which will make the provision read, "avoid religious or political persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations which discriminate against the alien."

As I have said, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am pleased and am thankful to the committee for the exception as it stands, but I think they should have, in all fairness and justice, included all those who are fleeing from political persecution as well. It has been stated that the Immigration Commission, which for two years investigated the immigration question, has made a report on the literacy test and has recommended this law.

I desire to say that two of the gentlemen who helped to prepare the Immigration Commission report of 1911 have published a book, and in that book they have clearly set out their views on this particular phase of the immigration question I refer to Prof. Jenks and Prof. Lauck, of the now famous Immigration Commission. On pages 333 and 334 of their book appears the following paragraph:

In the judgment of the commission, as well as of most other enlightened citizens, the United States should remain in the future, as in the past, a haven of refuge for the oppressed, whether such oppression be political or religious. Any restrictive measure should contain a provision making an exception of such cases.

Mr. Chairman, from this you will see that these gentlemen did not make the exception apply only to religious persecution, but they also embodied in their recommendation political persecution, so as to include those who are obliged to flee the country of their birth because of political conditions.

Due to the unbearable conditions prevailing in some of the localities in Europe, students and thinkers who could no longer bear the oppression and tyranny came forward and advocated a change in the prevailing conditions in their respective countries. For their advocacy of a betterment of condition of the unfortunate masses of their people thousands upon thousands of these honest and well-meaning men have been banished and imprisoned. Many of them, without a semblance of a trial, have been executed or sent to the mines of Siberia.

Still other humanitarians who have sacrificed their personal liberty by urging what they believed to be right and just have been obliged to flee from their native countries in order to escape the terrible punishments which were sure to be inflicted upon them.

It is for these humanitarians and patriots that I plead when I ask that the amendment be accepted. I do this believing that our country should continue in the future, as in the past, a haven of refuge for the oppressed and persecuted of all nations.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the political refugee has been very carefully taken care of on page 9 of the bill with the following proviso, beginning in line 13:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted, or who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission, of an offense purely political.

The committee believed that was as far as we ought to go, that those who were otherwise admissible who were convicted because of teaching political heresies in their own country should not be excluded. But here is a literacy test, a test from which we exempt fathers and mothers, wives and daughters, and those who by reason of religious persecution evidenced by either overt acts or by the laws of the country or by Government regulations, making it broader than any provision of that character which has been heretofore agreed upon—and my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], the former ranking member of the committee, on Saturday felt constrained to offer an amendment, saying "overt governmental acts," but being assured that that would be the construction that would be placed upon it by officials who would pass upon it, he withdrew it, although he has always been in favor of confining it to those fleeing from religious persecution solely. If we open wide the door, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has suggested, so far as the mob in Mexico is concerned, the literacy test would not be worth a bawbee, because they are having political revolutions there all of the time, and every bandit that can get together a dozen men and declare that he is in favor of political liberty would be entitled to come over here whether he could read a word of his own language or the language of any other country.

The other day the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], indicated what seems to be a widespread temper among the American people to exclude all aliens for the next 10 years. I have never quite got myself up to that point. I do not want these gentleman who are honestly the friends of the immigrant, no doubt, to make a mistake and emasculate this bill. I do not challenge their patriotism, but by undertaking to inject these matters they will take the teeth out of it altogether, especially in regard to our neighbors to the south, and by so doing they will unconsciously force the passage of laws much more rigid through this Congress. I stand here to-day more a friend of the Jew and the Teuton and the Celt than the gentlemen themselves who are undertaking to draw the teeth out of this bill so that there will be scarcely nothing left in it. I hope gentlemen will not be misled by any such specious argument. These questions were worked out carefully by the members of the committee—strong men, lawyers, patriotic men—some of them coming from districts in which there are many of the foreign element, and when they voted for this educational test it is not unlikely that they took their political lives in their hands, demanding, as one gentleman said, international compulsory education. Therefore I hope that gentlemen will stand by the committee in this proposition and will not be misled by the arguments of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 43, noes 140.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the committee rise, so that I may be able to report an urgent deficiency appropriation bill for the Army, due to the condition in Mexico.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the committee rise, so that he may submit the matter indicated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we can not limit it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the committee rise. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BOOHER, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 10384 and had come to no resolution thereon.

THE MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. FITZGERALD, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 13768) to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year 1916, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report (No. 431), ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the immigration bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 10384, with Mr. SAUNDERS in the chair.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 25, after the word "living," insert:
Provided, That said persons coming on ships shall be examined by said examining surgeon on board said ships during the voyage.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may report the section as it would read with the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism; paupers; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathesome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living: Provided, That said persons coming on ships shall be examined by said examining surgeon on board said ships during the voyage.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, if it is intended by those who favor this bill to perfect it against these conditions here is a chance. It is contended here in this debate that one of the alarming reasons has been that under the old law our insane asylums and almshouses were filled by pauper immigrants brought over here to become a public charge. One of the troubles with the old immigration law was that the surgeons making the examinations did not have the time needed, when this flood of immigrants landed upon the docks, to make suitable examinations, and that is one of the principal causes why these insane people and others like them are allowed to come in. The immigration inspectors will tell you that they do not have the time or opportunity to make a suitable examination when these people are landed from the ship. Now, if the surgeon is put upon the boat, he has the time during the whole voyage in which to make these examinations. If one surgeon can not do the work, you can put on a suitable number, and then we can find out something about the physical condition of these people who are landed here. I am aware that this provision has been in the bill before, and it was stricken out at the other end of this building. The steamship companies will object to it, naturally, but it does not matter to us whether they do or not. We have a perfect right to put surgeons upon these boats to make examinations, and that is the place where the examinations ought to be made.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLAGHER. I will.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I am very glad the gentleman has offered his amendment; and I would like to ask the gentleman how many surgeons are allotted to a ship?

Mr. GALLAGHER. I do not know the exact number.

Mr. BENNET. I can answer the gentleman's question. To the shame of our country the United States immigration laws do not put a single surgeon on a vessel.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. So that the whole examination is on the dock?

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. In section 13 it is provided that where there is no surgeon on the ship employed by the company, then the company can ask for a surgeon, and of all the ridiculous provisions in the law this bill provides that that surgeon, no matter what he finds, no matter how bad conditions may be, must swear that every man on board ship is admissible. It is ridiculous.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York, in his opinion, is that the real cause of the congestion of the lunatic asylums with foreign lunatics?

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no; I do not say——

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Well, very largely.

Mr. BENNET. When I was in the Sixty-first Congress I introduced a bill for surgeons and matrons on vessels, of which there is a vermiform appendix in this bill——

Mr. GALLAGHER. I do not yield further.

Mr. BENNET. I will discuss that when I get some time.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest in reply to the gentleman from New York that the Government of the United States has no jurisdiction to put surgeons on foreign ships.

Mr. GALLAGHER. There is not any question about having jurisdiction. We have ample jurisdiction to put surgeons on ships, and that is one of the arguments of the steamship company.

Mr. HAYES. This Government has undertaken to try to get an agreement to that effect.

Mr. GALLAGHER. The trouble is, we have not the surgeons on the docks and at the different points of entry to make suitable examination. You can readily see that when a great army of people are landed on the docks that these surgeons have no way of making a suitable examination.

Mr. POWERS. I would like to inquire of the gentleman about the number of additional surgeons that this would require if the gentleman's amendment should be agreed to?

Mr. GALLAGHER. We can find out. I do not know. It does not make any difference how many are required; we ought to have a sufficient number to do this work.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I had supposed that all debate was exhausted when the gentleman from Illinois and myself had occupied five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no further debate on this except the debate allowed to the gentleman from Illinois and myself.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, yes. That was just on the religious amendment. There is no agreement on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement relates to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, not to further amend the remainder of the section.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARDNER. To ask whether under the rules of the House a member of the committee is not entitled to recognition in opposition?

The CHAIRMAN. If a member of the committee arises for that purpose. The gentleman from Alabama will be recognized.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the position of the gentleman from Illinois is absolutely correct and fair, and to say that we have no power is ridiculous. We have certainly as much power as the Italian Government has, and every German vessel that sails out of an Italian port carrying immigrants carries on it by law a surgeon of the Royal Italian Navy, and by law, on that German vessel, he sits at the right hand of the captain and has one of the best cabins on the ship. Why should we not have such a provision in this bill? I do not know why it was not put in the bill. I introduced a bill in the Sixty-first Congress; I have forgotten whether it was reported out or not, I think we did—if we did not we should have.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] corroborates my recollection that it was reported in the Sixty-third Congress. I think it was reported in the Sixty-second Congress also, and was stricken out somewhere, either here or across the way or in conference. The Italian Government does by its immigrants what we ought to do in a far higher degree, for the people are leaving their land and they are coming to our land, and they ought to be protected from the moment they set foot on a ship to come to this country. I have always stood for that sort of proposition. And I would like to see such a provision in the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is it proposed that these surgeons shall have authority to accept or reject immigrants?

Mr. BENNET. No; but it was proposed in the bill that I drew that the captain of a ship in relation to everything relating to passengers should be under the surgeons appointed by the United States Government. And that ought to be the law. Now, what have they got? Over on page 27 they have a provision that is enough to make a legislator weep, in section 13—the parts I am about to refer to. And that provision is this, that the surgeon who sails on a ship, the company's surgeon, must examine the immigrants, which is right enough; and then that the surgeon of said vessel sailing therewith shall also sign the list or manifest and make an oath or affirmation in like manner before an immigration officer at the port of arrival, stating his professional experience and qualifications as a physician and surgeon, and that he had made a personal examination of each of the said aliens named therein, and that the said list or manifest, according to the best of his knowledge and belief, is full, correct, and true in all particulars relative to the mental and physical condition of said aliens. And the captain certifies that none of said aliens is of any of the classes excluded from admission into the United States. No matter what the surgeon wants, no matter what the conditions are, the captain must swear by law that everything is all right. I am going to offer an amendment when that section is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURNETT. There was a provision similar to that suggested by the gentleman in the bill before Congress at its last session. There was great opposition to it by the foreign Governments, they contending that on their ships we had no right to put surgeons or matrons. It is true that on some of the German ships sailing from Italian ports the Italian Government has its Italian doctors, but that is by agreement. They could not force them upon those German ships if they declined to have them. And on that very question the present Secretary of Labor said when that matter was up before:

> I am not entirely satisfied that the system of examination and observation on board ship will accomplish that which is expected of it by its proponents, for unless the force placed on a ship having a passenger list running from a comparatively small number up to 1,500 immigrants is sufficient properly to inspect and observe all of them, the work would be incomplete and of limited value. To provide the necessary force—and if the Government initiates the system all ships, whether carrying few or many passengers, would have to be inspected to avoid the appearance of discrimination—the expense would necessarily be large.

And he said further:

> In conclusion, I will add that suggestions now under investigation, together with the many improvements in the administrative and other features of the pending bill, if enacted into law, will, in my judgment, to a great extent clear the situation, and also minimize the need for the said legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we feel that it is already taken care of to a large extent. The gentlemen talk about the captains making an affidavit in regard to their coming within these rules. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, because we do not want this bill again loaded down in such a way that there will be a veto. The country demands that the bill shall pass.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. What are the conditions at the ports of entry in relation to these medical examinations? Have we a sufficient number of medical examiners to do the work thoroughly?

Mr. BURNETT. I will answer that. Instead of $50,000, as now provided by law, this bill provides for $100,000. They wanted money enough so that the immigration authorities can make the inspection. As I stated yesterday, last year the steamships, although they brought over only about 400,000 immigrants, 25,000 of them were turned back. Before the decrease in immigration we were unable to make better inspection. All the bureau needs is money enough to make the inspection, and one of the purposes of this $8 head tax is that there may be better inspection. I ask for a vote.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to debate this amendment for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to debate this amendment for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman to the effect that the examining surgeon should examine these men on board the vessels before they reach this country would be exceedingly wise, if it could be done. It would take a great number of surgeons in order to accomplish the work, in the first place, and, in the second place, Mr. Chairman, it can not be legally done. The oceans are everybody's highway. With the British ships sailing on the ocean, men on the British ships are on British territory and under British jurisdiction; the men on German ships are on German territory; the men on Italian ships are on Italian territory; and we have no right to put our men on British territory or German territory or on Italian territory to make these examinations. Theefore the committee felt it wise to frame the bill as it has been done.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. POWERS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BENNET. Are we not as powerful a Nation as Italy, that puts a royal Italian Navy surgeon on every German ship that sails out of Naples?

Mr. POWERS. We are as powerful as any nation in the world, but because the Italian Government has done it, that is no proof that it can be legally done by us.

Mr. BENNET. All we would have to do would be to say that the ship can not clear without such a surgeon being on board.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, upon what ground the gentleman from Kentucky makes the statement that we have no right to put surgeons on these ships?

Mr. POWERS. I will say to the gentleman that the bottoms of the English ships, for example, plying the ocean are regarded as English territory and are under the jurisdiction of English authority and we can not do it under the law. The same thing is true, of course, of the ships of all the other nations of the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GALLAGHER. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GALLAGHER] asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 97.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: On page 7, line 10, after the word "missionary," strike out the word "lawyers."

[Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will not call for a vote until I explain the amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not move to close the debate until after the debate is done on this amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been recognized.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am surprised that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] should want to hasten and so "speed up" on this bill. Here is a proposition to protect the lawyers of the United States, of whom he is one. [Laughter.] I do not think there is a crying necessity for more lawyers in this country. Congress has an amplitude of lawyers, to begin with. There is not a city of any size in the country that does not have all the lawyers it needs. There is no hamlet that is not already sufficiently supplied with legal talent. Why, if the lawyers of this country were properly organized and knew how to go about their business, they would stand for the passage of an amendment such as I have proposed, because an influx of lawyers from foreign countries will undoubtedly reduce the price of fees in the United States. [Laughter.] There are clients here, men and women, who necessarily get into trouble once in a while who might be induced to employ a foreign lawyer who would work for a foreign fee rather than an American fee. [Laughter.]

I notice there are also some missionaries to be admitted under this bill, and some students, and some physicians, together with some authors and merchants. They do not have to undergo the same scrutiny that the man has to undergo who seeks to come into this country to find a haven from foreign oppression, who seeks to employ himself out somewhere on a farm where his labor may be needed. There is no such restriction concerning the lawyers; they are to be admitted from foreign countries if accompanied by their lawful wives—because the bill provides for their lawful wives only [laughter]—all these are to be preferred over the unfortunate war widows of Europe who might be useful here but who have the misfortune of being unable to read or write. It seems that out of consideration for the underpaid legal talent of this country we should exercise some discretion and raise the same barriers against an unfair competition that is already raised against the war widows of Europe.

Why, Mr. Chairman, some preachers are to be admitted under this bill, missionaries, and ministers of the gospel. The Methodist Episcopal Conference in my city recently discussed the pay of preachers. Some of them have been working on the outskirts, where the work of the Master must needs be done—and they have a hard time of it there as they have in some of the great metropolitan cities—who are paid as low as $300 and $400 a year. Is there no mercy in this Congress for the ministers of the land?

Mr. GARDNER. Do they suffer from the Hindu competition—from Hindu ministers?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Under this bill a Hindu minister can come in; there is no restriction against the Hindu if he is a minister or a missionary. But if a downtrodden worker, who can not read, wants to come in you do not admit him, though you are admitting much foreign talent that America does not want and does not need.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, in behalf of the majority of this House, that is made up of lawyers, I desire to extend the thanks of this majority for the gallant defense of the profession presented by the eloquent gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Having the indorsement of the House on my legal proposition, Mr. Chairman, I ask for the indorsement by the House of my amendment. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is not a lawyer.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No. I am rather thankful I am not. I have been able to be a little more useful in my time, I believe. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I object to interruption. As a member of the legal profession I want to say with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS], "Amen," and assure the House that I, too, am glad that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not a member of the legal profession. [Laughter and applause.]

And yet, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman again is weeping crocodile weeps for the lawyers. I have received intimations from gentlemen on the floor that there is no lawyer here who is making any such complaint. I do want to speed up the bill, and one of the reasons why I want to speed up the bill is the fact that the whole country wants it enacted into law. And, among others, I want to call the gentleman's prayerful attention to an editorial in the gentleman's own home city paper, the Philadelphia Inquirer, a few days ago, in which is echoed the proposition that there ought to be a change in regard to unlimited immigration into this country. It is these editorial demands of representative newspapers and urgent petitions of the people that make me want to speed up the passage of the bill, and I want to speed it up also in the interest of economy of the time of the House, and therefore I will not consume my five minutes, but ask for a vote. I will not read the Philadelphia editorial of a few days ago, but will insert it in the RECORD as a part of my remarks. It is as follows:

Among the strongest supporters of the literacy-test bill which is now before the House Committee on Immigration are American workingmen, who complain that existing conditions subject them to unfair competition. They contend that only by limiting immigration can high standards of living and good wages be maintained for the workers of the United States. Representative BURNETT says that out of 2,500,000 foreigners only 35,000 were attempting to learn the English language.

It is only too true, as was asserted at the hearing, that many of these immigrants work cheaply, live meanly, and bring about situations that can not be tolerated by American workingmen. In view of all this, it is not surprising that the toilers of the country should be primarily interested in the alien laws, and that they are eager for any change in the immigration statutes that will lessen or improve the character of immigrants.

During the discussion of this measure one Representative who opposed the literacy test taunted a colleague who favored it by saying that both of their fathers had come into this country by the open door of immigration, and that the only difference between the sons of the men in question was that one would shut the door of opportunity, while the other would have it remain open. This sounds good, but unfortunately the conditions which prevailed when the two fathers of the present Congressmen came to this country have changed—and not for the better. The immigrants that came to this country a generation or two ago were, in the main, desirable. They had both brains and brawn. They settled the great West, and their descendants are among the men that have developed the Nation. They could be distinctly counted among the assets of the country. But many of the present-day immigrants are liabilities, and most are in every way undesirable, and this in spite of the scrutiny which they are compelled to undergo at the hands of the immigration officials.

Among reasonable persons there is absolutely no objection to an immigrant as an immigrant. America still remains the land of opportunity, but if it is to remain such there must be a more rigid test of those who some to our shores. We can welcome those who will look upon American citizenship as a privilege and who will be eager to learn our language and our customs. All others should be barred. Perhaps then we will have immigrants who will regard our Government seriously; perhaps then we will not witness the spectacle of thousands of supposed Americans sailing for Europe to fight for their "rulers" on the other side of the Atlantic.

It is time to face the problem resolutely, and in doing so it is well to recognize the fact that none have greater interests at stake than the American workingmen.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GARDNER: Page 5, in lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property."

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, that amendment was put into the bill last year in order to prevent the practicing of the doctrine which has come to be known as sabotage. That clause was adopted over the objection of the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Manahan, and myself. The gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Manahan, objected to that clause on the ground that it would prevent the militant suffragettes coming here and advocating what they thought to be the legitimate destruction of property. I objected to it because I thought it very unwise to prevent anyone teaching any doctrine which he saw fit to preach. Be this as it may, this clause in the bill was one of the clauses to which President Wilson especially called attention when he vetoed the bill. In his veto message he said:

It seeks to all but close entirely the gates of asylum which have always been open to those who could find nowhere else the right and opportunity of constitutional agitation for what they conceived to be the natural and inalienable rights of men.

That was one of the stated grounds on which the President vetoed the immigration bill. I thought this a sound objection which the President interposed. Of course, I did not agree with the President's veto, but as to this particular clause I thought him right. I especially antagonize that clause in the present bill, because I do not wish to see the President in a position to base a veto on any other clause in the bill except the illiteracy test. It is on the illiteracy test that this bill ought to rise or fall. That is my principal reason for moving that this clause be stricken out.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has read that part of the President's veto which undoubtedly refers to the words in lines 8 and 9, page 5, and also the same words carried further down in the bill.

Mr. GARDNER. Lines 17 and 18 also.

Mr. RAKER. Lines 17 and 18—

Or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property.

The committee put that in last year advisedly, and as we believed correctly, to keep out those who do not seek to establish independence or to establish a government, but who from their own preconceived ideas simply desire to destroy property for the purposes of destruction, or because they do not like a particular individual. The President in his veto message referred to something which was not in the mind of the committee, and which was not discussed by anyone except Mr. RUSSELL, who appeared before the President in the discussion after the bill had passed the House and Senate. Now, to obviate that question, and to cover those to whom the President refers in his message, who believe that in order to exercise a constitutional right to establish a government, or to maintain their independence, and overthrow the government under which they live, they may destroy property as well as destroy life if it becomes necessary to do so—there was no intent of the committee to keep them out; and this time, in order to overcome the objection of the President, the committee, after much thought and much consideration, and after the question had been submitted to the department, placed in the bill a proviso to insert the provision referred to, in lines 13 to 16, on page 9, as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted, or who admit the commission, or who teach or advocate the commission, of an offense purely political.

That answers the objections of the President to the former bill, and permits those to enter who advocate or teach or practice constitutional liberty, and in that effort believe and advocate that if it becomes necessary to destroy all property as well as all life that may stand in the way of their securing what they believe to be constitutional liberty for men they may do so, as they have done in the past.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question only.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is correct, that we ought not to prohibit the coming into this country of those who teach what they please, would we not have to eliminate the anarchist clause?

Mr. RAKER. Why, certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the clause touching the overthrow of government.

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely. There can be no excuse on earth for permitting a woman to enter this country, call her a militant or what not, who comes here and advocates the unlawful destruction of property in order that she may obtain some right. Conditions in this country are different. The right of women to present their demands to legislatures and to committees is open and free, and there is no necessity of permitting those from other countries to come here who believe, who advocate, and who teach that if I do not vote for their measure they have a lawful right, while I am here attending to my duty, to go to my place of residence and burn and destroy my property. That does not affect their constitutional right, but it is clean-cut criminality, and that is all. While I favor the giving of the right to women to vote, and while I believe this Congress ought to pass a bill giving them the right to vote for Senators and Members of Congress, or to go even further and amend the Constitution, nevertheless I am opposed to permitting the entrance into this country of those who believe in the doctrine that if you differ with them they may go upon the street and destroy the mail boxes, tear down the mail pouches, burn property, break windows, and commit other criminal acts for which any man would be arrested and prosecuted. Such conduct is not necessary in this country. The women of this country do not want it, and therefore these words ought to remain in the bill.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This militant suffragette question was injected into the discussion after this new clause was offered last year in the Committee of Immigration. It had not an earthly thing in the world to do with the insertion of that clause in the immigration bill. It was brought to the attention of the Committee on Immigration that certain labor agitators were preaching the doctrine out in California and elsewhere that it was right to commit sabotage, as it was called; that is, that they had the right deliberately to destroy the product of scab labor, for instance, and that it was right deliberately to interfere with the proper shipment of goods, in order to make more work for the particular union to which these men belonged.

It was in order to stop the preaching of that doctrine that this clause was inserted, and it was because I thought men ought to be permitted to preach any doctrine which to them seems good that I objected to the insertion of this clause.

I believe men ought to be permitted to preach that which they think right. If they are wrong, public opinion will take care of their doctrines much more effectively than if we try to suppress their expression.

Now, the question of the militant suffragettes had nothing to do with the question. We did not think of that aspect of the case until the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Manahan, pointed it out. The amendment was not put in to control the preachment of the doctrine of the militant suffragettes.

Allusion has been made to the clause in this bill on page 9, beginning with line 13, which it is thought relieves from exclusion immigrants who have committed political offenses. The existing laws says:

That nothing in this act shall exclude, if otherwise admissible, persons convicted of an offense purely political not involving moral turpitude.

The committee has stricken out the words "not involving moral turpitude" and has inserted, after the word "convicted," the words "or who admit the commission or who teach or advocate the commission." Teaching or advocating the commission of sabotage is by no means covered by the clause on page 9, for sabotage is not an offense purely political. Neither is an offense of the militant suffragists purely a political offense. Neither is the offense of the misguided labor leader who says it is right to destroy the product of scab labor a political offense. The gentleman from California is entirely mistaken in saying that the provision on page 9 clarifies or removes the objection I made to this clause.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I want to say with respect to this sabotage question that the paragraph ought to remain in the bill for its moral effect. Organized labor has no desire, as I understand it, to destroy life or property. It has no sympathy with those who teach the destruction of life or property. Organized labor, as I understand it in this country, has little or no sympathy with the anarchist, and little sympathy with socialism as commonly understood. Organized labor respects itself. It has its own weapons with which to deal with employers. Sabotage means that if the workingman is dissatisfied with the terms of employment, or dissatisfied with his employer personally, he may stop the employer's business by destroying the employer's property. It is commonly understood as meaning that a man can throw a wrench into the machinery of his employer or, in other words, use up his means of production in order to bring the employer to terms.

If the gentleman from Massachusetts thinks it wise to admit to this country men who teach that doctrine, if he thinks it wise to have it known universally that the United States Congress approves the admission into this country of men who teach the destruction of property, there is a further conclusion, and that is that it means that it is proper for men who teach anarchy to come into the country, and for those who teach other things that are forbidden by this bill to come into the country. If we are going to protect the country against criminality, if we are going to protect labor in the high stand it has taken, we ought to say to men who teach or practice sabotage, "You can not come into this country; you had better stay on the other side."

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman admits that it interferes with free speech?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think free speech has gone to a point where some day this Congress may be called upon to legislate upon it, as it did this morning when it expunged a certain amount of free speech from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD itself. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment. I have been very much surprised and somewhat amazed at the statement just made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], and I want to go on record as taking a position diametrically opposed to it. The gentleman has stated that if he had his way in the making of our immigration laws anarchists would not be excluded from being admitted to this country to preach their doctrines.

It is well known that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is one of the warmest and most enthusiastic advocates of the literacy test in this bill. Upon the statements made by the gentleman it appears that the gentleman desires to exclude, merely and solely because the alien has not had the opportunity to learn to read a few words of some language, the strong, healthy, honest alien, who desires to come into this country, who is willing and anxious to comply with the laws of our land, and whose highest longing and ambition is to make a permanent home for himself and those dear to him, in this great Republic, and under our institutions of government, and wishes to permit to come into this country a class of aliens who, knowing how to read, are opposed to our form of government, and whose every moment of time here will be spent in advocating and working for the complete destruction of our Government and all its splendid free institutions.

I believe the amendment to strike out this clause should not be agreed to by the committee.

An alien who comes here to advocate and to teach unlawful destruction of property should not be admitted to citizenship and should not be permitted to enter or to remain in this country. Such clearly are the kind and character of immigrants who should be given no place among our citizenship. We need no immigrants of that kind. I trust the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I almost uniformly agree on every point with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] on these questions, and I frequently differ with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who was a long time a valuable member of our committee. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts is wrong, and wrong for the reasons he gives. Certainly we do not want people going through the country teaching unlawful destruction of property. We have, as was said by the gentleman from California [Judge RAKER], taken care of those who are political refugees, those who resist force with force. One reason which impelled me to support the proposition was to keep out the militant suffragists, who, on the other side, burn churches, blow up buildings, and destroy mail boxes. We had the cooperation of every member of the committee from the Pacific coast, and, while I do not agree with those good women on equal suffrage, I have never found an American suffragist that wanted to resort to the practices of the militant suffragists on the other side. The gentleman says that is not political, and that is true, and that is the reason for not claiming immunity. They ought to be deported, ought to be kept out if they come here to teach that lawlessness. The good women of this country do not want the ballot if they have to resort to anarchy, bloodshed, and murder to get it. I believe the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts should not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 11, after the word "authors," insert the word "artists."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the chairman of the committee has no objection to this amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 13, after the word "territory," insert the following:

"The illiteracy test shall not apply to aliens who not less than 90 days prior to the date of embarking for the United States shall have given notice, in writing, to the consul general, consul, consular agent, or other duly accredited representative of the United States of America in the country of which said alien is a citizen or resident, of the intention of said alien to embark for the United States, and setting forth the reasons for such embarkation, together with a concise statement containing the following information as to such alien: Full name, age, sex, whether married or single, calling or occupation, nationality, when and where born, where last a resident and length of residence therein, what school or schools such alien has attended or what education possessed, and if unable to read or write, the reason for such illiteracy, whether ever convicted of crime, supported by charity, or confined in a prison, almshouse, or institution for the treatment of the insane, together with affidavits of three respectable citizens of the country from whence said alien desires to embark, attesting that such alien is to them personally known to be industrious, law-abiding, and not likely, because of illiteracy, to become a public charge, a vagrant, or an undesirable citizen.

"Upon the filing of said statement as herein provided the official of the United States of America with whom said statement is filed shall cause an investigation to be made of the truth of the same, and of the character and antecedents of such alien, and if satisfied that such alien is likely to become a useful, industrious, and law-abiding citizen of the United States, if permitted to enter same, he shall issue to such alien a certificate setting forth the facts ascertained upon the hereinbefore mentioned investigation, and the conclusion reached thereon by said official, whereupon such alien shall not be subjected to the illiteracy test as provided in this act."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I presume that most, at least, of those who have voted to support the literacy test did so with a great deal of mental reservation. I have not talked with any one favoring it regarding the matter who did not wish that some better test might be applied even for exclusionary purposes only. They take the literacy test as the Immigration Commission took it, as merely an exclusionary test in lieu of something better, believing that too many foreigners are coming to this country. I have no doubt whatever that there is not a man on the floor of the House who would not, if he were to decide and if a person applied for admission to citizenship in this country, allow that person to come if it could be shown that he would become a law-abiding, useful, and industrious citizen of the United States. That is the test that we now apply when we naturalize foreigners, and that is the test that every man applies in his own judgment as to good citizenship. There are many cases, not altogether imaginary by any means, many of them having come under the observation of Members of this House, where men in every way desirable, and women as well, such as should be allowed to come to this country, where persons will be excluded by the literacy test, but who, nevertheless, would become useful members of society and useful citizens of our Nation if admitted. The amendment which I present provides that such may be allowed to come, under the severest initiatory test on the other side of the water, conducted by our consular agents there. I provide that the prospective immigrant must show affirmatively all of those things that should in reason be applied as a test for admission for good citizenship. It certainly seems to me that anyone, no matter what his position may be regarding this bill, would desire to have his records squared upon those terms; that he may not be subjected to the criticism of being narrow, of having voted for a test which is un-American in principle, of having supported a proposition which is admittedly selfish, which is apparently unjust, and which can not be defended except as a merely exclusionary provision. It seems to me that many of these who have supported this proposition upon the floor ought to be glad to make his attitude at least excusable. Would it not be good policy to give the President of the United States an opportunity of approving the bill, which he certainly can not do if passed in its present form? If the friends of the bill shall have the good judgment to send it to the President with the amendment which I propose it will meet the very objections that were stated in his last veto. There are no reasons that can be suggested logically or on moral grounds which would justify the rejection of this amendment. On the other hand, every principle of justice, every instinct of humanity, every appeal even of expediency commend it. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] is that of one who does not believe in restriction of immigration. It is the argument of one who simply wants to have better preparation for the immigrant and nothing else. One of the purposes of this bill, one of the main purposes, is to do just what the adoption of that amendment would thwart, and that is to reduce the number of people coming here from the countries where illiteracy abounds. The necessity for restriction is very aptly stated in an editorial which appeared in the Washington Times of yesterday, which I will read:

THE IMMIGRATION BILL.

Congressman MANN, Republican leader, announcing that he will vote for the Burnett immigration bill, containing the literacy restriction, pointed out the significant change of opinion that has lately taken place. Mr. MANN has himself four times voted against such legislation. It has been vetoed by Presidents Taft and Wilson, and in neither case could it muster the votes to pass over the veto.

Undeniably the contemplation of our millions upon millions of "undigested aliens," who seemingly have no intention of becoming citizens, has much affected feeling about immigration. Either there will have to be adequate provision to make citizens, and good, intelligent, loyal, understanding ones, of the strangers who enter our gates, or else before many years there will be restrictions upon their coming much more rigorous than the literacy test.

Without peradventure, the literacy test is a very imperfect one. It will not necessarily accomplish the purpose at which it is aimed; perhaps it will do very little good in that direction. But the country has been convinced by the events of the past two years that somehow the menace of a great alien population which will not become citizens is a real danger. The north European immigrants have never been open to this objection. Almost without exception they become citizens, and highly desirable ones. More eastern and southern lands have sent millions that have less concern to make themselves part of this Nation; and unless their attitude toward our citizenship shall change, their privilege of practically unrestricted entrance will one day be modified.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman said that I reported or introduced this amendment for purely exclusionary reasons. I think the gentleman is doing me an injustice. I would be glad to support every proposition or practically every proposition involved in the bill, many of which would work an exclusion, but I voted against the literacy test because I believe it to be unfair and unjust.

Mr. BURNETT. Oh, the gentleman misunderstood me. I did not mean to say that he introduced this amendment for exclusionary purposes, but I said that he is mistaken when he thinks that this bill is purely for the purpose of aiding the immigrant. This is a bill partly for exclusionary purposes. I spoke of the intention of the bill, not of the gentleman's amendment. It is for the purpose of restricting immigration as well as for improving the immigrant, and this is done after the Immigration Commission investigated that question. Every member of the commission, including the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], agreed that there were too many unskilled laborers coming to this country and that there ought to be some means by which they could be restricted. That is the purpose of the bill, and, as I said, if the gentleman's proposition should prevail, the tendency would be not to reduce the number of immigrants, but the opposite. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, and I do it for the purpose of answering the statements that have been made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT]. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. I believe that it is a splendid amendment and that it should prevail.

Occasionally articles have appeared in the press and in the magazines to the effect that the percentage of aliens who become naturalized to-day is much smaller than the percentage of aliens who took out their final papers 25 years ago. In answer thereto I wish to make this statement: Up to 1907 our naturalization laws were not as strict as they are to-day, and it was a mighty easy thing to naturalize those who came to the United States in the eighties and in the nineties. They were not obliged to go through the tests to which an immigrant is subjected to-day.

No man can now become a citizen of the United States through naturalization unless he goes through a very strict examination. He must know how to read and he must know how to write, not only his own language but our language, before the courts of the various States will issue to him the final certificate which is his evidence that he has become a citizen of the United States. For the information of the gentlemen of the House, I will read from the report of the Commissioner of Naturalization a statement showing the certificates of naturalization issued and denied in the various States and Territories, with reasons for denial, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

From this you will see that in 15 of the States one-fifth or more of the aliens presenting themselves for naturalization are denied the privilege of becoming American citizens.

Florida	38
Georgia	24

By way of comparison I will also quote from the same report a table showing the number of persons granted or denied citizenship during the years 1909 to 1915, inclusive.

[1] These figures represent the total admissions to citizenship.

On examination he is asked questions that even many Members of Congress could not answer, and whenever he fails he is rejected and his application is denied. I hope that I have made myself clear.

In view of the fact that the gentleman has also quoted from the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], my colleague, whom I love and in whom I have the utmost confidence, I wish to say that even great men do make mistakes. The gentleman from Illinois stated yesterday, and gave as one of the reasons why he was going to vote for the bill, that it was his fear that too many people will come to the United States at the end of the present war, due to the overtaxation which must follow the tremendous wastage of this terrible conflict. We hear on this side of the House, as well as on the other, that the main object of the proposed immigration law is to exclude the pauper and pauper labor. Now why, in the name of Heaven, should a pauper laborer leave his native country on account of taxation? No pauper is taxed or can be taxed, so that point can not be well taken.

Now, I am of the opinion that this amendment is a splendid provision, offered by a splendid gentleman, and that it should be adopted.

Mr. MEEKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. If the party for whom this is intended could have notice in writing of the literacy test, I think it would not trouble him. I think the chief objection to this amendment, although the intent is good, is that it is impracticable. If out of the million and a quarter immigrants we do exclude 300,000, what will occur on the other side in the offices of our foreign representatives when a percentage of the 300,000 would endeavor to take advantage of this? It would open up throughout Europe an effort which would require an organization of investigators and a machinery that would be unwieldy and be expensive far beyond any return that could possibly come from it, and of which I believe after a while advantage would be taken. I believe it is a good deal like in this country when certain individuals are called upon to produce affidavits of good moral character—you know how it is—and it seems to me that trouble would follow because of this amendment in the machinery on the other side and upon our foreign representatives there, which would be unwieldy and practically useless.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MEEKER. I can not yield. I want to say one thing further. Some gentlemen seem to be voting for this literacy test for one reason and some for another. They say because it will exclude a certain number of people. It is not that. It is because it will exclude a certain type of individual, not numbers, whether it applies to one or a thousand or a hundred thousand or half a million.

We have had the public-school system in this country for years, free schools, yet we did not have a compulsory education clause until a few years ago. We discovered that merely to open the doors of the schoolhouse and say that all who wanted could go in there that there were not as many entering as should go in for the welfare of this Nation, so we have gone back of the free schools and put a compulsory education law which takes a boy or girl under 14 years and puts them in the school whether he or she would go or not, and I think that we should keep that clearly in mind in our legislation on this literacy test, that we are demanding something of the man or woman who is going to come here, and, as we have made these exemptions as provided in the bill, that, other things being equal, we do make a preference for the one who has taken the opportunity and taken advantage of his time to improve himself before coming to this country. It should be kept not as a restrictive measure, but as a selective measure, for certainly we have the right to say something in regard to the selection of those who are to come in. I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move to close debate?

Mr. BURNETT. I move that debate be closed.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say I think that there is no bill here upon which there has been so little factitious opposition and where the whole debate has been——

Mr. BURNETT. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. BENNET. About five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And I would desire three minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, at the expiration of eight minutes I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York be given five minutes, the gentleman from Iowa three minutes, and that at the expiration of that time a vote shall be taken upon the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa will pass. When I was a member of the Immigration Commission people who believed in restriction and who were opposed to the literacy test have said to me, "Is it not possible to make certain tests of character? We think that too many people are coming in, and we realize that an educational test is a hypocritical test. We think there ought to be a different test, based on character." Now, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa does that. It provides, in substance, that if a man can not read he shall go into a community where he is known and get witnesses not satisfactory to him, because I think I agree with the gentleman from Missouri that would be comparatively easy, but satisfactory to a United States official, and upon presentation of the evidence certify that he is a man of good moral character and liable to make a good citizen of the United States.

Now, people have stated that there can be nothing new in connection with the immigration bill. I want to congratulate the gentleman from Iowa for producing something new, for this is the first time that we have ever had anything approaching a character test. I am not prepared to say, after the hasty reading that I have given it, that the language is correct, but the idea is correct, and I shall vote for the amendment. I am frank to say that it does seem to me that if the amendment passes and stays in the bill through the Senate there ought to be practically no opposition to the bill. Certainly, if a man will be admitted who can write, though that is not the best test of character, and then we provide further that if a man can not read, then he can get a certificate of character satisfactory to our own officials in the country where he is.

If it is the purpose to plainly and baldly attempt to keep people out of this country, they ought not to put up the sham battle of a literacy test. They ought to adopt at once the quantitative test that is in the Dillingham bill, and say to the country, "We do not care who we keep out; we just want to keep out folks." But if they simply want to keep out people whose character is not good, and let in those whose character is good, and that is what the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] said on Saturday that he wanted——

Mr. GOOD. The amendment seems to be predicated on the thought that those who can not read or write are a vicious class.

Mr. BENNET. No.

Mr. GOOD. The amendment as I heard it only provides for a character test for those who can not read or write.

Mr. BENNET. That is because they would be excluded from this country, and being excluded from this country on the literacy test, if a man can not read, let him go to his friends and neighbors and secure affidavits from them satisfactory to the United States officials, who will certify, there in the land from which he comes, that although a man can not read or write, nevertheless he will make a good citizen of the United States. And all we are asked to do is to let the man in on a certificate of our own officers after a certain investigation. And I hope the amendment will pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, no doubt there are many who, like the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], are ready to accept any kind of a provision which will reduce immigration to this country, but for myself I am not ready to support a bill which I can not defend upon ethical grounds.

There has been so much discussion with reference to the literacy test that many have come to think that the bill before us provides for no other test. Those who have considered it know that this is a great mistake. The most elaborate precautions have been taken to exclude criminals, paupers, and those afflicted with contagious diseases. The bill provides for obtaining information with reference to those intending to emigrate to this country, for boards of inspection and investigation, and for heavy penalties upon transportation lines bringing into this country emigrants in violation of our regulations. It not only provides for immediate deportation of those immigrants who have come in violation of the law, but also that any who within five years are found to have been received in violation of the law, or who advocate anarchy or the overthrow of our Government, or who are found guilty of any serious crime may be deported. Every possible means and method that can be thought of for the purpose of excluding the criminal classes has been inserted in the bill. Unfortunately there is no method of ascertaining definitely the condition of a man's mind, or whether he is controlled by criminal instincts. For that reason we have found that anarchists and dangerous criminals often elude every safeguard.

The educational test, of course, is not a perfect one. It does not test a man's character; but having gone as far as possible in that direction by the other provisions of the bill we find it necessary to supplement them by the literacy test. While this test is not a perfect one by itself, I challenge anyone to prepare a better test than it furnishes when combined with the others provided for in the bill. What can be better than to test the immigrant for character, health, means of support, and knowledge? Name, if you can, some other test that we need, or tell us why the state of mental development in the immigrant should not be considered along with his other qualifications. If a man is as useful and makes as good a citizen who can not read and write as one who has some degree of education, then we might as well do away with the whole of our school system.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. BENNET] says that the literacy test is a hypocritical test. I fear the gentleman does not understand its reason nor its object. I would not exclude any man individually, solely for the reason that he could not read or write. As a matter of charity, I would prefer to receive him and try to educate him. Individually I do not think he is dangerous, but if 300,000 or 3,000,000 in the course of a few years come to this country who can not read or write, we are unable to educate them, and they become a menace to our Government and our social system. They are not able to protect themselves nor can we protect ourselves against the danger which arises from having so large a number of illiterate aliens in our midst. I say illiterate aliens, because the danger would not be the same from the same number of illiterate Americans, although it would be very great. The illiterate alien comes here a stranger in a strange land, where everything is different than in his former home. The Government is different, our manners are different; he does not understand our language; he does not know or can he learn what is going on. He is suspicious of everything, and has no proper way of informing himself. He is easily led astray by those of his own nationality who have been here long enough to acquire some knowledge of our habits, customs, and language, and thus frequently becomes a victim of the vicious, the immoral, and the criminal classes. Flocking to our large cities and herding together in great masses, they neither learn nor improve. Being unskilled and unorganized, they cut down the wages of American workmen and lower the standards of living.

Such, Mr. Chairman, is the effect of the immigration which we seek to reduce by the literacy test. I know of no greater danger to our institutions than that which comes from having these great masses of illiterates crowding into our cities in such a way that we can not assimilate nor can we improve them.

The fact that in the years gone by many excellent people have come to this country who could not read or write is no argument against applying the literacy test now, for the reason that conditions are altogether different. In the early days of this Republic immigrants did not come here in such vast numbers, nor did they congregate in the large cities so exclusively. They lived under better conditions, and it was easier for them to rise than now. In New York and Chicago there are colonies and localities almost entirely inhabited by one race of foreigners, so extensive and numerous that few of our cities of 50 years ago would have equaled them in population. It is true that the literacy test does not exclude the anarchist, but it is among illiterate communities that anarchism develops, that the criminal classes find protection, that immorality flourishes. It is in such communities that we find the black-hand societies, the organizations of gunmen, and those who denounce our Government and are ready to spit on our flag. This is why we need the literacy test. We must have it, not only to maintain American standards of living but to maintain the Government itself.

My colleague [Mr. TOWNER] has offered an amendment which attempts to make provision for an examination as to the character and fitness of those who are rejected on account of the literacy test. As I understand it, he would permit evidence in the form of affidavits to be offered to some one of our consuls showing the good character of the person rejected on account of the literacy test, and if our officials were satisfied with the evidence the emigrant might be permitted to take passage to this country and enter it. With all deference to my colleague, who has doubtless prepared this amendment with a great deal of care, it does not seem to me to be practicable. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] and my colleague [Mr. TOWNER] say that there ought to be no objection, because the matter is to be decided upon by testimony that is satisfactory to some official of our Government. But an official of our Government has no means of knowing whether those who furnished the evidence upon which he is to act are themselves of good character and reputation. How is he to obtain an opportunity to look up the character and reputation of those who make the affidavits? On the face of it the evidence might be quite sufficient, but if an opportunity were given to look up the matter the evidence might be found to be absolutely worthless. It would be a strange man that could not present two affidavits of good character from a community in which he lived, no matter what his character in fact was. It would be as easy as getting signers to a petition.

Mr. MANN. What would happen if one of our consuls, a representative of our country, should undertake to say that men over there that had filed affidavits were not men of good character?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The difficulty is, I understand, that he has no way of determining whether they are or not.

Mr. MANN. Under this amendment he has to determine. Suppose he does determine that a man is not of good character and happens to determine wrong? Would there not be quite a hubbub?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; I think there would be a great deal of trouble. It certainly would bring our officials into conflict with those of foreign nations. I think the amendment should be defeated.

Much has been said in regard to those who are the victims of religious persecution and are seeking an asylum of liberty in this country. With reference to such persons we are not only liberal but generous in the bill, as they are exempt from the literacy test. I am glad this exemption is contained in the bill, for it removes, as it seems to me, all reasonable objections to it. I know it will be said that there are many who have never had any opportunity for an education who would make good citizens and wish to come to this country, but it should be remembered that the test required is slight. I have no fears but that the bright and capable will qualify themselves. There will be, of course, a few excluded whose case is pitiable and unfortunate; but, Mr. Chairman, we can not relieve all of the misery and destitution in the world. We are assuming and will continue to bear a great burden in this matter of immigration. We ought to continue to do so as long as we can support it, but when the weight of the burden threatens to crush us and our institutions no principle of morality and justice forbids us to lighten it. It is because these people who are now excluded have permitted the darkness of misgovernment and oppression to settle upon them that they now knock at our doors to obtain light and freedom. If we permit them to come here in too great numbers, the same misgovernment will follow, the same darkness will settle upon us, and the beacon light of freedom for the world will go out.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TREADWAY: Insert, at the end of section 3, the following new paragraph:

"The Secretary of Labor shall cause to be examined papers of admission of all aliens at the expiration of three years from the date of admission. Within that period every male alien above the age of 21 years must file a supplemental affidavit that he has applied to the proper officials for citizenship, and will comply with the necessary requirements to become an American citizen. Any alien not furnishing such affidavit with proper evidence from a court having charge of naturalization within six months after the expiration of three years shall be deported under direction of the Secretary of Labor.

"This section is not applicable to diplomats or consular representatives, or to persons sent as the special representatives of their Government in any official capacity to the United States, or to persons coming as students to regular institutions of learning, a certificate to this effect having been filed with the original admission papers."

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane, and therefore is not in order.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman will reserve his point of order. I think it is absolutely germane, and I would be glad to argue the point of order if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman can address himself to the point of order if he desires.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has to do with the question of the right of entry to this country of aliens, and that is the exact title of the bill itself. It is one "to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States." I maintain that the conditions under which we provide for citizenship in the United States can very readily be made a right of entrance here.

We have been altogether too free with the alien after his arrival here. This bill is trying to raise a new standard of right of entrance, and I maintain that the attitude can very well be taken that we should require of aliens the taking out of citizenship. We are regarded as a melting pot of the nations of the world, and practically people of every kind have been admitted to this country. But we never have asked them whether or not they expect to remain here as citizens. It seems to me perfectly right and proper that if they are to have the right of our institutions, the opportunity for education in our schools, and all that goes with the right to citizenship, they ought to be forced likewise to bear the responsibilities of citizenship.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will yield to the gentleman for a brief question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman think that the forcing of citizenship on a man, to be a citizen of the country, would make for good?

Mr. TREADWAY. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that he either ought to be a citizen or he ought to be returned at the expiration of three years to the country from which he came. We are not anxious to force citizenship on him, but he ought to take out that privilege, provided he intends to remain permanently in this country.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. I did not catch the full force of the gentleman's amendment in the reading. Is the penalty of deportation provided in case they do not become citizens?

Mr. TREADWAY. The Secretary of Labor is required to deport him at the end of three years if the alien has not applied for citizenship.

Mr. FESS. I believe the law now requires that a man who makes application for citizenship must be able to read and write?

Mr. TREADWAY. This has nothing to do with the literacy test, I will say to the gentleman from Ohio. This amendment does not involve the literacy test in any way whatever. It has to do with the alien being required to become a citizen.

Mr. FESS. Is that the law today in regard to a man making his declaration to become a citizen?

Mr. TREADWAY. As it is now a man can stay here all his lifetime without becoming a citizen.

Mr. FESS. But does not the law now——

Mr. TREADWAY. Can not the gentleman speak in his own time?

Mr. FESS. I am asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. TREADWAY. I will answer a question in regard to the amendment I have offered.

Mr. FESS. Does not the law now require an educational test before a man can become a citizen?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; but that is not involved in my amendment. This amendment requires that the alien shall be compelled to become a citizen if he stays here three years. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a question that ought to be incorporated in our immigration laws and that it pertains strictly to the bill before us. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this would have its place, if anywhere, in a naturalization law, but I do not think it germane to this section of the bill, which is purely intended to cover the qualifications for those who are entering as immigrants.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. As I understood the amendment, it is not an amendment that affects naturalization at all.

Mr. TREADWAY. Not in the slightest degree.

Mr. MANN. But it affects deportation. Inasmuch as it does not affect naturalization, it ought to be in this bill; it should be in this bill and not in a naturalization bill.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I think it is peculiarly a matter of naturalization. I do not think I caught all of the reading of the amendment, but that is my idea.

Mr. MANN. It is not a matter that you could put into a naturalization bill. It provides certain exceptions; that unless a man becomes naturalized he shall be deported as an alien. That would be germane to this bill, rather than to a naturalization bill, I should think.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. This section 3 deals entirely, Mr. Chairman, with the excluded classes. The section that deals with deportation of arriving aliens is section 18. Section 19 deals with the deportation of resident aliens.

Mr. MANN. The question involved is the right of aliens to come here and stay here and not be excluded. This is an excluding class. This section relates to excluding classes, not merely those who may be excluded when they come in, but also those who may be excluded afterwards. It is a definition of the excluding classes.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. This does not deal with those who are deported afterwards. It refers to those who are excluded on arrival. The section to which the gentleman refers is section 19.

Mr. MANN. No. This deals with the classes which are to be excluded. The provision that they shall be deported may be in another section, but this defines the classes that may be excluded.

Mr. GARDNER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, section 3 deals entirely with the question of what classes shall be excluded on their admission to this country. In section 19 deportation is provided for those who, for some reason or other, after a residence in this country, are found either to be here in violation of the law or to be deportable in consequence of something which has occurred since their admission.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks that the section of the bill now under consideration applies to the qualifications of aliens who are entitled to come into this country. The amendment proposed provides that after the lapse of three years the Secretary of Labor may cause the alien to make an affidavit that he is over 21 years of age and that he has applied for citizenship, and so forth. If he has not done so at that time, the Secretary has the right to see that he is deported. The Chair thinks that this amendment does not apply to section 3 of the bill, which provides the qualifications to admission and as to those who may be excluded and not as to deportation. It may be that there is another section in the bill to which it does apply, but not to this. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentray inquiry. Does the Chair rule that the amendment I have offered will be in order when section 19 is reached?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that there may be some other section to which it would be in order, but not to this one. The Chair does not undertake to decide that it would be applicable to any other section of the bill, and could not so state now.

Mr. TREADWAY. I understood my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to infer that, as far as he was concerned, he considered it to be in order under section 19.

Mr. GARDNER. Oh, I did not mean to be understood in any such way as that. I shall give it consideration when it comes up there. I shall oppose the amendment, because I think it is a very bad one.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not doubt that. Our judgments seldom agree.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, has the Chair had his attention called to the provision on page 7, beginning on line 15—

but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state that this does refer to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act, but still the Chair thinks that does not overcome the objection to the amendment as offered to this section.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Page 10, line 12, after the word "servants," insert the words "or persons employed strictly as farm laborers."

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to put the farmer on the same basis as the merchant or banker living in the city. This committee, after careful consideration, decided that the alien contract-labor provision of the law should not be applied to people employed as domestics, or as footmen or butlers, or in such capacities. At this time only 2 per cent of the immigrants ever reach the farms to work as laborers, and it would seem to me that the farmers, who constitute about one-third of our population, ought to be entitled to more than 2 per cent of the immigrant laborers.

There is another feature to this. The farmers of the United States are now practically in open competition with the farmers of all the world, and upon that theory there should be freedom for the farmer to employ labor anywhere that he can find it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In my section of the country, eastern Pennsylvania and New Jersey, it is true that it is difficult to obtain men to work upon the farms. They find more profitable employment elsewhere, and the farmer has to do his own work. But I wanted to ask the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] whether, in view of the demand for farm labor in his section of the country, we could not induce some of the preferred classes to go out there—some of the surplus lawyers, physicians, religious teachers, artists, students, and merchants—to perform some of this much-needed labor on the farms?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will tell the gentleman that there is plenty of work for them to do on our farms, but I am afraid they would not be equal to the requirements of a North Dakota farm. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it not be a good thing for them if they did? Some of these great lawyers and teachers might be of service in reaping the harvests and stacking hay and working in the fields.

Mr. EMERSON. And ex-Congressmen.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And newspaper men.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I am afraid they could not hold down a job on a North Dakota farm.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Could not the gentleman take some of them out to his State and relieve the congested conditions in the larger cities?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. We would be glad to welcome them there.

Mr. PLATT. Could you not use a few Philadelphia lawyers?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Or a few newspaper men from Poughkeepsie?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. While I respect the gentlemen who have submitted these questions, I must say that if eastern editors were to come to our State they would find the competition fierce in clashing with the brains of our editors, and we have no criminals requiring the services of Philadelphia lawyers.

Canadian farmers have the right to select men across the water who are working on farms there—good, strong, able-bodied men accustomed to work on farms. It is permissible under their laws to write a letter to any friend, or to send a ticket and pay his way over. That is something we can not do under the provisions of this law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that in 1913 when we received 1,427,000 emigrants from abroad only 18,000 of them were classed as farmers.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman is absolutely incorrect about that by several hundred per cent.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the statement I received from the department, anyway.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Only a very small proportion are farm laborers who have come in recent years.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. SABATH. I will say to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] that I am in favor of his amendment. However, I would like to know where he gets his statistics? In this connection I desire to say that in 1910, as shown by the census of that year, in the Middle Atlantic States there were on the farms 776,702 persons of foreign birth; in the east North Central States there were on the farms 877,929 persons of foreign birth; in the west North Central States, 981,535; on the farms of the Mountain States there were 263,579; and on the farms of the Pacific States there were 332,960 persons of foreign birth, or nearly 30 per cent of the entire rural population of the country were, in 1910, composed of aliens.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. My statistics were directed to farm laborers, not to residents upon farms, without regard to when they came here, and my reference was also to recent years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that the time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] if it is not a fact also that in the census period between 1900 and 1910, the number of immigrants or aliens on farms increased about 25 per cent.

Mr. SABATH. I do not know the exact figures—between 20 and 25 per cent, or it may be a little more.

Mr. BENNET. About that percentage.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentlemen forget that my amendment has reference only to farm laborers. Besides their figures are antiquated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Farmers' Union of the United States has appeared before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and advocated the passage of this bill. Can the gentleman say what influence this would have on his section of the country?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That particular organization has few members in North Dakota as compared with other farmers' organizations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's amendment is proposed to meet the actual needs of the farmer in North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The farmers of North Dakota have difficulty in getting reliable workers on the farm, and that condition is true of the entire West.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the chairman of the committee will bear me out in the statement that many representatives of the farmers' organizations have appeared and urgently insisted that no immigrants be admitted into this country even though they might be called workers on the farm. What I would like to know is, if that opinion so prevails in North Dakota as to induce the House to feel that it would be acting right in denying this right to the farmers of North Dakota?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I am satisfied, as far as our State is concerned, that the farmers want the privilege of bringing in farm labor. In the Southern States, where the Farmers' Union is strong, plenty of help is available from the colored population.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do the Canadians have as much labor as they need?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. They have a better chance, and my belief is they are better supplied.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has it not been the custom of the Canadians to ship over men from Great Britain and pass them over the railroad to Saskatchewan or Alberta for harvest purposes?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Not for the brief period of a harvest, but they do permit a Manitoba farmer to pay for a ticket from Europe to Manitoba. He can go to one of the agents of the steamship companies, pay his money to him, and have it go to the credit of the one they want to come. In that way they are able to get, for instance, strong Scotchmen that will do enough work to kill some of the itinerants, such as we pick up to work on the farms, who float into our State.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Your immigrants heretofore have been from what part of Europe?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mostly from Norway.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And all of them can read?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Many years ago a few of them could not, but now all of them can. There was a time when we had some who could not read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But those were men that did not work on the farm.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes, they did; and they were good workers.

Mr. SLAYDEN. There is no such thing as inability to read in Norway among those who have reached the reading age?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That is true.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And your immigrants come mostly from Scandinavia?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. A fair portion of them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, even Holland and Germany, but all sections of the country are not so fortunate. The immigrants that come to Texas from the south of us are not reading people, and, in spite of what my distinguished friend said the other day, this bill does not permit them to come in.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. This amendment does not eliminate the literacy test, it only applies to the contract provision. A man in North Dakota, if he writes a letter to a man in Scotland asking him to come over here and telling him he will give him a job on his farm, commits a crime.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is an old statute.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Now, it is entirely different in Manitoba.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Would the gentleman's amendment admit contract oriental labor to come here to work on farms?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. No. It would admit anybody that is not excluded by other sections of the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It would admit Mexican laborers, would it not?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Yes; I think it would, providing they could pass the literacy test and were otherwise qualified as per the provisions of the entire law.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I may say that if I know how to reflect the views of the people down in my State, they do not want it.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment for the purpose of calling the attention of the House——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. FOCHT. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. SABATH. Can I have 3 minutes out of the 10?

Mr. BURNETT. I will yield the gentleman part of my time if the gentleman from New York will yield some of his.

Mr. BENNET. I will yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I will make the request 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment close in 15 minutes.

Mr. NORTON. Reserving the right to object, may I have two or three minutes?

Mr. BENNET. I will give the gentleman two minutes out of my time.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not understand that gentlemen can parcel out the time among themselves.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was waiting for gentlemen to make some arrangement. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair stop me at the end of one minute, and then I will yield two to the gentleman from North Dakota and two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to the fact that this amendment has nothing to do with the literacy test or oriental labor. It is simply in relation to people who would be excluded under the contract-labor clause, and will allow a farmer in North Dakota to write a letter to a Scotchman saying if you will come here to the United States I will give you a job on my farm, and as a city man, I think my country brother ought to have a chance. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New York says, the amendment has nothing to do with the literacy test. This provision on page 10 permits the entry of professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers, ministers of any religious denomination, professors for colleges or seminaries, persons belonging to any recognized learned profession, or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

I believe it will be for the benefit of all the country, of those living in the cities as well as those living in the country, to permit to come into the United States immigrants who declare their intention, and whose intentions are to work upon the farms of the country; immigrants who come here willing to work to produce more of the things that we need to eat and more of the raw materials which we need to make into the clothing we wear. No man who comes to this country to occupy himself as a farm laborer will be an injury to the better civilization, higher development, or progress of this Nation. On the other hand, each hour and each day of his labor will add to the happiness, wealth, and prosperity of the Nation. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the number of aliens engaged in the farming industry in this country, I would be very grateful to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] if he would furnish me with the statistics—not now, but some other time. I imagine they are so voluminous that they would take up most of the time that I have.

Mr. SABATH. I will be glad to do that now.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, Pennsylvania is a great agricultural State, although some people think that we produce nothing but coal and iron there. You may go out into any of the great valleys there, and I challenge the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to find any aliens speaking a foreign tongue. These aliens do not go to the country to work on farms. They are around in the towns running little cheap restaurants, fruit stands, bootblack stands, and the like, and they do not produce the things which sustain life. I can not agree with the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] that we have such great demand for these aliens in the rural districts. For my part, we do not want them. As I said the other day, it is not because I have any feeling against them personally, nationally, or in a religious way, but it is because there are too many of them here now, and we want more work and better wages for Americans.

I wish to answer the assertions of several speakers who have said that existing law is sufficient to keep out the defective, dependent, and delinquent classes of aliens by inserting the expert opinions of the present commissioner of immigration at Boston, Hon. Henry J. Skeffington, and of Hon. William Williams, for years commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island, New York City; the conclusions of the congressional immigration commission, as shown by House Document 1489, Sixtieth Congress; and the brief two-page statement of the United States Bureau of Immigration in its last annual report, enumerating about 50 reasons why the Burnett bill should become law.

The statement of the United States commissioner of immigration at Boston, Mr. Skeffington, is to be found in the Boston Daily Advertiser of January 28, 1916, less than two months ago, and is as follows:

How alien labor has gradually replaced American labor in this country and the consequent need of some restriction on immigration, the need of a largely increased force of officials to guard the Canadian border, the need of a new immigration station at this port, and the acknowledgment of little activity in suppressing the white-slave industry, owing to lack of funds and men, are told by Henry J. Skeffington, commissioner of immigration at this port, in touching recitals of actual experiences and cases coming up at the local station in reviewing the work of the local office for 1915.

The annual report did not contain many features which were submitted to the Washington officials, extracts from which Mr. Skeffington made public last evening.

Commissioner Skeffington said in part: "One of the notable effects of our present immigration policy is seen in the gradual change of the character of population. The unrestricted inflow of immigrants directly tends to drive out the native stock, which obviously is unable to compete with those maintaining a lower standard of living. In Massachusetts the proportion of native stock gradually has diminished, in part through emigration to other States, but largely by failure on account of economic causes to reproduce itself. A similar decline has begun among those races that made up the bulk of our immigration during the greater part of the last century.

"The foreign element of the population of Massachusetts, according to statistics, constitutes more than 60 per cent of the total population. These figures suggest the price that is being paid for unrestricted immigraion.

"Because we see the necessity of restricting immigration, we hope the literacy test or some equally effective measure will be passed by the next Congress.

"The history of the immigration station at Boston affords a fine illustration of the unfortunate effects of the prevailing system. It is the business of Congress to say what amount shall be spent for the maintenance of this service, but the result of congressional dictation as to means and ways of spending the amount appropriated is shown in the experience of Boston, the second port in the country, which has been compelled year after year to put up with a station that by unanimous assent is a disgrace to the Government and a menace to the health and life of those who are unfortunate enough to abide in it.

"It is notable that other ports, some in the third and fourth class, and none in the class with Boston, have been provided with ample facilities, and in some cases with building and equipment years in advance of the actual demand for their use. The walls, partitions, and ceilings of matchboards of the local station have become hopelessly infested with insect life. The local army of vermin which comes out at night to forage on the inmates of the dormitories is reenforced by new installments or detachments of bugs and lice brought into the station with every arriving ship, and immigrants who may be free from vermin when they arrive at the station are likely soon to become infested from their associations there.

"The fallacy of basing a curtailment of the office force on the reductions in immigration is illustrated by the record of warrant cases in this district, which shows an increase over the year 1914 of more than 40 per cent.

"Suppression of the white-slave traffic is aimed at by local city authorities, and appears to be fairly successful. For anything like adequate control, however, there should be an organized plan of teamwork between Federal, State, and city authorities, in which each member of the team might be given specific duties. One of the duties of the immigration officials under such a working program would be a constant and vigilant espionage of the rendezvous of the immoral classes. Such a plan at the present time would be especially effective, in view of the large numbers of women and girls who are believed to have arrived from eastern Canada as a result of stringent regulations enforced by the Dominion authorities.

"One of the serious handicaps to the enforcement of the immigration law is found in the lack of practical cooperation between this department and the Department of Justice. The more or less constant delays arising in the conduct of cases that eventually go before the courts are not only disheartening to responsible immigration officials but extremely detrimental to successful administration of important provisions of the immigration law. The steamship companies naturally complain because of the excessive expenses incidental to the long periods of detention to which the aliens involved are subjected. Here, again, the 'system' rather than individuals must be criticized.

"Evidence continues to accumulate in favor of higher and higher standards of medical inspection of immigrants. Of 334 alien residents who were reported by State officials in New England as public charges on account of mental or physical conditions existing prior to landing, very few received medical certificates of any sort at the time of arrival. These public-charge cases related largely to conditions 'whose demonstration at the time of arrival calls for careful time-consuming mental examinations or organized laboratory work,' facilities for which have been conspicuous by their absence."

The statement of the United States Commissioner of Immigration at New York City, Mr. William Williams, who served in that capacity longer than any other man and was recently succeeded by the present commissioner, Mr. Howe, being appointed by Mayor Mitchel to the high office of commissioner of water supply, gas, and electricity, is to be found in one of his annual reports, and similar statements can be found in each of his many annual reports. It is as follows:

The present laws do not reach a large body of immigrants who are generally undesirable because unintelligent, of low vitality, poor physique, able to perform only the cheapest kind of labor, desirous of settling almost exclusively in the cities, by their competition tending to reduce the standard of living of the American wageworker, and unfitted either mentally or morally for good citizenship. It would be quite impossible to accurately state what proportion of last year's immigration should be classified as undesirable. I believe that at least a third came here last year who, although they may be able to earn a living, yet are not wanted and will be of no benefit to the country, and will, on the contrary, be a detriment, because their presence will tend to lower our standards. Their coming has been a benefit chiefly, if not only, to the transportation companies which brought them over.

The very brief findings of the congressional Immigration Commission, composed of three Members of this House, three of the Senate, and three other distinguished men, and embracing and characterizing all the mass of evidence later published in the commission's 40-volume report, is, according to House Document No. 1489, Sixtieth Congress, reported to this House by Congressman WILLIAM S. BENNET, of New York City, and again a Member of this House, is as follows:

Many undeniably undesirable persons are admitted every year. There is a dangerous and apparently growing criminal element in the country due to immigration. Many women are being regularly imported under conditions which amount to absolute slavery.

It is generally admitted by those acquainted with the subject that, notwithstanding the fact that the present law proposes to provide for the exclusion of every undesirable immigrant, many undeniably undesirable persons are admitted every year. The commission's inquiries concerning defective and delinquent classes show this fact very clearly, and in a way which, it is believed, will be thoroughly understood and appreciated. In theory the law debars criminals, but in fact many enter; the law debars persons likely to become public charges, but data secured by the commission show that too many immigrants become such within a short time after landing. The same is true of other classes nominally, at least, debarred by the law. In short, the law in theory, so far as its exclusion provisions are concerned, is exceptionally strong, but in effect it is, in some respects, weak and ineffectual. The commission has discovered several sources of this weakness; it is its purpose to find the others and to recommend some effective remedies.

And in the first of the forty-one 500-page volumes of its final report the commission said in its summary of its whole four years' investigation at home and abroad:

The investigations of the commission show an oversupply of unskilled labor in the basic industries to an extent which indicates an oversupply of unskilled labor in the industries of the country as a whole, and therefore demands legislation which will at the present time restrict the further admission of such unskilled labor.

It is desirable in making the restriction that—

(a) A sufficient number be debarred to produce a marked effect upon the present supply of unskilled labor.

(b) As far as possible, the aliens excluded should be those who come to this country with no intention to become American citizens or even to maintain a permanent residence here, but merely to save enough, by the adoption, if necessary, of low standards of living, to return permanently to their home country. Such persons are usually men unaccompanied by wives or children.

(c) As far as possible the aliens excluded should also be those who, by reason of their personal qualities or habits, would least readily be assimilated or would make the least desirable citizens.

The following methods of restricting immigration have been suggested:

(a) The exclusion of those unable to read or write in some language.

(b) The limitation of the number of each race arriving each year to a certain percentage of the average of that race arriving during a given period of years.
(c) The exclusion of unskilled laborers unaccompanied by wives or families.
(d) The limitation of the number of immigrants arriving annually at any port.
(e) The material increase in the amount of money required to be in the possession of the immigrant at the port of arrival.
(f) The material increase of the head tax.
(g) The levy of the head tax so as to make a marked discrimination in favor of men with families.
All these methods would be effective in one way or another in securing restrictions in greater or less degree. A majority (8 out of 9) of the commission favor the reading-and-writing test as the most feasible single method of restricting undesirable immigration.

In its last annual report, the United States Bureau of Immigration, at pages 39 to 41, says, under the heading "The Burnett bill":

In the last report the view was expressed that favorable action upon the various new provisions and administrative features of the Burnett bill would result in placing upon the statute books a system for the regulation of immigration which, with the furnishing of proper financial means, would insure just treatment to all arrivals, maximum efficiency of administration, and many benefits to the country at large. The veto of the measure for reasons wholly aside from any of the admirable administrative features which it contained of course resulted in the loss of the entire proposed law. This is very much to be regretted, for the Immigration Service has suffered materially from the failure to secure the remedial and other provisions constituting the administrative features of the proposed law. In the main these features have been recommended as necessary for the proper administration and execution of the immigration and exclusion laws since 1910, and have been inserted in two bills, the Dillingham bill and the Burnett bill, both of which failed, not through any inherent weakness or objection to such remedial or administrative features, but because opposition developed to other features thereof.
Under these circumstances, bearing in mind the responsibilities of the department in the administration and execution of the immigration and exclusion laws of the country and the far-reaching effects of the failure for many years to obtain the desired amendments—to which in the main there has been no objection—it is again urged upon the department to recommend early consideration of the recommendations submitted to the last Congress.
My reasons for this suggestion may be better understood if attention is given to the following brief description of the recommendations regarding the remedial legislation and administrative features adopted in the Burnett bill and statement of the more important respects in which they would improve the existing law:
1. They have been drawn with great care and thoughtfulness and in such manner as to conform to all Supreme Court decisions that have passed upon the principles involved, and also with a view to overcome those court decisions which, dealing with matters not of principle but of form, have cut down the intended force and effect of the existing statute.
2. They contain the result of experience and investigation—of the experience of administrative officers, extending over nearly a quarter of a century, in the enforcement of various statutes regulating immigration, and of the investigations conducted variously but in particular by the Immigration Commission created under the act of 1907, the report of which, comprising 42 volumes, was submitted to Congress in December, 1910.
3. By them the law is made certain in its definitions and clear in its terms throughout—improvements badly needed in the existing statute.
4. In particular, they improve the existing law by—
(a) Applying it to aliens coming from the insular possessions to the mainland, meeting a serious problem which for several years has confronted the Immigration Service.
(b) Closing the enormous gap in the regulation of immigration, consisting of the ease with which undesirable aliens can enter the country by pretending to be sailors.
(c) Making the collection of head tax more easy, more certain, and more equitable.
(d) Adding to the list of aliens excluded several new classes shown by experience to be especially undesirable for moral, mental, physical, or economic reasons.
(e) Making the exclusion of all the inhibited classes more thorough and certain.
(f) Materially strengthening the provisions relating to the sexually immoral or white-slave classes with respect both to exclusion and expulsion.
(g) Extending the scope of the contract-labor and related provisions so as effectually to exclude or expel induced and solicited immigrants and adequately to punish the importers, and at the same time making it really feasible for employers to import skilled help if such help is not procurable in the United States.
(h) Including in the measure carefully devised and uniformly applied plans for the effective control of the activities of steamship companies, the principal feature of which is the use of the administrative-fine method with the power of refusal of clearance that has proven so effective in enforcing section 9 of the existing statute, instead of the court-prosecution method that has proven unsatisfactory in enforcing the present law.
(i) Providing for the abatement of the evils, so serious in the past, growing out of the smuggling of aliens into the United States, the crime being properly defined and adequately punished.
(j) Extending the use and effectiveness of those humane provisions of existing law which are intended to prevent the bringing of ineligible aliens to our ports.
(k) Providing for a much more thorough examination by inspectors and doctors of aliens seeking admission, and clothing the officials with sufficient authority to insure proper performance of their duties.
(l) Making the inspection of steerage quarters of vessels more thorough.
(m) Compelling steamship officials to return in quarters equally comfortable as those in which brought aliens excluded at United States ports, abating a serious imposition.
(n) Providing for the release under bond of, or the payment of witness fees to, aliens detained as witnesses, who under existing law have to be detained in confinement pending the bringing of prosecutions or suits.
(o) Clarifying those provisions of the law of 1907 intended to give the department authority to remove smuggled Chinese from the country under the summary administrative process of the immigration law instead of using the cumbersome and often ineffective process of the exclusion laws.
(p) Making possible the expulsion from the country of alien anarchists and criminals, even when they have become such after entry.
(q) Fixing a definite and easily followed rule with respect to the conferring of citizenship upon wives and minor children of naturalized aliens.
(r) Compelling railroad companies engaged in carrying aliens across our land boundaries to provide suitable sanitary detention quarters for the immigrants.
It should be borne in mind that the foregoing recommendations for remedial legislation were submitted long before the European war situation arose. They were much needed under normal conditions; and it is readily apparent that, whatever the general results of the war may be, the importance of adopting the suggestions can not be reduced, but, on the contrary, must be increased thereby to such an extent that their adoption becomes an imperative necessity.

These official findings and expert opinions unanswerably refute the statement that existing law is sufficient to keep out even the admittedly undesirable aliens, just as do official State reports and the long memorial from the New York State General Assembly of only last year, asking that the Federal Government either exercise its exclusive power to regulate foreign commerce by excluding undesirables, or reimburse the State treasury and the Empire State taxpayers about $5,000,000 a year for the insane and pauper in her public institutions.

ATTITUDE OF WOODROW WILSON TOWARD RESTRICTION.

In his History of the American People, published in 1902, Prof. Woodrow Wilson, the historian and scholar and college president, wrote:

The census of 1890 showed the population of the country increased to 62,622,250, an addition of 12,466,467 within the decade. Immigrants poured steadily in as before, but with an alteration of stock which students of affairs marked with uneasiness. Throughout the century men of the sturdy stocks of the north of Europe had made up the main strain of foreign blood which was every year added to the vital working force of the country, or else men of the Latin-Gallic stocks of France and northern Italy; but now there came multitudes of men of the lowest class from the south of Italy and men of the meaner sort out of Hungary and Poland—men out of the ranks where there was neither skill nor energy nor any initiative of quick intelligence—and they came in numbers which increased from year to year, as if the countries of the south of Europe were disburdening themselves of the more sordid and hapless elements of their population, the men whose standards of life and of work were such as American workmen had never dreamed of hitherto. The people of the Pacific coast had clamored these many years against the admission of immigrants out of China, and in May, 1892, got at last what they wanted—a Federal statute which practically excluded from the United States all Chinese who had not already acquired the right of residence; and yet the Chinese were more to be desired, as workmen if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that came crowding in every year at the eastern ports. (History of the American People, vol. 5, p. 212.)

According to the daily press of September 5, 1912, from one coast to the other and from border to border, Gov. Woodrow Wilson, candidate for the Presidency, said, on September 4, 1912, before the editors of foreign language newspapers in New York City:

If we can hit upon a standard which admits every voluntary immigrant and excludes those who have not come of their own motion, with their own purpose of making a home and a career here for themselves, but have been induced by steamship companies or others in order to pay the passage money, then we will have what we will all agree upon as Americans. I am speaking to you as also Americans with myself, and just as much American as myself, and if we all take the American point of view, namely, that we want American life kept to its standards, and that only the standards of American life shall be standards of restriction, then we are all upon a common ground, not of those who criticize immigration, but those who declare themselves Americans. I am not saying that I am wise enough out of hand to frame the legislation that will meet this idea. I am only saying that it is the ideal, and that is what we ought to hold ourselves to * * * Of course, if the immigrants are allowed to come in uninstructed hosts and to stop at the ports where they enter, and there to compete in an oversupplied labor market, there is going to be unhappiness; there is going to be deterioration; there is going to be everything that will be detrimental to the immigrant.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], who said that he would like to know the statistics, I will tell him that if he will consult them he would see that 80 per cent of the people in his State alone are aliens, and nearly 20 per cent of those of mixed parentage live in the rural districts.

Mr. FOCHT. But they came over here over a hundred and fifty years ago.

Mr. SABATH. Again the gentleman is mistaken. I am not speaking of them, and I hope that the gentleman does not consider them aliens. They should not be considered as such, even by him. The people who came here 150 years ago are not aliens. They and their children have been imbued with the great national spirit of our country and are entitled to be referred to and considered as American citizens. Of course the gentleman from Pennsylvania might only regard as Americans those who came to this country in the Mayflower.

I hope that the gentleman will see the distinction and will not again interrupt me.

I wish to say that I have here accurate figures which show that in the Middle Atlantic States the foreign-born people residing in the rural districts number 776,702, and those of mixed parentage 985,331, or a total of 1,761,491. In the east North Central States the foreign rural population numbers 877,929, and of mixed parentage 1,930,742, or a total of 2,807,000 and odd. In the west North Central States the rural foreign-born population is 981,535, and those of mixed parentage 2,124,634, or a total of 3,106,000 and odd. In the Mountain States the rural population of foreign-born people is 263,579 and of mixed parentage 357,790, or a total of over 620,000. In the Pacific States the foreign-born rural population is 332,960 and of mixed parentage 405,207, or a total of over 737,000.

Mr. FOCHT. During what period of time did those immigrants come to this country?

Mr. SABATH. They are aliens, not natives of the United States. Most of them must have come to this country in the last 25 years, because the percentage has wonderfully increased in that time. So that to-day the percentage of foreign-born people is much greater in the rural districts than in 1900 or in 1890. Therefore, the statements on the part of those gentlemen who persistently maintain that the immigrant does not go to the farm are not founded upon facts. What the immigrant desires most, as soon as he can accomplish it, is to secure a piece of land that he can call his own, and you will find that the great Northwest and western sections of our country have been mainly developed by the work and cooperation of the immigrant.

Mr. FOCHT. But we are not objecting to that class of immigrants who went out there and settled on the land given to them by the Government or the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., but that kind of people who have been coming here during the last 20 years. Those are the people we object to.

Mr. SABATH. I say that those people who have been coming to this country for the last 20 years, Poles, Bohemians, and others, are people whose main ambition it is to get on the farm. The moment they acquire a few dollars and as soon as they become acquainted with the conditions of the country, they move and settle on the farms. Every day they are leaving the great city of Chicago and other industrial centers for the rural districts.

For the information of the gentleman I will say that in the year 1910 there were 6,361,502 farms, of which 478,451,750 acres were under cultivation and 400,346,575 acres were unimproved. This shows that 45.6 per cent of our total farm land, not including land unadapted for farm purposes, is still unimproved, so that there is still plenty of room for the immigrant.

I will also show the difference between the percentage of farm land improved in the Northern States to which the immigrant goes and the Southern States where we do not find so many.

Percentage of farm land improved.

	Per cent.
East North Central States	75.4
West North Central States	70.6
South Atlantic	46.7
East South Central	53.9

Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and others, who are continually making these insinuations against the immigration which we have been receiving for the past 20 or 30 years, would acquaint themselves with the facts, they would not continue to misrepresent these people.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, the statistics just read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] are like all of the other arguments used in this bill. He is facing backward. He is talking about aliens on the farms of this country, and they are the same kind of aliens as my parents were who came 70 years ago, and whose children are now called foreigners in the statistics he quotes. If the gentleman would give us the statistics of the last 5 or 6 or 7 years and tell us what kind of immigrants are coming that will be affected by this bill, then they would be of some value; but as he uses them they are worthless.

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will give me time, I will give it to him in five minutes.

Mr. HELGESEN. I have not time to yield. The kind of people affected by this bill all go to the industrial centers of the country, and you could not get them to go on a farm.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that Sullivan County, New York State, has, within the past five years, received over 600 families of immigrants who have gone up there, purchased farms, and their children are the ones who are marked the highest in the high schools of that county.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, that is 600 out of nine or ten millions here. I would have no serious objection to the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota but for this fact: Those who come over here as farm laborers—and they are stated on the ship's manifest as farm laborers—and if they get in under a contract, in a very little while you would find them working in the coal mines, on the railroads, in the factories, and beating down the price of the wages of the laboring men. That is the real objection I have to it. If it only admitted the class of labor coming across into the gentleman's country over the Canadian border, men of the same class and same type, a great many like our splendid citizenship that is going from our country over the border into Canada, I would have no objection to it; but, Mr. Chairman, I know what would happen. The south Italian and the Mexican would come in under contract, and what would they care for the contract when they got in? The young men who come across the Canadian border into the Northwest do not have to have a contract made on the other side; they come voluntarily. I am aware of the fact that the contract-labor law does not involve the question of literacy test. The farmers along the Texas border have not asked for it, and the farmers along the Canadian border have not asked for it, and they would not do so if they realized the danger to which it would lead. Some man would set himself up to be a farmer down in Texas and make a contract to bring a hundred or two hundred Mexican peons over as farm laborers, and the first thing you know they would be going to work on the railroads or in the copper mines and beating down the price of the labor of some American.

I appreciate the force of the argument made by the honorable gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], and there is force in it; but the danger that would result, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, more than outweighs any possible advantage, because, in my judgment, 90 per cent of the young men that come over into the gentleman's country and work on the farms come of their own volition. They do not wait for some one to go and make a contract to induce them to come over, but they come of their own volition and work on the farms, and after they get in it is all right for the farmer to make a contract with them. I fear that such an amendment would open wide our doors—too wide. The aliens who came to this country 20 or 30 years ago, that class referred to by my friend from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN], are such people as, if we could get them to-day, there would be no objection to them.

The gentlemen from Illinois and from New York quoted some statistics with reference to the number of aliens on farms, but the difficulty with our present immigration is that it does not go to the farms. As a matter of fact, it is not farmers and farm laborers that are coming now. A glance at the last two annual reports of the Bureau of Immigration shows that out of a total of 1,403,081 aliens admitted to this country for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, only 19,120 are classified as "farmers." For the year ending June 30, 1915, of the 434,244 aliens admitted, only 9,215 were "farmers."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota) there were—ayes 26, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, lines 11 and 12, strike out the words "or persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants."

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposed by me a few minutes ago was, as stated, for the purpose of putting the farmer upon the same basis as the merchant or banker living in the city. Now, the committee has seen fit in its wisdom to vote down the amendment which I proposed, which would have permitted the farmer to bring in strong, able-bodied men by the selective process from other countries. Now, if the committee is going to be consistent, we ought now to strike out those words which permit the banker or merchant or lawyer or professional man living in the city to bring in footmen, butlers, and domestics. The only consistent course we can follow here, it seems to me, would be to strike out the clause that gives the privilege to the city dwellers to bring in their butlers, servants, and footmen without any restriction, except the other provisions of the law. It must be remembered that my proposed amendments simply go to the alien contract-labor provision of the act. They have nothing to do with the literacy test in either case.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Was there not a case of a North Dakota farmer fined several thousand dollars under the alien contract-labor law for bringing across the Canadian border some man or a couple of men to work on his farm?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. That was an instance I mentioned when the bill was up for discussion last year. A North Dakota farmer living near the Manitoba line drove down to the nearest railroad station, which happened to be across the Canadian boundary, and picked up five Austrians who happened to be there. He did not inquire as to their nationality, but saw they were strong, likely-looking fellows, and he took them in his wagon and drove home. Soon after that he was arrested and taken down to Fargo, and they had a big fight to save him from a very serious sentence. Judge Amidon being a very broad, liberal-minded man, and taking the whole situation into account, let him off with a very small fine. The immigration officers of the United States felt very much aggrieved, and so brought an action against this farmer under another provision of the law and asked for a judgment against him for a thousand dollars for each Austrian. I do not know whether they obtained judgment against that poor fellow or not. It was thoroughly written up in the Fargo Courier-News. If they did he is probably out of business by this time, practically ruined.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL], who talked a few minutes ago about 600 families locating in a certain farm district, mentioned that as affecting the correctness of my statistics. My contention is that very few farm laborers indeed who come from abroad actually go out to work on the farms.

Our farmers should have the same privilege as Canadian farmers or the farmers of other countries to select their men. We must compete with them, and it should be upon fair terms. Now, a Manitoba farmer can write to his friend or relative in Great Britain or Norway and ask him to pick up for him a strong, able-bodied man who is trained in farm work. If an American farmer does the same thing it is a case of serving a term in prison. Let us have fair play. Let our farmers have the same privileges as have their competitors.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, these exceptions have been carried in the contract-labor law ever since there was a contract-labor law. The reason for this particular exception is this:

A very large number of domestic servants that come into this country come from the Provinces, girls coming down from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland, very respectable girls, but girls that are likely to get into trouble, as all girls are who come into a country where they are strangers. Inasmuch as it is well known that there is no American servant labor with which such girls would compete it has always been felt that it ought to be permissible for girls who desire to come from Canada or Nova Scotia or Newfoundland to ascertain beforehand where they can get employment after they come into this country. On the whole it is very much in the interest of morality that such things should be permitted rather than that these girls should come down and enter intelligence offices without the slightest idea whether they were going to secure employment or not. That is the reason for the exception.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

"Tis sweet to hear the watchdog's honest bark
Bay deep-mouthed welcome as we draw near home.

Mr. Chairman, I notice that when it is a question of keeping people out of New England the gentleman from Massachusetts, my very good friend, a strict restrictionist everywhere else, rises to defend the right of people to come in.

Now, I voted for the other amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], and I am going to vote for this one. I think the other one ought to have carried. But I do not think that you 56 gentlemen who stood up and voted it down ought to be permitted to maintain the right which originally the rich man thought should be possessed, to bar out everybody else and to bring in your coachman and your footman and your maidservants, and all the rest that the rich people bring in with them on ships. Every argument that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] made in opposition to the farmer is equally applicable in opposition to the coachman, and so forth; you can bring in a man as a coachman or a second man or a footman or a chauffeur, and within six weeks he can leave your service, if you are paying him only $25 a month, and go to working in an industry where he can get $30 or $40 or $60 or $70 a month.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Do you remember the time when Cornelius N. Bliss brought into this country a chauffeur as second man?

Mr. BENNET. Of course. The records of the customs department are full of evasions such as that.

Mr. SIEGEL. And do you remember that 20 years ago when the late David Bennett Hill brought in a valet from Europe, and our friend Vice President Morton did the same thing, both imported articles?

Mr. BENNET. That is what our colleagues who stood up here are going to stand up here again in a moment in order to perpetuate, namely, the right on their part to bring in their valets. But they voted down the farmer. Having said that the man who drives the team across the Canadian border into Manitoba and brings back five men shall be fined $5,000 for bringing ordinary labor into this country, they are going to rise up and defend the right of the rich people from the city which I have the honor to represent in part, and from the city of Boston, and the city of Philadelphia, and other cities, to bring in their personal servants, in the name of what? In the name of Democracy? I hope not. In the name of Republicanism? I deny it. In the name of consistency? It can not be proved. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment. This amendment is to strike out an amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota and substitute this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the amendment offered by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota and substitute the following:
Page 10, line 11, after the word "or," insert the word "female."

Mr. GARDNER. Now, Mr. Chairman, that disposes of all of these beautiful arguments about the chauffeur, and the butlers, and the footmen, and everybody else, because, if you adopt my amendment, it will be only the "Mary Anns" and the "Janes" that will be admitted as an exception to the contract-labor law, and all this oratory of the gentleman from New York will go for nothing.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no; it will have produced the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. BURNETT rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is recognized.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes to conclude, and I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think I would like to have more than one minute.

Mr. BURNETT. Two minutes, then.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] intend to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BURNETT. Of course.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] is entitled to recognition if he wants it, but after he is through I wish recognition.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I am willing that we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], but certainly the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] comes with very poor grace from him, when he helped to put this in the law eight years ago.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no.

Mr. BURNETT. It has been in the law for years.

Mr. BENNET. It was put in there in 1888.

Mr. BURNETT. Exactly. And during the recodification of the law eight years ago the gentleman was a member of the committee and made no objection to it, but aided in putting it in the law just as it had been. When it comes up here now he hopes to have some kind of an advantage thrown out to the poor, downtrodden farmer. I have no doubt that the farmer will laugh when he thinks of such a champion as the gentleman from New York. He was for this a few years ago. There are no domestic servants down our way that come from anywhere else. The people in my district, Mr. Chairman, are, most of them, their own housekeepers and do their work.

But under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] if some poor girl from across the Canadian border or somewhere else comes in under a contract, we admit her. We do not let her come if she is a woman of bad character; we do not let her come if she can not read her own language. We require her to conform to all the regulations and restrictions of other immigrants. But if there is somebody able to give employment to her, Mr. Chairman, and she is of good character, she should me admittted, I think. The danger of bringing in men who are not desirable under contract is obviated by the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and I will vote for it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. You can not do that, because it is an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I rise, Mr. Chairman, in support of the amendment. As that matter stands, I am willing to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts; but I take very serious exception to what has been said with reference to the character of the immigrants who go upon the farms. I will have to admit, Mr. Chairman, that I know nothing about them except with reference to those who come to my own districts. Those are the flower of the immigrants who come to this country—Danes, Norwegians, and Germans—splendid specimens of manhood and womanhood, excellent morally, the kind that we want most to get, and the kind that we need most. We can not get farm labor to carry on the work there as we wish to have it carried on. We can not get the kind that we need to do this work.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Has the gentleman had any experience with the Polish farmers or the Bohemians?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I have not.

Mr. SABATH. I know that if you will inquire of those who know, you will find out that they will make as good farmers as any other people.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. These men do not, when they come here, bring down the level of American living; they do not do it. I will say that they are so much more economical, and work so much harder, and are generally so much more careful about their expenditures that they beat all of us Americans. They live in better houses, and beat us commercially, and in almost every way.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Are they not doing that everywhere that you find them?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; they are; and I think we need people of that kind to set an example of thrift and energy before our young people in America. It will bring to them success in life here. Those foreigners are people whom our young men ought particularly to learn from. I wish I could afford to live in as good a house as some of those people live in who came from Norway and Denmark and Sweden only a few years ago. They have taken the rough land of that neighborhood and made it blossom like the rose, until it is the most improved and best land of any that we have in that locality. Those people do not enter into any competition that keeps other people out of employment. On the contrary, they supply a void that can be filled in no other way. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] offers an amendment on page 10, lines 11 and 12, suggesting that the words "all persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants" be stricken out. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], as I am advised by the Clerk and from a reading of the amendment, offers an amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by my colleague from North Dakota, the language of the bill with the word "female" inserted after the word "or" in line 11. That, if adopted, would make this section of the paragraph rather ridiculous. It would then read:

Or female persons employed strictly as personal or domestic servants.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will not the words "personal servants" become very offensive under those circumstances? What does a personal servant mean, anyhow? Does not the term "personal servant" imply some mastery over the person? Does it not suggest the relation of master and servant?

Mr. NORTON. Well, I think the suggestion of the gentleman is pertinent, perhaps, but——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I shall move to strike out the word "personal," because we have got away beyond the question of ownership of persons in the United States. I merely bring it to the attention of the gentleman now, because it is in the line of his argument that it leads to a confusion of this language.

Mr. NORTON. I entirely agree with the gentleman's statements. The amendment first offered by my colleague from North Dakota was intended to extend to farm laborers the exemptions granted to domestic servants, footmen, and so forth. If it is not permitted to the farmer to bring in a laborer, who often occupies to the farmer in his work a position not unlike that of a personal servant, there should not be permitted to gentlemen in Boston and other eastern cities the privilege of having brought from Nova Scotia, from other Provinces in Canada, or from some other foreign country a personal servant, male or female.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Dakota yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. NORTON. I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that a farm laborer would be a personal servant to the farmer?

Mr. NORTON. Well, often the farm laborer occupies to the small farmer, so far as the farmer and his work is concerned, relatively the same position that a personal servant occupies to the merchant or professional man in the city.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In the legal phrase he is a servant, is he not?

Mr. NORTON. In a legal sense he is a servant. In the ordinary acceptance of the term a "farm laborer" would not be classed as a "domestic servant" or a "personal servant." While I realize that there is a distinction in the definition of these terms, however, as to the relative character of the work done by the farm laborer on a small farm and work done by a servant of a city dweller, the difference is very small.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Can you conceive of any reason why a farm laborer should be excluded while a domestic servant is admitted?

Mr. NORTON. No; I can not. It appears that the Committee on Immigration started in about the year 1885 a very bad legislative precedent, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and other gentlemen seem to have continued it since in the preparation of this immigration bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time allotted to the discussion of the amendment has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, can we have that amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will again be reported.

The amendment to the amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota) there were—ayes 28, noes 53.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of inserting some remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has that right under the general leave.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. PLATT: Page 10, line 9, after the word "singers," insert the word "nurses."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not require any particular argument.

Mr. HAYES. Will not the gentleman insert the word "professional" before the word "nurses"?

Mr. PLATT. It is already in the bill. The word "professional" in line 8 would apply to the word "nurses." Will the gentleman from Alabama accept the amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I make no objection to the amendment.

[Mr. NORTON addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as a separate paragraph to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph the following:

"That all aliens who shall enter the United States except at the seaports thereof, or at such place or places as the Secretary of Labor may from time to time designate, shall be adjudged to have entered the country unlawfully and shall be deported as provided by sections 20 and 21 of this act: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall affect the power conferred by section 32 of this act upon the Commissioner General of Immigration to prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens along the borders of Canada and Mexico: Provided further, That no alien, except a bona fide resident of Canada, shall be admitted to the United States who has entered Canada by a Pacific coast seaport for a period of two years after such entry, except at a seaport of the United States."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, down to the words "Provided further," is already the law. The only addition to the law is that part beginning with the words "Provided further."

Mr. GARDNER. In what section of the present law is the first part of this amendment found?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In section 36 of the present law. The purpose of this amendment is to compel aliens who desire to enter the United States to enter at a seaport of the United States. Here is the condition that exists to-day upon the Pacific coast: No alien is permitted to enter Canada through the United States. A striking illustration of that occurred a short time ago. The Robert Dollar Co. brought a man from the Orient across the Pacific on one of their vessels. He landed in this country at Seattle and then attempted to enter Canada, and as a result was deported and sent back to China, and then had to come back to Canada on a ship going into Vancouver before he could enter that country. No alien is permitted to enter Canada through this country. Yet, on the other hand, almost all the aliens who enter the northwestern part of the United States come into this country through Vancouver, B. C. It is all done to the advantage of the steamship companies that go to Vancouver and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Why should the Government of the United States permit foreign steamship companies to send their aliens through Vancouver into the United States, when Canada will not permit us to send aliens through this country into Canada? The only purpose of it, as I have said, is to benefit the Canadian Pacific Railway and the foreign steamship companies that take their aliens to that port. Not only that, but we have a condition out there upon the border that I think is little short of disgraceful. I have here in my hand a letter written by Mr. E. P. Marsh, president of the Washington State Federation of Labor, in which he goes into that question thoroughly. Further on in this discussion I expect to refer to some other points which he mentions, and hope to have the letter inserted in the RECORD before the completion of this bill.

As I say, all the Chinese and other aliens who enter the Pacific Northwest come into this country through Vancouver. The result of that is that we have our immigrant station over on foreign soil. The truth about it is that to-day this Government is in partnership with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think it is discreditable to this Government that the Canadian Pacific Railway must furnish us the headquarters for our immigrants and offices for our immigrant officials.

Not only that, but another thing. As soon as this war in Europe ends we are expecting a large immigration into our country, as you are in other portions of the country. Under the present conditions those immigrants will come through the Panama Canal in foreign ships. They will not be taken to a Pacific coast port of the United States, but to Vancouver.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes more.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman be satisfied with three minutes?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. These immigrants will be brought through the Panama Canal by foreign ships, taken to Vancouver, and there they will be examined on foreign soil; the place for examination will be furnished by the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and after examination such as desire will be passed on into the United States. In the first place, all the money expended in relation thereto is spent on foreign soil instead of on American soil. In the next place, the Canadian land agents, the immigration officers, will have the first opportunity at these men when they are landed there. They will hold out inducements for them to remain in that country; they will get the cream of the immigration, and what they do not want will be permitted to come to the United States. I see no reason why we should continue to favor the foreign railroad and steamship companies in preference to our own.

Every Chinaman that comes to this country to-day who enters the United States anywhere coming east of the Pacific coast borders enters the northwest at Vancouver and is carried by the Canadian Pacific Railroad. If they are coming east, if they are going to Boston, the Canadian Pacific takes the entire haul. This Chinese traffic does not amount to a great deal. I am not pleading the cause of the railroads, but as between the Canadian Pacific Railroad and the American railroads I am in favor of the American railroads.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. Would not the gentleman consent to have the time in his amendment reduced as to a residence in Canada, and make it one year, so as to make it conform with the provision earlier in the bill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to change my amendment by striking out the word "two" and inserting "one."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman is granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to another condition that arises because we have our inspectors and our immigration office over on foreign soil, a thing that I think does not appeal to any American, and I decidedly approve Mr. Marshall's letter where he protests against it and says our inspectors gradually become more un-American. I think that is true.

Let me give an illustration. A short time ago an emigrant came to this country. When he came here they held that he could not enter because he had some disease of the eyes. I think that it was a Chinaman. He was taken back to the Orient. Then he entered through Canada, and the Canadian officials said he was all right, and our immigration officials held that they had to permit him to enter, and he was admitted. There is the situation that comes about by being in partnership with a railroad and having our immigration office on foreign soil. We have to submit not only to having our people enter through foreign territory, but to having foreigners pass upon their qualifications for admission, while we seem powerless to reject them if they meet the approval of the officials of Canada.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I understood the gentleman to state that we were expecting a large immigration after the war. Has the gentleman any figures on previous wars in Europe with reference to immigration? I can not see that there was any great immigration after the Franco-Prussian War.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, I may be mistaken about that; it is only a question of judgment. But whether there will be a dozen or 10,000 I think we ought to provide that these immigrants shall enter at the water ports in this country, just as Canada does. Canada will not permit aliens who enter her territory to land in the United States; why should we extend the courtesy to her?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to page 40, line 20, of the bill, which is in section 19, the deportation section. It provides for deportation at any time within three years after entry any alien who shall have entered the United States by water at any time or place other than as designated by immigration officials, or by land at any place other than one designated as a port of entry for aliens by the Commissioner General of Immigration, or at any time not designated by immigration officials, or who enters without inspection, shall, upon the warrant of the Secretary of Labor, be taken into custody and deported. Now, in what respect does that provision fail to cover the purpose of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Because it says that "any place designated by the immigration officials," and that is exactly what they are doing.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman wish to take the power away from the officials to designate the places?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want the power of designating a foreign port where inspection shall take place taken away from them.

Mr. GARDNER. That is merely done for convenience and in order not to delay travel on the border.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. GARDNER. Yes; I am familiar with it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman may be familiar with it in his part of the country, but he is not in Vancouver.

Mr. GARDNER. What happens is this: In order to expedite the passage of trains across the border the inspectors of immigration meet the train long before it gets to the border and under the arrangement made with the railroad——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, the gentleman is wrong about that, the officials designate Vancouver as a place where these aliens are examined.

Mr. GARDNER. That is done under the regulations made in accordance with the law which allows the immigration officials for convenience of travel, and for no other reason, to designate places where the incoming immigrants can be examined.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is all right, but why not compel them to bring the immigrants here through an American port?

Mr. GARDNER. In order to stop the congestion. That is an express provision of law and can only be done for the purpose of facilitating immigration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is not the reason in our part of the country at all.

Mr. GARDNER. Section 32 of the existing law is as follows:

> That the Commissioner General of Immigration, under the direction or with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe rules for the entry and inspection of aliens along the borders of Canada and Mexico, so as not to unnecessarily delay, impede, or annoy passengers in ordinary travel between the United States and said countries, and shall have power to enter into contracts with transportation lines for the said purpose.

That provision was deliberately put into the law because it was represented to Congress that inevitably there must be great inconvenience to travelers unless some power of that sort was given to the Secretary of Labor or his predecessors, the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is right about the law, as he usually is—that is, about the definitions in the law—but he does not meet the point the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] raises, and he does not state the practice of the Canadian Government. When I came here this summer on the Grand Trunk, being poor and that being the cheapest way to get from Chicago to New York, an immigrant inspector who knew me met me out in the middle of Canada and sat down alongside of me, and for nearly an hour he inveighed against what we do and called my attention to the fact that the Canadian Government stands upon its rights as a government. When you go into Canada at Port Huron—I think it is on the Grand Trunk, coming from Chicago—there is no Canadian inspector who goes back to Chicago and gets on the train and inspects you leisurely as you go along. When you get to Port Huron, under the exercise of national authority the Canadian Government, as a part of the British Empire, stops the train and the inspector goes through, in Canadian territory, where he has some power, and he makes the investigation that he desires to make. If necessary, he holds the train 10 or 15 minutes. What do we? We subserviently send our people miles up into Canada, and we do not make anywhere near as good inspection as the Canadians do. We make a more or less perfunctory inspection, and then we let the people in; and that, I assume, is the condition that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] complains of out on the Pacific coast, and the same condition largely obtains upon the Atlantic coast. Although I am frank to say that I have not had a chance to give this matter any study, yet I am willing for once in my life to vote with the gentlemen from the West on this matter, although I do not ordinarily vote with them on these Japanese amendments. But this is a question of inspecting people coming into America on American soil by American officials under the American flag with American power, and that is all there is to it, is it not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes. That is all there is to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I go to Canada two or three times every summer, and have done so for a great many years. There is no practical difference between the method of inspection by the Canadian and the American Governments touching either the convenience or the inconvenience of the traveler or of his baggage, and I state that from knowledge after having gone repeatedly in the eastern part of the country up into Canada from Buffalo, Detroit, and Port Huron. I have never found any great amount of difference or any great, wonderful regard for the sovereignty of the British Empire and a great and wonderful disregard for the sovereignty of these United States of America.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that my attention would have been particularly called to it as a traveler if it had not been for the fact that our own inspector, who is there every day—not as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and I are crossing the line two or three times a year—had called my attention to the fact, and then I noticed that when we came across into Canada at Port Huron the Canadian officials did hold up the train 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. And we hold up Canadian trains coming into the United States right at Niagara Falls bridge. I have been on them and have seen it repeatedly done.

Mr. BENNET. When I came to this Congress I went up to the Bureau of Immigration and I spoke to Mr. Hampton, the Assistant Commissioner General, in relation to the practices of the two Governments, and he confirmed what the inspector said, and just simply said, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] correctly said, that what the inspector was doing was under the existing law, but he did not defend the differences in the practices at all. Mr. Hampton, who is an official of the Government, knows the differences. I quite agree that the ordinary traveler in a Pullman car, as the gentleman and I ordinarily travel, would not notice an incident in travel like the detention of a train for 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. I want to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], as well as the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], to please give their attention to the last paragraph on page 49 of the bill. I think that that covers the point that the gentleman from Washington has in mind.

Mr. BENNET. As far as I am concerned, it looks to me as though it went quite a ways toward covering it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I take the floor to oppose striking out the last word for the purpose of saying that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. DALE] was for 13 years a customs inspector on the border. The gentleman from Vermont having seen the immigration inspectors at work—working side by side with them—tells me that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is absolutely right in saying that there is no substantial difference between the practices of the two Governments in the matter of the inspection of immigrants.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that I think without doubt this is taken care of by the paragraph at the bottom of page 49, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman please point that out? Of course, if it is covered, I do not want to insist upon the amendment. I think it might be well to take a moment of time before we vote upon it.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to take the vote now, and then I shall not object to recurring to it if there is anything in it which is not properly covered.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman's amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What did I understand the suggestion of the Chairman was a moment ago? I did not hear what it was.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the Chairman stated, but I will say for the information of the gentleman from Washington that we have a provision in another part of the bill which I think covers the amendment. I feel satisfied that the latter part of the amendment is covered by the proviso on page 41, as has been stated by the gentleman. In respect to the first part of the provision, that is now a part of this bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is part of the law now, and I think the amendment referred to on page 49 goes very far toward helping the situation, but it still leaves discretion with the Immigration Department, and I do not think they ought to have that discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, on page 10, line 19, the printer has omitted a letter in the word "shall," and I move that the additional letter be added.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the section for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether it is not desirable to come to some agreement about the closing of debate on the whole section.

Mr. BURNETT. I want to make a motion of that kind.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments which I desire to offer to the section. I will want about five minutes on one of those, as far as I am concerned; some other gentleman may want more time. I have a second amendment, which I think will require a little further time——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have another.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I have two, one to strike out the provision in respect to Japanese, and I should think they would take about 10 or 15 minutes, it being a question of the violation of a treaty.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that all debate on this section and the amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close at the expiration of 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, was that a motion or a request?

The CHAIRMAN. It was a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to have at least five minutes upon an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. SIEGEL. I would suggest to the chairman——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I make the request now because sometimes a man who has a bona fide amendment is crowded out at the windup.

Mr. BURNETT. I could not agree to yield time in that way or make an agreement here because an amendment from a member of the committee would have preference, of course. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] would have precedence for perhaps five minutes, and I would want five minutes perhaps and perhaps some other members of the committee; for that reason I would not want to agree on anything of that sort.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that there has been absolutely no attempt at anything in the nature of delay. I think the gentleman was right this morning in making the point of no quorum because the provision on which we voted was a very important provision, but no one in opposition made the point, and the debate has been confined in every case to the subject matter of the amendment, and it seems to me there has not been a bill in my experience where there has been so little divergence from the subject matter before the House.

Now, in reference to this Japanese proposition, I was one of the four men who wrote that provision in the law, and I think this provision in the bill would make serious trouble, and it is due me and the House on my responsibility as a Member that I should be permitted for five or six minutes to make a connected legal statement as to the situation. These are not immaterial matters.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say to the chairman I understand certain of our colleagues over here think that I only desired five minutes on both amendments. I would want at least five minutes on each amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. What are the two amendments?

Mr. SIEGEL. One is in relation to psychopathic disability; the other is to give certain power to the Secretary of Labor in extraordinary cases.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate in 40 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama amends his request and asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at the expiration of 40 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there any agreement as to the order in which this debate is to proceed?

Mr. BURNETT. No. The gentleman from New York is a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the Chair will have that in mind.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all amendments be presented and first read before debate begins, so we will know what is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen having amendments send them to the desk and that they be read before the debate begins. Is there objection?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from New York has two amendments which he desires to press——

The CHAIRMAN. They will be read first.

Mr. SABATH. And I think it will be unfair for him if we should have all these amendments submitted and deprive him of the right to have his amendment debated by itself.

Mr. SIEGEL. I will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to withdraw his request.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, lines 16 and 17, strike out the words "persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, this particular clause was inserted in the bill a year or so ago by Mr. Brown, representing the first congressional district of the State of New York. I do not believe he, as a layman, personally understood the meaning of "constitutional psychopathic inferiority." Of course, I have examined his speech, and while I find a long list of authorities from all over the world, mainly books written in Germany, yet there is no explanation of what is meant by "psychopathic inferiority," particularly when modified by the word "constitutional." I know that Congressman Brown must have relied on what he was told by the experts, as he is a gentleman of the highest standing.

When I heard the chairman of the committee to-day rise and refer to an editorial that appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer, I thought of the real brotherly love that is sometimes displayed in the city of Philadelphia, and which we all find in all other cities now and then. My belief was still more confirmed when I noticed the editorial that appeared in the Philadelphia Ledger of to-day's date, which took the contrary view. And I just wondered as to whether both editorial writers would have succeeded in passing this constitutional psychopathic-inferiority test if they were to undergo it at the hands of the various experts, because they happened to have different views on a very important question.

In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, I read from the Philadelphia Ledger:

THE LITERACY TEST AGAIN.

It is to be regretted that the Republican leader in the House of Representatives has surrendered to the majority in the matter of the literacy test for immigrants, for while a vigorous opposition from the minority would have been in all probability without effect in staying the passage of the pending bill it might have had its effect in strengthening the President's disapproval and in weakening the numbers of those who would be disposed to pass the bill over a veto. Literacy is not a test of the fitness of the hewers of wood and the drawers of water, however much it may be necessary to make it one of the qualifications for citizenship, and it is a mistaken notion that the ability to read and write is any guaranty of the good character of the immigrants who seek our shores. Illiteracy is an evil to be stamped out, but it is unfair to apply a test to those who were born and lived under a different system of government from our own and whose illiteracy is a misfortune, not a fault.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this provision reminds me of a short story that I heard not long ago of a gentleman who went over to Berlin, and who knew only one language, namely, the English language. I am not sure as to whether he came from the city of Philadelphia or Titusville, but he settled in the city of New York afterwards. As I say, he went to Berlin. There he saw a large department store, and he asked one of the passersby who owned it. The answer was, "Nicht verstehe." He walked further along and saw a large mansion and asked who owned it, and the answer was, "Nicht verstehe." A little while longer a tremendous procession came along the street, headed by a hearse, covered with a profusion of flowers, and followed by numerous carriages. He turned around and asked the question, "Who has passed away?" And the answer was, "Nicht verstehe." He said, "It is a shame for a man to pass away who owns such a large store and a mansion as big as all that." Not knowing

German, he did not know that "nicht verstehe" meant "did not understand." Now, Mr. Chairman, the same can be said here to this kind of a provision we are trying to enact, which does not mean anything that the ordinary man understands, and which a large number of the House frankly confesses is a fact. I therefore urge the House to strike the clause out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

When the last immigration bill was reported it was not in it. It was offered, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] has said, by Mr. Brown, then a Member of Congress from Brooklyn, N. Y. I made some opposition to it, because we had not had it before the committee and had not given it careful thought. But he insisted the alienists of the State of New York, and of the city of New York especially, were very insistent that the amendment be placed on the bill. He referred to the fact that the insane asylums of New York City were being filled up by people who came in with pyschopathic inferiority. I confess, Mr. Chairman, that as a layman I knew nothing about it. Here is a definition that has been given by those who have studied it, by the alienists themselves. One of them says it is—a congenital defect in the emotional or volitional fields of mental activity which results in inability to make proper adjustment to the environments.

That is just about as near a definition of it in an understandable form as I suppose could be made. The House decided it should go in. They believed if they were a menace, that provision should be made to keep out people with that kind of mental defect, and it was put in the bill as an amendment. After it was sent to the Senate it was more seriously considered there. My understanding is that a number of alienists came down from New York and appeared before the Senate committee to insist on keeping out those who would so easily, on account of their environments, be thrown off their mental base. Some gentleman said before our committee that we did not have the alienists at Ellis Island to detect such conditions. It was stated by the commissioner general to our committee that we have some of the best alienists in the land at Ellis Island, high-priced physicians and specialists, and if this amendment was engrafted upon the bill, however obscure it might be to a layman, it would result in turning back a great many people who become insane after they get here, whose condition is hard to detect but may be detected by skilled alienists. The governor of New York asked us to help them take care of the alien insane, which they said were entering New York institutions for the insane in such numbers that it cost the State more than $3,000,000 annually to take care of them. Let us give the benefit of the doubt to those who do know about this thing, and retain this clause in the bill.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the chief opposition, as manifested in debate, both in the House and in committee, to this measure is the argument of ridicule against a phrase which gentlemen profess not to know the meaning of. I do not suppose there is a first-class dictionary that does not tell in so many words, if you choose to take the pains to open its pages and learn, that, reduced to its simplest terms, "constitutional psychopathic inferiority" means an inferior mind, a mind unbalanced and so given over to hallucinations, so susceptible to emotion, that it may develop into actual insanity.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I was curious to know this: Here is a board that can pass on these immigrants who come in. How many Members of Congress, excluding the gentleman and myself, would an unfriendly board rule out? [Laughter.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman would perhaps admit, Mr. Chairman, that there is an undue prejudice against Congress. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer three amendments, to which the committee has no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Just one moment. There is another amendment at the desk, offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL]. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 11, line 26, after the period, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"The Secretary of Labor is authorized and empowered in any individual case of alien exclusion coming before him on appeal or for deportation to exercise his reasonable discretion with reference thereto for the purpose and to the extent of preventing or relieving excessive hardships therein: Provided, however, That if such measure of prevention or relief as he shall adopt in any case necessitates the admission of an alien who is inadmissible under the exclusion provisions of this act the Secretary shall specify in writing upon the record in each such case the reasons for his exercise of discretion therein: And provided further, That he shall annually report to Congress the cases in which he exercises such discretion, together with a statement in substance of his reasons therefor."

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much said here in reference to insane aliens in the institutions of the State of New York that I requested the secretary of the commission to ascertain for me the number of native-born inmates who were committed in the year 1915 to our State institutions, and also the number of foreign born, and he found that in 1915 there were 3,300 of native born committed and approximately 2,800 or 2,900 of foreign born.

I want to say further that I represent a congressional district that takes in what is known as the islands of the East River, namely, Randalls Island and Wards Island. On Wards Island we have the largest State institution in the State of New York, and I have never heard a word said by Dr. Mabon, the superintendent of the institution, or by other physicians of the institution, who attend meetings of an organization to which I belong, that the foreign-born population is contributing more patients to those institutions than the native born. I will say that Commissioner Higgins and his predecessor, Mr. Commissioner Friday, are known to me, and I have never heard from either of them any statement that would substantiate the arguments advanced here, namely, that the foreign born, so-called, are producing a greater number of insane in the State of New York than the native born, although it is true that the foreign-born patients are not committed to private institutions in equal number with the native born in New York.

This amendment that I have offered here simply gives the power to the Secretary of Labor in extraordinary cases, where he believes that an injustice would be done, to relieve the condition of an immigrant arriving here, or to admit such an immigrant in his discretion, and he is required to report to Congress each year the number of cases, giving the reasons in each particular case, and acting in the same capacity as an appellate court would act, or would have the power to act, either reversing the judgment or modifying it when a criminal case comes before it. I am not asking that any extraordinary power be given to the Secretary of Labor. We trust our Cabinet officials in many matters, and there is no reason in the world why we should not trust them to carry out the best provisions of this law in the event of its enactment. We always leave to the sound discretion of a Cabinet official or any other official in high public office to do his duty as it seems to him to be just, fair, honest, and conscientious. All I am asking here is to give the Secretary of Labor such power, and I have implicit faith in him and his successors to know that the trust so reposed will not be abused.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I think the purpose at which the gentleman is aiming is certainly good; but is the gentleman sure that, under his amendment, the Secretary of Labor would be able to do all that he is called upon to do? Would it not involve a tremendous amount of labor?

Mr. SIEGEL. It would not, and for this reason: First, the immigration authorities at Ellis Island would pass upon the question; then, if an appeal is taken, it would go to the special board of inquiry in certain cases; and, finally, it would reach the Secretary's office in the ordinary course of events. He now passes on these cases every week—not personally, but through the Assistant Secretary of Labor. This would not be adding labor to him. He is doing that now, and no one has questioned his acts. I know of no reason that can be advanced by anyone why he should not be given such authority, unless we have lost all faith in our officials. I trust them, and so do the American people.

Mr. TILSON. I think that authority should be given to him.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the effect of that provision is to give the Secretary of Labor the power to nullify the law. We have fixed the intent and have shown who shall not be allowed to come in here on account of mental or physical condition; and yet, as I understand that amendment, the effect of it would be to authorize the Secretary of Labor in his discretion to override the law, so that in spite of the decision of inspectors and in spite of the decision of all the subordinates the Secretary will let him come in if he desires to do so.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. SIEGEL. This amendment simply makes provision for an extraordinary individual case.

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly. It will leave to the Secretary the discretion to decide whether that case is extraordinary or not. It is true, Mr. Chairman, if we had a Secretary of Labor like the present one, who turned back 25,000 last year that the steamship companies brought over illegally, we might afford to risk it with him; but I am not willing to delegate to any Secretary of Labor the power of overturning a positive law. And yet that would be the effect of this amendment, and I hope it will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SIEGEL. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I have three amendments which I have submitted to the chairman of the committee, and to which he says he has no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 7, after the word "port," insert "or attempt to be admitted from foreign contiguous territory."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 17, strike out "is" and insert "are."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BENNET. It is a grammatical error, purely.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will call the gentleman's attention also to page 6, line 14.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 14, strike out "is" and insert "are."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it should be "persons are." It should read "persons whose tickets or passage are paid."

Mr. BENNET. Both ought to be singular or else both ought to be plural.

Mr. BURNETT. The correction really should be "any person whose ticket or passage is paid."

Mr. MANN. Elsewhere in the section though I notice the plural "persons."

Mr. BURNETT. I ask unanimous consent to make it "persons whose tickets are."

The CHAIRMAN. Does that interfere with the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BURNETT. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that this amendment be disposed of, and then the other can be taken up. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the word "ticket," in line 13, and to insert the word "tickets."

Mr. MANN. And also in line 17.

Mr. BURNETT. And also, after the word "passage," the word "is."

Mr. MANN. No; the word "tickets," in line 17.

Mr. BURNETT. I know; but before we get to that, in line 13 it will then read "persons whose tickets or passage are paid."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I think there is confusion about this. In line 14 the word "is," after "who," should be changed to "are." I believe that has been done, though.

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. In line 17 the word "is" should remain. The subject of "is" is not "persons," and it is proper to have the word "is" instead of "are." This line is correct. The only error here is in line 14, following the word "who." That word should be changed to "are."

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? I should like to ask if this is an application of the literacy test. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. I was not unkind enough to suggest that.

Mr. FESS. There must be a change also in line 16. "Person" should be changed to "persons," and "does" should be changed to "do."

Mr. GARDNER. It will be a great deal simpler, instead of recasting all of it, to change the word "persons," in line 13, to "person."

The CHAIRMAN. After the grammatical experts have agreed, the Chair will submit their agreement to the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] may be stated from the desk and adopted. I think he knows more grammar than most of us.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama withdraw his request for unanimous consent?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio state his request?

Mr. FESS. On page 6, line 14, the word "is," after the word "who," should be changed to "are."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the change indicated by him be made. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. On the same page, in line 16, the word "person" should be changed to "persons," and the word "does" should be changed to "do."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that, in line 16 the words "person does" be changed to "persons do." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that, on page 10, in line 19, the Clerk may be permitted to correct the spelling of the word "shall."

Mr. BURNETT. That has already been done.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BENNET: Page 7, strike out, on line 1, after the word "Hindus," all of lines 2 to 20, inclusive.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, the part of this provision that I object to is that which excludes the Japanese, because, in my judgment, it is the worst treatment that a friendly nation that has entered into an agreement with us and kept it has ever received at our hands. When the law of 1907 was passed, the conferees, of whom I was one, inserted a provision that had not been passed on prior thereto by either House, and we put it in because we were asked to do so by the then President of the United States and the then Secretary of State. That provision was this:

Provided further, That whenever the President shall be satisfied that passports issued by any foreign Government to its citizens to go to any country other than the United States or to any insular possession of the United States or to the Canal Zone are being used for the purpose of enabling the holders to come to the continental territory of the United States to the detriment of labor conditions therein, the President may refuse to permit such citizens of the country issuing such passports to enter the continental territory of the United States from such other country or from such insular possessions or from the Canal Zone.

And immediately upon the adoption of that law the President of the United States issued his proclamation, which is still in force, keeping out Japanese laborers who come to this country in any way except direct from Japan. The gentleman's agreement that was entered into was this, that as we did not want the Japanese coolies, and as the Japanese did not want their coolies to come here, they would keep their people out by refusing to issue to them passports to come direct to the United States. And I want to say that the Japanese Government has stood grandly and loyally by its agreement. Here are the figures:

In the fiscal year 1907, which was nearly closed when that law passed, there were 30,824 Japanese who came into this country. The very next year the number dropped to 16,418; the next year to 3,275, and the next year to 2,798, and so on down. Why, in 1910 there were only 72,157 Japanese in this country according to the census, and since that time the net admission of Japanese to this country, deducting those who have gone back, is but 3,766, or less than 800 Japanese a year. And if you assume that only 10 per 1,000 die—and the rate throughout the country is something like 20—there are fewer Japanese in the country to-day than there were in 1910 when the census was taken.

When a friendly nation has entered into an agreement with us, an agreement of honor—and at first it was not even reduced to writing—but where the officials of both Governments agree that both Governments desiring the same thing, that the Government abroad which had the first chance to see that the agreement was maintained, should maintain that agreement, why insult that friendly nation by a provision like this. Oh, you say in the provision "unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I would like two minutes more.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, Mr. Chairman, of course we say in the language "unless otherwise provided by existing agreements as to passports or by existing treaties, conventions," and so forth. But what we say is the same as if two men should agree on a matter which they had kept for nine years, and then one should go to the trouble of getting a law passed to make the other, who had kept his word faithfully for nine years, keep the agreement. If you can imagine a greater insult to a friendly nation than this will be, I would like to see it put in language. If gentlemen think it is safe and prudent in times like this, when practically every regular United States soldier is in one section of our country, or 250 miles south of our country, to go out of our way to slap in the face a nation that is building battleships twice as fast as we are, and as to whose intentions we have more or less evidence, that is within the power of the House to do. I have discharged my individual responsibility, as an actor in that scene nine years ago, and in bringing to the attention of this American Congress in plain language that nobody can misunderstand that what we are doing is to offer an insult to the Japanese nation.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. I freely admit that most of what the gentleman from New York has said about the gentleman's agreement and the good faith of the Government of Japan in carrying it out is true. I said the same thing on this floor on Saturday; but the gentleman is mistaken in supposing that it is the intention of the committee to make any provision whatever in this connection that will affect Japan in any way. Notwithstanding what he says about the language of the bill, it clearly states that it will not be applicable in cases where there has been an agreement as to passports or treaties or conventions, or where such agreements or treaties or conventions may hereafter be entered into.

There are other oriental people besides the Japanese and Chinese who are excluded by the Chinese exclusion act; and it is the purpose of the committee, as it is, I believe, of a large majority of the House and an overwhelming majority of the people of the United States, to exclude from this country the laborers from any oriental country. I will go as far as the gentleman in my desire not to unnecessarily offend the Japanese people or any other oriental people; but I think it is our duty, representing the great American people, to prevent any great influx of oriental people into this country to overwhelm the labor on the Pacific coast. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York will be voted down. This whole matter has been submitted to the Department of State, to the immigration officials, and others connected with the Government acquainted with the conditions, and we have been assured by them all that there is nothing in this provision that can properly give offense to anybody. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] has stated correctly the fact that the committee had before us the Commissioner General of Immigration and the law officer of that bureau in preparing this clause, and we impressed upon them all the time that there was no desire to deviate in the least from the gentleman's agreement that had been made between this country and Japan. They agreed that this clause did not do so. However much as an original proposition I might have dissented from it, having made it, I believe that it should be scrupulously kept as long as Japan keeps it, and therefore we provided that—persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into—should be excluded. This is certainly not in derogation of the agreement with Japan.

There is nothing in the bill that even squints at the idea of violating the agreement that we made with Japan, and therefore I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 12, after the word "employed," strike out the words "strictly as personal or" and insert in lieu thereof the word "as."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he will accept that amendment? It strikes out the words "strictly as personal or" and puts in lieu thereof the word "as." The words I propose to strike out are ambiguous and unnecessary.

Mr. BURNETT. Possibly they are not needed, but we wanted it distinctly and emphatically understood that they must be only of that character under the contract-labor law. We thought those words gave it more force and emphasis.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman meant to include domestic servants, the amendment which I offer covers that ground thoroughly. If he meant to include "strictly personal servants"—whatever that means—I desire to strike it out. If he desires to admit domestic servants, then there is no reason why the amendment should not be accepted.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I am not a very good authority on grammar, but I would say that the word "strictly" qualifies both of the words "personal" and "domestic."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But who is to interpret the word "strictly"? There is no legal meaning to it.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman and I use such expressions frequently. We may say that such a thing is emphatically not true. If we were to say that it is not true, it would be just as much not true as to say that it was emphatically not true, but if we desire to emphasize the fact that we think it is untrue, we use the word "emphatically." I do not think the word "strictly" has much significance and I do not object to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, of course, I will not debate it. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 21, noes 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, before the final vote is taken on the pending bill I desire to avail myself of the opportunity to say a few words of just praise and commendation of the Member whose name the measure bears, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], whose zeal, fidelity, and devotion in favor of the restriction of undesirable immigration deserves the thanks and gratitude of the countless millions of Americans who honestly believe this legislation is for the best interests of our common country, for the prosperity and happiness of all its people. [Applause.] The gentleman from Alabama has made a great fight for this proposition from the beginning of his faithful and useful career in this House, and will be gratefully remembered by his countrymen and his patriotic work be praised and appreciated in the years to come. [Applause.] This bill will pass the House to-morrow by the largest majority ever recorded for a similar measure, and will be approved by an overwhelming vote in the Senate. Another veto by President Wilson will not prevent it from becoming a law. The promised support of the minority leader [Mr. MANN] and the increased Republican representation on this side of the House means that the present occupant of the White House can not a second time defeat the expressed will and demand of the American people on this vital legislation. The necessary votes are in both Houses to overcome a presidential veto, and no power or influence in or out of Congress will prevent the representatives of the people from carrying out the plain mandate of those who believe this legislation is essential to the welfare and safety of the Republic and the continued prosperity and happiness of all who dwell beneath the protecting folds of our sacred flag. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and those who have cooperated and followed him in this contest have not been actuated by hatred, malice, or prejudice. Race feeling, party interest, and religious creeds have not influenced them in their support and advocacy of this bill. Like those on the other side of the question, the gentlemen from New York [Mr. BENNET and Mr. SIEGEL], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the gentlemen from Illinois [Messrs. SABATH and GALLAGHER], and others, they have taken their stand from a sense of duty, a conscientious belief that what they favored was in the interest of their country, for the benefit of native and foreign born American citizens, for the continuation and maintenance of our high standard of living and wages, for the insurance and permanency of our institutions and civilization, and for the peace, honor, and glory of the Republic. [Applause.]

All honor and credit to JOHN L. BURNETT, the tireless worker, the successful champion of the people's cause, the Nation's cause. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I consider the pending bill one of utmost importance to the United States. One of the Members stated it would not affect the Irish, because they are all eligible to the college degree of bachelor of arts when they enter Castle Garden. I would like to say that this description also fits the English, the German, Norwegian, Swiss, and all who emigrate from northern Europe. Canadians can come in because they are generally literate, and as far as keeping out any person who desires to become a citizen of our country is concerned, it will have very little or no effect. We want good foreigners to come here and become good American citizens, but if they come to exploit their anarchistic dogmas, if they come here to raise the red flag, if they come here to disorganize our governmental institutions and to make trouble, then we do not want them. It is conceded that substantially all the provisions of the bill are unobjectionable except the one providing for the literacy test. No one wants the gates of Castle Garden torn down and free admission from every foreign land promiscously. We find by the terms of the bill that the following undesirables are to be excluded:

SEC. 3. That the following classes of aliens shall be excluded from admission into the United States: All idiots, imbeciles, feeble-minded persons, epileptics, insane persons; persons who have had one or more attacks of insanity at any time previously; persons of constitutional psychopathic inferiority; persons with chronic alcoholism; paupers; professional beggars; vagrants; persons afflicted with tuberculosis in any form or with a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease; persons not comprehended within any of the foregoing excluded classes who are found to be and are certified by the examining surgeon as being mentally or physically defective, such physical defect being of a nature which may affect the ability of such alien to earn a living; persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed a felony or other crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude; polygamists, or persons who practice polygamy or believe in or advocate the practice of polygamy; anarchists, or persons who believe in or advocate the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States, or of all forms of law, or who disbelieve in or are opposed to organized government, or who advocate the assassination of public officials, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; persons who are members of or affiliated with any organization entertaining and teaching disbelief in or opposition to organized government, or who advocate or teach the duty, necessity, or propriety of the unlawful assaulting or killing of any officer or officers, either of specific individuals or of officers generally of the Government of the United States or of any other organized Government, because of his or their official character, or who advocate or teach the unlawful destruction of property; prostitues, or persons coming into the United States for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who directly or indirectly procure or attempt to procure or import prostitutes or persons for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose; persons who are supported by or receive in whole or in part the proceeds of prostitution; persons hereinafter called contract laborers, who have been induced, assisted, encouraged, or solicited to migrate to this country by offers or promises of employment, whether such offers or promises are true or false, or in consequence of agreements, oral, written or printed, express or implied, to perform labor in this country of any kind, skilled or unskilled; persons who have come in consequence of advertisements for laborers printed, published, or distributed in a foreign country; persons likely for any reason to become a public charge; persons who have been deported under any of the provisions of this act and who may again seek admission within one year from the date of such deportation, unless prior to their reembarkation at a foreign port the Secretary of Labor shall have consented to their reapplying for admission; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for with the money of another, or who is assisted by others to come, unless it is affirmatively and satisfactorily shown that such person does not belong to one of the foregoing excluded classes; persons whose ticket or passage is paid for by any corporation, association, society, municipality, or foreign Government, either directly or indirectly; stowaways, except that any such stowaway, if otherwise admissible, may be admitted in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor; all children under 16 years of age, unaccompanied by or not coming to one or both of their parents, except that any such children may, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, be admitted if in his opinion they are not likely to become a public charge and are otherwise eligible; Hindus and persons who can not become eligible, under existing law, to become citizens of the United States by naturalization, unless otherwise provided for by existing agreements as to passports, or by existing treaties, conventions, or agreements, or by treaties, conventions, or agreements that may hereafter be entered into. The provision next foregoing, however, shall not apply to persons of the following status or occupations: Government officers, ministers or religious teachers, missionaries, lawyers, physicians, chemists, civil engineers, teachers, students, authors, merchants, and travelers for curiosity or pleasure, nor to their legal wives or their children under 16 years of age who shall accompany them or who subsequently may apply for admission to the United States, but such persons or their legal wives or foreign-born children who fail to maintain in the United States a status or occupation placing them within the excepted classes shall be deemed to be in the United States contrary to law, and shall be subject to deportation as provided in section 19 of this act.

That after three months from the passage of this act, in addition to the aliens who are by law now excluded from admission into the United States, the following persons shall also be excluded from admission thereto, to wit:

All aliens over 16 years of age physically capable of reading who can not read the English language or some other language or dialect, including Hebrew or Yiddish: Provided, That any admissible alien, or any alien heretofore or hereafter legally admitted, or any citizen of the United States, may bring in or send for his father or grandfather over 55 years of age, his wife, his mother, his grandmother, or his unmarried or widowed daughter, if otherwise admissible, whether such relative can read or not, and such relative shall be permitted to enter. That for the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read the immigrant inspectors shall be furnished with slips of uniform size, prepared under the direction of the Secretary of Labor, each containing not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use, printed in plainly legible type in some one of the various languages or dialects of immigrants. Each alien may designate the particular language or dialect in which he desires the examination to be made, and shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. That the following classes of persons shall be exempt from the operation of the illiteracy test, to wit: All aliens who shall prove to the satisfaction of the proper immigration officer or to the Secretary of Labor that they are seeking admission to the United States to avoid religious persecution in the country of their last permanent residence, whether such persecution be evidenced by overt acts or by laws or governmental regulations that discriminate against the alien or the race to which he belongs because of his religious faith; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who have resided therein continuously for five years, and who have in accordance with the law declared their intention of becoming citizens of the United States and who return to the United States within six months from the date of their departure therefrom; all aliens in transit through the United States; all aliens who have been lawfully admitted to the United States and who later shall go in transit from one part of the United States to another through foreign contiguous territory.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is the literacy test that is objected to. By the terms of the bill all aliens are to be excluded who can not read 30 words in ordinary use in some language or dialect of immigrants, of his own choosing. The condition being, "not less than 30 nor more than 40 words in ordinary use." For the physical defects assigned in the bill no one will contend that the immigrant should be admitted. But there are exceptions which broaden the scope of the bill, and if a person seek admission because of religious persecution he can enter.

The ability to read 30 ordinary words is a very mild test. It is not hard to comply with that requirement. If a person is going to France, Spain, or Germany, it is not unusual for the tourist to learn enough of the language of those countries for ordinary use. We read of ex-President Roosevelt making a speech in one of the West Indies, in French, after he had been gone only a few weeks. With slate and pencil a person of ordinary intelligence can learn to write the German alphabet in an evening or two. President Lincoln learned to read and cipher by the light of the family hearth. Andrew Johnson was taught by his wife after they were married. In these days of books and teachers and of schools it is not a hardship to learn to read. Most of the cities have night schools. There are numerous opportunities on every hand to acquire learning. One Member said learning dispels darkness. It does more than that—it dispels ignorance and opens the door of opportunity as nothing else will. A man will make a more desirable employee at everything who has learning, however little. A farmer wants his hired man to be able to count the sheep; to keep track of the produce sold; to keep informed of the daily markets; aye, to keep up with the times and read the daily papers. If he is able to do this he is more valuable than if he can not.

We heard the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] with much pleasure give a eulogy on the splendid school institutions of the Republic in general, and of Brown University in particular.

We are proud of our institutions of learning in Michigan. The great University of Michigan, with over 7,000 students today, made up from every nation on the globe, with more Members represented on the floor of this House than any other university or college, with thousands of its alumni scattered the world over, is the special pride of that great Commonwealth. This university was established with the formation of the State in 1837. Always standing high in learning and in imparting knowledge, preparing the youth of the world for advanced positions in all the walks of science, literature, and art.

The Michigan Agricultural College is one of the best, imparting technical training in that popular branch of science and of learning which has become a national problem—agriculture. Other great institutions devoted to the higher education in Michigan are its normal school for teachers, its college of mines and mining. Other colleges of high standing of great merit and grown strong with age are scattered at close intervals throughout the State, Albion College, Hillsdale College, Olivet College, the Western State Normal, Nazareth Academy, and business colleges being in my district. Added to these institutions of learning is a complete network of high schools, graded schools, and country schools. Under the school system of our State there is extended to all an opportunity of education, which makes for the permanent welfare of our citizens, old and young. Millions have been willingly paid for maintaining these institutions. We have compulsory school laws. All children within the age of 14 are required to attend school for five months each year. It does not look right to me to support these schools and compel our own children at great expense to go to school, and then let down the bars and ingraft upon our people foreigners who can neither read nor write. What is true of Michigan is also true of most of the States. This bill will not exclude many. There were 326,270 immigrants who came into this country during the year 1915, 35,449 of whom were illiterates over the age of 14 and who would be affected by the provisions of this bill, while 52,982 were under the age of 14 and would not be affected by it.

When the Territory of the Northwest was established, our forefathers had strongly in mind the education of those occupying that Territory, and the ordinance providing for its government contained this provision:

Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.

The people of Michigan so highly regarded that beneficent requirement that it was made a part of its new constitution of 1908, and it is now embodied as a provision of the basic law of our State. Why talk about compulsory school laws? And why talk about forcing men to acquire an education? Because it makes men better every way and we ought to be for that. Under our form of government the whole administration of our affairs and our future destiny are in the hands of the people. Education makes for good citizenship and good government. While there are good citizens who can not read or write, they would not be any worse off if they could. How are they to become citizens before the court if they can neither read nor write? We should have high regard for our citizenship.

Some think literacy should not be the sole test. Well, it will be better if it were one of the tests. A few months at night school or a few months study at home at night will qualify one on this simple requirement. So highly is learning regarded by employers that many of our leading institutions furnish schooling to their workmen.

With that good altruistic spirit always befitting Americans, some think that it is a discrimination between the educated and the uneducated which ought not to obtain, that this country is the retreat and asylum for all people. Such a rule would let in the Chinese, the Japanese, and the Hindus. We can not assimilate the world. If they want to come, and if we want them to come, we are a sovereign Nation, and have a right, as long as we are an independent Republic, to fix the standard of those who are to be admitted. This is our country. We contended for our freedom and our independence. Other nations can not set us our standard. For our high standard of civilization we have poured out our treasure and our blood. Let us maintain our high standard.

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity, with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!
We know what Master laid they keel,
What workmen wrought thy ribs of steel,
Who made each mast, and sail, and rope,
What anvils rang, what hammers beat,
In what a forge and what a heat
Were shaped the anchors of thy hope!
Fear not each sudden sound and shock,
'Tis of the wave and not the rock;
'Tis but the flapping of the sail,
And not a rent made by the gale!
In spite of rock and tempest's roar,
In spite of false lights on the shore,
Sail on, nor fear to breast the sea!
Our hearts, our hopes, are all with thee,
Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith triumphant o'er our fears,
Are all with thee, are all with thee!

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment as a new section, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 11, by inserting after the word "guests," in line 26, the following as a new section:

"SEC. 3½. That whenever he may deem such action necessary the Secretary of Labor may, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, detail immigrant inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels carrying immigrant or emigrant passengers, or passengers others than first and second cabin passengers, between ports of the United States and foreign ports. On such voyages said inspectors and matrons shall remain in that part of the vessel where immigrant passengers are carried. It shall be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe such passengers during the voyage and report to the immigration authorities in charge at the port of landing any information of value in determining the admissibility of such passengers under the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States. It shall further be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe violations of the provisions of such laws and the violation of such provisions of the 'passenger act' of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and report the same to the proper United States officials at ports of landing. Whenever the Secretary of Labor so directs a surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, detailed to the Immigration Service, not lower in rank than a passed assistant surgeon, shall be received and carried on any vessel transporting immigrant or emigrant passengers, or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers, between ports of the United States and foreign ports. Such surgeon shall be permitted to investigate and examine the condition of all immigrant and emigrant passengers in relation to any provisions of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States and such provisions of the 'passenger act' of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and shall immediately report any violation of said laws to the master or commanding officer of the vessel, and shall also report said violations to the Secretary of Labor within 24 hours after the arrival of the vessel at the port of entry in the United States. Such surgeon shall accompany the master or captain of the vessel in his visits to the sanitary officers of the ports of call during the voyage, and, should contagious or infectious diseases prevail at any port where passengers are received, he shall request all reasonable precautionary measures for the health of persons on board. Such surgeon on arrival at ports of the United States shall also, if requested by the examining board, furnish any information he may possess in regard to immigrants arriving on the vessel to which he has been detailed. While on duty such surgeons shall wear the prescribed uniform of their service and shall be provided with first-class accommodations on such vessel at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. For every violation of this section any person, including any transportation company owning or operating the vessel in which such violation occurs, shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the next United States port of arrival is located the sum of $1,000 for each and every day during which such violation continues, the term 'violation' to include the refusal of any person having authority so to do to permit any such immigrant inspector, matron, or surgeon to be received on board such vessel, as provided in this section, and also the refusal of the master or commanding officer of any such vessel to permit the inspections and visits of any such surgeon, as provided in this section, and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of all such questions upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine and costs, such sum to be named by the Secretary of Labor."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment tends to protect the immigrant upon the vessel. For years we have heard a great many complaints as to the treatment of these immigrants respecting the space and the general conditions that prevail in the steerage. My colleague, Mr. GALLAGHER, a few moments ago offered an amendment tending to relieve these unfortunate conditions. This amendment of mine is part of a section which was included in the bill that we reported to the House last year, and I believe it is a good provision, and that it will tend to force the steamship companies to provide better facilities for these unfortunate people who are obliged to travel in the steerage. It is a regulation of the navigation laws, and it gives the Secretary of Labor power to appoint inspectors and matrons to see that the law is enforced. For the information of the Members of the House, I will read the section of last year's immigration bill to which I have just referred:

That whenever he may deem such action necessary the Secretary of Labor may, at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act, detail immigrant inspectors and matrons of the United States Immigration Service for duty on vessels carrying immigrant or emigrant passengers, or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers, between ports of the United States and foreign ports. On such voyages said inspectors and matrons shall remain in that part of the vessel where immigrant passengers are carried. It shall be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe such passengers during the voyage, and report to the immigration authorities in charge at the port of landing any information of value in determining the admissibility of such passengers under the laws regulating immigration of aliens into the United States. It shall further be the duty of such inspectors and matrons to observe violations of the provisions of such laws and the violation of such provisions of the "passenger act" of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and report the same to the proper United States officials at ports of landing. Whenever the Secretary of Labor so directs, a surgeon of the United States Public Health Service, detailed to the Immigration Service, not lower in rank than a passed assistant surgeon, shall be received and carried on any vessel transporting immigrant or emigrant passengers, or passengers other than first and second cabin passengers, between ports of the United States and foreign ports. Such surgeon shall be permitted to investigate and examine the condition of all immigrant and emigrant passengers in relation to any provisions of the laws regulating the immigration of aliens into the United States and such provisions of the "passenger act" of August 2, 1882, as amended, as relate to the care and treatment of immigrant passengers at sea, and shall immediately report any violation of said laws to the master or commanding officer of the vessel, and shall also report said violations to the Secretary of Labor within 24 hours after the arrival of the vessel at the port of entry in the United States. Such surgeon shall accompany the master of the vessel in his visits to the sanitary officers of the ports of call during the voyage; and should contagious or infectious diseases prevail at any port where passengers are received, he shall request all reasonable precautionary measures for the health of persons on board. Such surgeon, on arrival at ports of the United States, shall also, if requested by the examining board, furnish any information he may possess in regard to immigrants arriving on the vessel to which he has been detailed. While on duty such surgeons shall wear the prescribed uniform of their service and shall be provided with first-class accommodations on such vessel at the expense of the appropriation for the enforcement of this act. For every violation of this section any person, including any transportation company, owning or operating the vessel in which such violation occurs shall pay to the collector of customs of the customs district in which the next United States port of arrival is located the sum of $1,000 for each and every day during which such violation continues, the term "violation" to include the refusal of any person having authority so to do to permit any such immigrant inspector, matron, or surgeon to be received on board such vessel, as provided in this section, and also the refusal of the master or commanding officer of any such vessel to permit the inspections and visits of any such surgeon, as provided in this section; and no vessel shall be granted clearance papers pending the determination of the question of the liability of such fine, or while it remains unpaid, nor shall such fine be remitted or refunded: Provided, That clearance may be granted prior to the determination of all such questions upon the deposit of a sum sufficient to cover such fine and costs, such sum to be named by the Secretary of Labor.

I believe that the amendment should be adopted, because we owe it to these people to protect them during their voyage, and we should eliminate the conditions that exist on a great many of these vessels. Not desiring to detain the committee any longer, I am ready for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, we thrashed that matter out a while ago, and I think the committee understands fully that this has no place in this bill at the present time. There is a bill pending before the committee, and I therefore ask for a vote.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that asking for a vote——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment be now closed.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the Chair for information—was not a time limit set on debate on this section?

Mr. MANN. This is a new section, and this is a rather important matter.

Mr. BURNETT. We discussed this a while ago. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BENNET. Five or six minutes.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the end of five minutes all debate close on this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes, to be occupied by the gentleman from New York, that a vote be taken. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] will be adopted, and it can be enforced. When we had this up a little earlier in the committee a statement was made it could not be enforced. Here is the way it can be enforced, and I will read from page 15 of this bill:

Provided further, That whenever it shall be shown to the satisfaction of the Secretary of Labor that the provisions of this section are persistently violated by or on behalf of any transportation company, it shall be the duty of said Secretary to deny to such company the privilege of landing alien immigrant passengers of any or all classes at United States ports for such a period as in his judgment may be necessary to insure an observance of such provisions.

Mr. Chairman, the committee can vote this down if they want to do so, but I want to say to the committee that if they vote down this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois they can never again truthfully say, any so voting, that they cared for the moral or spiritual or physical welfare in the highest degree of the immigrant on the vessel. I know, because I was a member of the subcommittee that had charge of this matter for the Immigration Commission, and when we got through with that work I offered a bill, which was substantially the same in spirit, though possibly different in language, as the provisions now offered by the gentleman from Illinois. Why not look after these people on the steamships? Why not compel the steamships to carry our own Government officials to look after the people who are to become first residents and then citizens of this country? Why not look after the women and protect them from assault by members of the crews and petty officers; and if I had time I could tell you stories about what has happened to immigrant women, and my friend from Illinois could tell you stories about assaults on women on steamships, which will continue unless you put some such provision as this in the law; and why in the name of heaven you do not rise to the opportunity to protect these people, men and women, who have bodies to be assaulted and souls to be saved or damned, is something I can not understand. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SABATH and Mr. BENNET) there were—ayes 35, noes 52.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The committee divided; and the tellers [Mr. BURNETT and Mr. SABATH] reported that there were—ayes 46, noes 64.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the importation into the United States of any alien for the purpose of prostitution, or for any other immoral purpose, is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall, directly or indirectly, import or attempt to import into the United States any alien for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, or shall hold or attempt to hold any alien for any such purpose in pursuance of such illegal importation, or shall keep, maintain, control, support, employ, or harbor in any house or other place, for the purpose of prostitution or for any other immoral purpose, any alien, in pursuance of such illegal importation, shall in every such case be deemed guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than 10 years and by a fine of not more than $5,000. Jurisdiction for the trial and punishment of the felonies hereinbefore set forth shall be in any district to or into which said alien is brought in pursuance of said importation by the person or persons accused, or in any district in which a violation of any of the foregoing provisions of this section occurs. That any alien who shall, after he has been excluded and deported or arrested and deported in pursuance of the provisions of this act which relate to prostitutes, procurers, or other like immoral persons, attempt thereafter to return to or to enter the United States shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a term of not more than two years. In all prosecutions under this section the testimony of a husband or wife shall be admissible and competent evidence against each other.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to the fact that while we are criticized a good deal sometimes we do acts which are of real benefit to humanity. In 1910, on the 25th of June, as I recall the date, the then President of the United States signed an act introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] known as the white-slave act, of which this section is a complement. A great many men do not get any tributes until after they are dead, and I was glad to hear my friend from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] get the kind words he did, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] get the kind words he did, and to receive some few for my own battered personality from the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN].

Now I rise for the purpose of informing this House that the bill that we passed in the Sixty-first Congress, introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has resulted in the conviction of more than 600 scoundrels engaged in the nefarious white-slave traffic. Write that up against some of the things that are said about Congress which are erroneous. Write that up to the credit of a man who has the courage to withstand all the abuse and the obliquy and derision that rang and ran through the press of this country for months and that is still running, but, nevertheless, obliquy or derision or criticism to the contrary notwithstanding, more than 600 despicable scoundrels, as the result of that act, have paid the penalty, some of them by long terms of imprisonment, and the life of the country is the sweeter and better, womanhood is more secure, and the family is more regarded because of the fact that the gentleman from Illinois has lived and has been a Member of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. I renew it, Mr. Chairman.

I appreciate the words which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has used in complimenting me. I have not always thought that turn about was fair play. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] was for many years a member of the Committee on Immigration and gave great study to the subject. He was also on a commission which gave great study to the subject. In the Sixty-first Congress I introduced a bill on the subject of white slavery, under the commerce clause of the Constitution. The gentleman from New York introduced a bill under our power to regulate immigration. There was, temporarily, possibly a little rivalry between the gentleman from New York and myself, or, if not rivalry between us, between some of our friends. If there was any rivalry between us in regard to the matter, it was soon dissipated, and we each agreed to do what we could to secure the passage of the bill introduced by the other. The gentleman from New York, who, from his study, had occasion to give a large amount of investigation to the question of immigration of prostitutes and persons for prostitution, did a great service in aiding me to secure consideration from the House of a bill which finally became a law. I will say that I felt under great obligation to him, and I think the country owes him a great deal for the service that he rendered there.

In reference to the white-slave law, permit me to say that I believe it has done and is doing from day to day as much real good as any other law upon the statute books. While various suggestions have been made from time to time to amend it so as to make it weaker, sometimes so as to make it stronger, I have not yet seen anyone in the House who was willing to father a bill to take out any of its provisions. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, while the two distinguished gentlemen, the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from New York, are passing bouquets, I think there is one distinguished gentleman whose name should not be forgotten in that connection and who was then a distinguished Member of this House from Texas, Judge Russell, who was afterwards appointed to the United States district court. Judge Russell, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, emphatically and unconditionally supported the bill of the gentleman from Illinois. And the coincidence occurred that afterwards, when Judge Russell went on the district bench, one of the first cases to test the constitutionality of that act came before Judge Russell, and his opinion was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENNET. Does the gentleman know that Judge Russell, for his opinion in that case, in which he upheld the constitutionality of the act, inserted the speech which he had made on the floor of the House upholding the constitutionality of the law, and therefore what was afterwards sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States was the speech he made on the floor of this House?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman must admit that they were forgetful in not mentioning that in their speeches.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman must not assume that I ever forgot Judge Russell.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Permit me to say that there were 52 assignments of error in that case, and all of them were overruled by the Supreme Court and the judgment affirmed. This justifies the splendid judgment of President Taft in appointing Judge Gordon Russell, although a Democrat, to the United States district court bench, upon practically the unanimous indorsement of the Members of this House, Democrats and Republicans, and the action of the Senate in confirming the appointment by a unanimous vote.

No better man, splendid gentleman, chivalrous citizen, wiser legislator, or abler lawyer ever occupied a seat on this floor. He was an honor to this House, and being an able and just judge is an ornament to the Federal bench. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit, or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit, the importation or migration of any contract laborer or contract laborers into the United States unless such contract laborer or contract laborers are exempted under the fourth proviso of section 3 of this act or have been imported with the permission of the Secretary of Labor in accordance with the third proviso of said section, and for every violation of any of the provisions of this section the person, partnership, company, or corporation violating the same shall forfeit and pay for every such offense the sum of $1,000, which may be sued for and recovered by the United States as debts of like amount are now recovered in the courts of the United States. For every violation of the provisions hereof the person violating the same may be prosecuted in a criminal action for a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of $1,000, or by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months nor more than two years; and under either the civil or the criminal procedure mentioned separate suits or prosecutions may be brought for each alien thus offered or promised employment as aforesaid. The Department of Justice may from any fines or penalties received pay rewards to persons other than Government employees who may furnish information leading to the recovery of any such penalties or to the arrest and punishment of any person, as in this section provided.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, there are two amendments I think we will agree to without any trouble.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they at the desk?

Mr. BURNETT. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments, and the committee will come to order.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 11, strike out the word "fourth" and insert the word "fifth" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, where does that come in?

The CHAIRMAN. On page 13, line 11.

Mr. BENNET. After the word "fourth" insert "fifth"?

Mr. BURNETT. Strike out the word "fourth" and insert the word "fifth." It is an incorrect reference to the number of the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER. Is the gentleman sure that that reference is incorrect?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. My impression is it ought to be "fourth" and "fifth."

Mr. BURNETT. The next amendment is, on line 13, to strike out the word "third" and insert "fourth."

Mr. BENNET. I think that is right. If the gentleman will read the fourth proviso I think he will find that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is correct. It should be the fourth and fifth proviso.

Mr. GARDNER. The fourth proviso is the one that excepts lecturers and singers, and so forth.

Mr. BURNETT. There is one right near the top of page 8. That is the first. Then there is another about the middle of page 9. And then the third, "that the provisions of this act, relating to the payment for tickets or passage by any corporation, association," and so forth, is the third. The next is the fourth, "that skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country." And the fifth one is, "that the provisions of this law applicable to contract labor shall not be held to exclude professional actors, artists, lecturers, singers," and so forth.

Mr. BENNET. I think, if I could have the attention of the gentleman, that his first amendment, on line 11 of page 13, ought to be so that it would read "under the fourth and fifth provisos," for this reason: Contract laborers who otherwise would be excluded are exempted under both the fourth and fifth provisos, and the provision of the section is, "that it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership, or corporation, in any manner whatsoever, to prepay the transportation or in any way to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit, or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit, the importation or migration of any contract labor or contract laborers into the United States, unless such contract labor or contract laborers are exempted under the fourth and fifth provisos."

Now, the fourth provision is:

That skilled labor, if otherwise admissible, may be imported if labor of like kind unemployed can not be found in this country—

And so forth.

Now, certainly, we do not want to punish a transportation company which is exempted under that provision. And the fifth provision is the one we debated at some length in regard to artists, lecturers, actors, singers, and so forth. So it seems to me the provision ought to be to add after the fourth proviso, in line 11, the words "fifth proviso."

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asked me why it is not covered by the next amendment. I will tell him this: As the bill was in the Sixty-third Congress it would have been, but as the bill is now there are two classes of contract laborers, or those who would be contract laborers except for the exemption: Those who come and are admissible because they come within the exemptions, and those described in lines 2 to 6, on page 10, "in any particular instance may be determined by the Secretary of Labor upon the application of any person interested, such application to be made before such importation." But that is merely permissive and not mandatory, so that if you want to make the bill correct you want to add the words "and fifth proviso," on line 11, page 13, and strike out the word "third" and insert the word "fourth," on line 13. I saw the same errors that the gentleman saw.

Mr. BURNETT. The gentleman is mistaken, I think.

Mr. BENNET. No.

Mr. BURNETT. The fifth proviso relates to actors and others falling in that class entirely. Then the fourth proviso relates to skilled laborers who have been imported, with the permission of the Secretary of Labor, in accordance with that proviso, and for that reason they have to be imported with the permission of the Secretary of Labor. I think the fourth could only apply to that, and the fifth could only apply to actors, and so forth.

Mr. BENNET. Let me make this suggestion to the gentleman: Neither he nor I want to do anything erroneous?

Mr. BURNETT. Surely.

Mr. BENNET. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that we adopt the amendments as he suggests them, and if after the session he comes to the conclusion that I was right he shall ask that unanimous consent be given for the purpose of making the section read as I have suggested.

Mr. BURNETT. That is perfectly agreeable to me. I have conferred with the law agent of the department, and he thinks it is clear as it stands.

Mr. BENNET. With that understanding—that if there is merit in my suggestion, it will be corrected—I have no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Of course, we all want to be correct.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, why should we put in numbers there? Why should we not say "unless they are excepted or exempted under the provisions of section 3"?

Mr. BURNETT. We want to specify the particular section, because all the sections would not apply.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Ought not the proviso to be stated in full, so that there would not be any trouble about it?

Mr. BURNETT. All you have to do is to count them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that if at any time he so desires these particular amendments may be recurred to for such action as he may desire to submit to the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 6, strike out the word "hereinafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding, after the word "justice"——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURNETT. What was that last amendment that the gentleman referred to?

The CHAIRMAN. It was read at the desk. It was a committee amendment. The Clerk will again report it.

The committee amendment was again reported.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by adding, on line 2, page 14, after the word "justice," the words "with the approval of the Department of Labor."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 2, after the word "justice," insert the words "with the approval of the Department of Labor."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee and explain this to him I think he will adopt this amendment. A very important source from which fines are received—of course, that is the source covered in the section—is these contract-labor suits. I had the pleasure, while I was taking my recent vacation from the House, of being retained five times in contract-labor suits; and the way these suits are handled in the Government is this——

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is well taken. I accept the gentleman's suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of section 5 of this act to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit any alien to come into the United States by promise of employment through advertisements printed, published, or distributed in any foreign country, whether such promise is true or false, and either the civil or criminal penalty or both imposed by said section shall be applicable to such a case.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 8, after the word "That," insert the words "except as to persons whose importation is lawful."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the purpose of that amendment is very clear. Under the exemptions in sections 3 and 5 it is perfectly lawful to import certain persons, but without this provision the person who "induced, assisted, solicited, or attempted to induce," and so forth, any such alien to come into the United States would be guilty of an offense.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would it not be better, if the amendment prevails or is accepted, to put it after the word "false," in line 14? Would not that be a little clearer?

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman's question is whether I do not think my amendment ought to go in there?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; would it not be clearer?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, may we not have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is a question of style as to where the language would come in best.

Mr. BENNET. I think there are only two places where it could get in with absolute clearness—either where I have indicated or after the word "unlawful," in line 8. But I think it would be rather involved where the gentleman suggests. I gave the matter a good deal of thought, and I think the place I have indicated is the proper place for it. If the chairman of the committee has come to the conclusion to accept it I do not want to talk further.

Mr. BURNETT. I do not think it ought to be adopted.

Mr. BENNET. Then I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, under this bill it is perfectly legal to bring into this country the persons mentioned in the fourth and fifth provisos to the third section, which will be found on pages 9 and 10. Now, we have the anomaly that if any such persons who have a legal right to enter this country under the law come into this country because they are induced by promise of employment through advertisements printed in any foreign country they may be deported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose Oscar Hammerstein advertises for artistic talent in Italy. Under this provision could not those who answered the advertisement and accepted employment be deported?

Mr. BENNET. Unless the committee adopts the language which I have offered this will be the situation: When that particular singer, who, under the language on page 10, is entitled to enter this country, gets to Ellis Island and tells the truth—that is, that she signed a contract abroad—it was the intent of Congress that she be admitted; but if it is proven that Mr. Hammerstein wanted singers of that kind, and knew he was permitted to bring them in, but advertised for them in a paper in Florence, the place from which singers of that kind mainly come, then, apparently, this singer would be kept out.

Mr. GARDNER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. The gentleman is aware that this provision is in the present law, and also the exceptions to concert singers, to which exception he alludes. That is in section 6 of the present law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is in the present law?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; it is the law at present, and has been for years and years.

Mr. BENNET. And under the present law that poor farmer out in Dakota apparently would have to pay $5,000 for an absolutely technical violation. And, as we go through the law, it does seem to me that the mere fact that a thing is in the law is no reason why we should not make a beneficial amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that Mr. Hammerstein could bring in a concert singer from Florence, but that he could not bring in a farm laborer from Canada?

Mr. BENNET. Yes; of course; but the House has passed on that. We had our day in court on that, and we were beaten.

Now, I am just as responsible for this as anybody. I was on the committee with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT], and others, who drafted this original provision; but while I was out of Congress I had an opportunity to get up against the other side of this question; and it would do some other gentlemen here good if they could have a similar experience. When you are retained in a lawsuit, and are studying the law from that side, you put a good deal of concentrated attention upon it that sometimes you do not put upon a bill when you are in Congress. In five cases in which I was retained I paid a good deal of attention to this contract-labor law, and this is one of the things that I saw. The mere fact that we do not know that harm has happened is no reason at all why we should not correct an error in the law by adopting a good amendment.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, my objection to this amendment rests on other grounds than those which have been discussed. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] advocates his amendment on the ground that if it is legal to import singers and lecturers it ought to be legal to advertise for them abroad. If difficulties had been met with in the execution of the law in the past, I should be very much inclined to agree with the gentleman; but my objection to his amendment is that before any judicial determination had been arrived at to show that there was a scarcity of some particular class of laborers in this country, it would enable people to advertise for contract laborers on the allegation that workmen of a like kind could not be found.

Now, it was with the greatest difficulty, and after consultations with Senator LA FOLLETTE, and with the representatives of organized labor and with the representatives of certain industries who claimed that they could not find in this country operatives to run lace-making machines, that the conferees finally reached an agreement. Before this was accomplished the immigration bill was sent back to conference by the Senate and I think by the House, as well.

It was after a very long conference that we finally agreed upon a method for making effective that clause in the immigration statute which exempts from the contract-labor law all labor of a kind which can not be found unemployed in this country. The method we adopted is comprised in section 3 of the bill. I hope that no amendment which alters its scope will prevail.

You all know that under the existing law persons can import contract laborers when laborers of a like kind are not to be had in this country. You also know that in spite of this opportunity few contract laborers are actually imported. The reason is as follows:

No one is clothed with authority to declare whether or not at any given time there is a scarcity of any particular kind of labor in this country. Without such declaration no man likes to take the risk of importing labor, even when he feels pretty sure that labor of the same kind can not be secured without importation. If a man were to take that risk, likely as not the administration officers might hold that there was plenty of that particular kind of labor to be had. Therefore, we provided in the vetoed bills that there should be a means of determining the question as to labor scarcity on application from either side to the controversy. It is principally because I do not want to do anything which will alter that agreement which was made with such difficulty that I oppose any amendment which in any way contravenes it

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the amendment for the purpose of calling the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to a fact; he gave me his assurance—and no doubt believed it was correct—that this was existing law, but if he will look at the committee print he will find that it is not; that there are changes, and very material changes. One of the changes is where it says "induce, assist, encourage, or solicit any alien to come into the United States," the words are inserted "or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit." Then with reference to the advertisements printed and published in a foreign country the words "whether such promise is true or false" are inserted.

Now, there is no reason except an agreement with Senator LA FOLLETTE, not a Member of the House and not now present, as to why this amendment should not be adopted.

Mr. GARDNER. Did not the gentleman understand me to say that representatives of the Federation of Labor were present?

Mr. BENNET. Well, they are not Members of the House. The purpose of the amendment is simply to avoid a conflict which ought to be and is patent to everybody. It stands up like a ripe banana in a coal scuttle; you can not reconcile the two things. If you want these people to come in, which the House voted to-day to have come in, it ought not to be an offense to invite them to come in.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, this section is old law in all of its substantial provisions. The only changes in the law are that the present law says it shall be unlawful and be deemed a violation of section 5 of this act to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit any alien to come into the United States. In the present bill it says induce, assist, encourage, or solicit, or attempt to induce, assist, encourage, or solicit any alien, and so forth. Then as to the promises made by advertisement printed and published in a foreign country we have introduced the words "whether such promise is true or false." Whether they can come in lawfully or not was never considered by the committee, because we did not want induced labor to come here, even if they could come legally. The amendment is against the policy of this old law to prevent induced or assisted immigration, and the people of this country do not want induced labor to come in. Even if they are admissible, we ought not to induce them to come here. Therefore I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURNETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Who gets punished under this provision, who can it apply to; anybody but the citizens and people in the United States?

Mr. BURNETT. No one but those who induce, solicit, and encourage or attempt to induce, solicit, or encourage.

Mr. MANN. It is perfectly plain that we have no authority to punish some citizen in Austria for advertising in Austrian papers advising people to come to the United States.

Mr. BURNETT. Of course not.

Mr. MANN. Who does it run against?

Mr. BURNETT. Those that do that here, those who induce, encourage, or solicit.

Mr. MANN. How far does it apply to foreign steamship companies?

Mr. BURNETT. We go further and provide for that in another part of the bill, except that they may advertise their sailings.

Mr. MANN. It is not supposed to apply to steamship companies?

Mr. BURNETT. No; there is another section that applies to them.

Mr. MANN. In the bill as it passed the House the last time we put an exception in that States might advertise.

Mr. BURNETT. That, I think, is further on in the bill.

Mr. GARDNER. No; that has been cut out.

Mr. BURNETT. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Some gentleman on the floor said it was in the law. It was in the bill as it passed the House the last time.

Mr. SABATH. It was; and I think it was on my motion that it was cut out in the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that I can agree with the chairman of the committee on this proposition. I am opposed to the amendment and I think it should not prevail. I wish to state that I always have been and am now against induced immigration, and for that reason I assisted in having this section strengthened so that it will be impossible for anyone to bring in contract labor or induce immigration to the United States, though it might be brought in by some States that may desire to advertise for it. I think that tends to show that the oft-repeated statement on the part of the chairman of the committee that the literacy test is the only restrictive provisions in the bill is erroneous. We have in this bill a great many other provisions which are restrictive. This is one of them. I am in favor of it. I am not in favor of permitting any corporation or steamship company or any agents to advertise and bring in labor, as was done some years ago. I am now on record and I am going on record again against induced immigration. I have always maintained that those people who desire to come here to make this their permanent home because they have read and heard so much of our institutions, of our country, and of the liberties of our Nation should have the right and privilege to come.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think that this paragraph could be interpreted to apply as against a person in the United States writing to a relative on the other side and assisting that relative to come over?

Mr. SABATH. I do not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman satisfied in his mind, as I think the chairman of the committee stated, that this applies only to such assistance as is advertised in the newspapers?

Mr. SABATH. Yes. If the gentleman will read the section, I think he will satisfy himself that it only tends to prevent people from advertising, encouraging, and inducing people to come to the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would be a hardship if it prevented a father from writing to a son to come here and assisting that son to come.

Mr. SABATH. There must be a promise held out of employment, through such advertisement.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose a brother wrote to another brother that he had employment for him?

Mr. SABATH. That would not apply.

Mr. BURNETT. It never has been so construed.

Mr. BENNET. But here is what would happen. Suppose a newspaper published in Detroit carried an advertisement, inserted by an American for distribution in America, saying something like this, "Hands wanted," and that newspaper was distributed—the word "distributed" being in line 13—in the city of Windsor, which is across the river from Detroit, in Canada, and a man or a woman over there read the newspaper and came across in the ferry boat and accepted this employment in pursuance of the advertisement, the person who employed him or her in Detroit would be liable to a thousand-dollar fine. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] told me of a case exactly like that that happened to a concern in Omaha.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Does the gentleman remember that there was a dissenting report in 1906, when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BURNETT] and I joined in a majority report, and that the dissenter in that report was the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], and that he made a specialty of redrafting the contract labor law, and that we accepted his redraft of it? Does the gentleman remember that?

Mr. BENNET. If I can get time, I will tell what did happen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has expired.

Mr. GARDNER. Was not that substantially what happened?

Mr. BENNET. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Provided, That this section shall not apply to States or Territories or the District of Columbia or places subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, advertising the inducements they offer for immigration thereto, respectively."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a good deal about things being left in the bill because they are in the existing law. The proviso I have just sent to the desk as an amendment is existing law. Sometimes I think I am the only Jeffersonian Democrat in the House, because, as far as I can see, I am the only man in Congress who seems to think there is any right, duty, or obligation resting on or adhering to a State. Under existing law if the State of Illinois or the District of Columbia, or the Territory of Hawaii desires to advertise for labor, it has the right to do so.

I have not come to the point yet where I do not trust the several States of the Union. I do not think there is a State in the Union that, for the purpose of debasing the citizenship or doing an injury, advertises for people to come to this country, and I do not believe there is a State that would advertise falsely.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, if the States have got that right, what is the use of putting it in the law then?

Mr. BENNET. They have not, because in this bill you strike it out. It was carried in the law always.

Mr. BURNETT. But I understood the gentleman to say they have the right now.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no.

Mr. BURNETT. That is the statement, I understood.

Mr. BENNET. I think this Congress can do as they did to the State of Utah, possibly so; at any rate, I do not want to raise the constitutional question, because one thing that makes this House laugh is when a man gets up and makes an argument on a constitutional question. Since Judge Bartlett left there is no constitutional authority in the House. Possibly the States would have the right under the Constitution, but why strike it out? Why attempt to take away this right from the States? Have the States become degraded, have they gone backward? Are not they the same trustworthy Commonwealths they have always been? What I seek to do is to continue in the law a provision that the law has contained always, and if I have to make a speech for it as a Jeffersonian Democrat I will do it, because I realize there is a value to the States, and I dislike to see this nominally Democratic House day after day and time after time, vote after vote, strike down the privileges and abridge the duties of the respective States, and not one single Democrat rise in defense of the old time, old-fashioned doctrine of State rights that had a good deal of merit and force in it, and while we Republicans do not adhere to it as a whole, I think we would be very sorry indeed to see disappear from the arguments and life of our country the thought that the several States have existing rights.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to disagree with the gentleman from New York, especially when he designates himself as a Jeffersonian Democrat. I have always been one, and I therefore believe in that doctrine, but I can not see how we can deprive a State of any constitutional right that it may have by merely saying nothing about it. We do not say that they have no rights, and we do not specifically give them any rights under this bill.

If such a provision has ever been contained in a former immigration act or law, it did not give the States any additional rights or powers. It was on my motion, Mr. Chairman, that this provision was eliminated, and I maintained then, as I maintain now, that no individual and no State should have the right to import immigrants or aliens if they are not wanted or if they are not going to accord them proper treatment. You and I have read the reports of the hardships of the immigrants who were imported into Carolina some years ago, and we know that due to conditions which existed there the stay of those immigrants was made impossible. The consequence was that a great deal of trouble was stirred up which should never have occurred. It was not that the immigrants did not desire to work on the farms, as they were promised, when they were induced to go to that State. Instead of being employed in tilling the soil they were placed in employments which were foreign to them, and where they could not do themselves justice. Fearing that this occurrence might arise again, I have urged that we should not make it possible for immigrants to be led astray and be imported by any individual or company or any corporation or by any State unless the advertisements are published in good faith, and some guarantee given that the promises made to the immigrants will be carried into effect.

In former years great injustice has been done to immigrants under circumstances such as we have been discussing, and for that reason I am opposed to the provision, and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New York will not prevail.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to speak for two or three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent to speak for three minutes?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to speak for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I am deeply distressed at the heartfelt lamentation of the modern weeping prophet from New York [Mr. BENNET] that there is left in Congress no friend of the Constitution, nor defender of State rights.

I have observed that while many of us have respect for the Constitution and State rights from principle, because the Constitution exists and State rights are guaranteed by it and deem it unnecessary to make constant protestation, yet there is no danger of the instrument or the doctrine being abandoned. Every once in a while we see that when the shoe pinches, some gentleman who had forgotten about the Constitution and State rights, begins vociferously to shout for both, because he is in a corner and interest prompts him to invoke the Constitution and State rights. But alas—

> When self the wavering balance shakes,
> 'Tis rarely right adjusted.

My distinguished friend from New York [Mr. BENNET], comes halfway over. He can not be a square-cut, straight Democrat. He qualifies it. He says, "Jeffersonian Democrat." True Democracy does not need any handle or any qualification, but is just straight Democrat, friend of the Constitution, friend of the people, and friend of the States. But I congratulate the distinguished gentleman from New York for making a start, even if impelled by the exigencies of the debate on this occasion or the interest in the subject or his section of our country. But no matter what motive may prompt him. If his conduct and doctrine become sound and correct he should be encouraged, and I am constrained, in congratulating him on the progress he has made in the right direction, to commend to him two lines of that blessed old hymn:

> While the lamp holds out to burn,
> The vilest sinner may return.

[Laughter.]

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment? I want to make a little correction.

Mr. BURNETT. Do that in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10384) to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DYER, by unanimous consent, was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Allen Barnes (H. R. 2626, 1st sess. 63d Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness of his brother.

Mr. DARROW, by unanimous consent, on request of Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, was granted leave of absence for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to myself in respect to the condition of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The following is letter referred to:

THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
ON BOARD U. S. S. "TENNESSEE,"
March 11, 1916.

MY DEAR MR. KITCHIN: There has been so much unfair criticism and partisan misrepresentation of the daily statement of the United States Treasury which was put into effect October 1, 1915, that for the sake of truth and fair play I beg to present to you the actual facts, with the hope that they may be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and published to the country.

Our Republican opponents complain bitterly because I have included as a part of the general fund of the Treasury the deposits made by national banks for the retirement of their circulating notes. One would suppose, from their violent denunciations, that I am guilty of a crime because I have done this, and yet I have merely obeyed a law passed July 14, 1890, by a Congress controlled in both branches by the Republican Party and approved by a Republican President, the late Benjamin Harrison. This law is mandatory. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to do exactly what I have done. I have no discretion in the premises. If I have committed a wrong the Republican Party is responsible for it, and if there is virtue in my action the Republican Party is entitled to the credit of it. The act of July 14, 1890, approved by President Harrison, provides as follows:

"That upon the passage of this act the balances standing with the Treasurer of the United States to the respective credits of national banks for deposits made to redeem the circulating notes of such banks, and all deposits thereafter received for like purposes, shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem from the general cash in the Treasury the circulating notes of said banks which may come into his possession subject to redemption; and upon the certificate of the Comptroller of the Currency that such notes have been received by him and that they have been destroyed and that no new notes will be issued in their place, reimbursement of their amount shall be made to the Treasurer, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, from an appropriation hereby created, to be known as national-bank notes redemption account, but the provisions of this act shall not apply to the deposits received under section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, requiring every national bank to keep in lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent of its circulation to be held and used for the redemption of its circulating notes; and the balance remaining of the deposits so covered shall, at the close of each month, be reported on the monthly public-debt statement as debt of the United States bearing no interest."

A distinguished Republican statesman, John Sherman, who had been Secretary of the Treasury himself, introduced this bill, and you will find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 7, 1890, the following statement made by him in support of it:

"Mr. President, under the existing law, as Senators no doubt are all aware, when a national bank chooses to retire its circulation it may deposit an equivalent amount of lawful money, or United States notes, in the Treasury of the United States, and by the existing law those United States notes or other lawful money must be held in the Treasury to redeem the outstanding bank circulation as it comes in. It so happens, on account of recent events, which I need not recall, that the national banks are rapidly retiring their circulation, and the result has been that at one time there was over $100,000,000 lying idle in the Treasury to await redemption of national bank notes which were not presented in due course of one, two, three, or four years, and at the present time there are about sixty-five or seventy million dollars lying in the Treasury held to redeem outstanding bank notes which do not come in, thus to that extent contracting the currency of the country unduly and with great injury. The section I propose as an amendment simply proposes to allow the money thus deposited for the redemption of national bank notes to be paid out, and the Treasury will, as these bank notes come in, pay them out of the funds in the Treasury composed of this money and other money in the Treasury. In other words, the effect will be to unlock about sixty-five or seventy million dollars of circulation. I suppose there can be no objection to the amendment.

"Mr. COCKRELL. It simply authorizes that to be paid out of the Treasury?

"Mr. SHERMAN. Yes."

I attach as "Exhibit A" extracts from the debate in the Senate in May, 1890, upon Senator Sherman's measure.

The effect of this law was to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to treat and actually use as a part of the available funds in his hands for the general purposes of the Government all moneys deposited by national banks for the retirement of their outstanding circulation, except the 5 per cent redemption fund.

In order to get a clear understanding of this matter, it should be stated that there are two national-bank redemption funds.

First, what may be called the "100 per cent redemption fund," which is a fund deposited by national banks that have failed or gone into liquidation or desire to reduce their circulation. This fund is equal to the par value of the outstanding national-bank notes to be retired; and,

Second, the "5 per cent redemption fund," which is a fund deposited by going national banks for the purpose of taking care of the current redemptions of their outstanding circulation. This fund has always been treated as a trust fund, and is not included in the general-fund balance of the Treasury.

It is the "100 per cent redemption fund" which the act of July 14, 1890, directs to be covered into the Treasury as a part of the miscellaneous receipts, and it is the identical redemption fund which every Secretary of the Treasury, whether Republican or Democratic, has for the 26 years since the passage of that act treated as a part of the general fund of the Treasury, except for the brief period from July 1, 1913, to September 30, 1915, when, for reasons hereinafter stated, I included this fund in the liabilities on the Treasury statement, and consequently eliminated it from the general-fund balance.

A Republican Secretary of the Treasury, William Windom, put this law into operation on July 26, 1890. The following was the effect produced:

The general-fund balance on July 25, 1890, excluding the gold reserve fund of $100,000,000, was	$83,439,678.12
The next day, July 26, 1890, the general-fund balance in the Treasury, excluding the gold reserve fund of $100,000,000, was	131,357,650.69

This magical increase was accomplished by the mere transfer of the national-bank redemption fund, amounting to $54,388,475.75, from the liabilities on the ledger to the general-fund balance. This amount was, however, decreased that day by $6,470,503.18, being the net difference between the excess of total disbursements over total receipts, thus making the net increase in the surplus fund of the Treasury July 26, 1890, over July 25, 1890, $47,917,972.57. (See daily statements of July 25 and 26, 1890, attached as Exhibits B and C.)

Republican statesmanship achieved this extraordinary gain in the revenues of the Government "overnight" by the simple expedient of transferring by law a $54,388,475.75 liability into the general-fund balance. This is the first recorded instance in the Treasury Department of what our Republican opponents have been so generous in denouncing as "financial legerdemain," "padding figures," "jugglery," etc.; and those illustrious Republican statesmen, Benjamin Harrison, John Sherman, and William Windom, are our exemplers!

On the 1st of July, 1913, I transferred this national-bank redemption fund from the general-fund balance to the liabilities on the Daily Treasury Statement upon the advice of an alleged expert accountant whom I had employed to investigate the Treasurer's Office and improve the Daily Treasury Statement. This was bad advice, and my action was an error, because the law gives the Secretary of the Treasury no discretion in this matter. It compels him to cover the national-bank redemption fund into the Treasury as a part of its general assets. The Government assumes the payment of the national-bank notes for which this redemption fund is deposited and charges the amount thereof as a part of the public debt, and you will find it regularly entered in the monthly debt statement of the Treasury.

In order to correct this error and comply with the "Republican law" of July, 1890, I retransferred this national-bank redemption fund from the liability side of the Daily Treasury Statement to the general-fund balance on the 1st of October, 1915, where it will remain until the law is changed.

It is amazing that the criticism of our Republican opponents should be directed at this action, which, as before stated, is forced upon the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of legislation of the Republican Party. If this is bad financing, bad practice, or bad morals, our Republican critics should blame the Republican Party. They are vulnerable and not we.

Our opponents have also criticized the new form of Daily Treasury Statement because the amounts to the credit of disbursing officers are no longer charged as money actually disbursed, but are included in the general-fund balance, with the express statement, however, that the full amount to the credit of disbursing officers is included in such balance. To illustrate, the net balance in the general fund as shown by the Daily Treasury Statement of March 10, 1916, is given as follows:

Net balance, including $57,346,666.52 to credit of disbursing officers	$116,092,977.98

This statement is the literal truth, and can not be successfully attacked or criticized.

To understand this matter clearly it should be borne in mind that the Treasurer of the United States is, from time to time, authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury to credit disbursing officers of the Government with certain amounts against which such disbursing officers are permitted to draw checks upon the Treasurer. The actual moneys to cover these credits are in the Treasury, and are not withdrawn from the Treasury sometimes for many months and sometimes for many years.

Under the law the Secretary of the Treasury controls the funds of the Government and the Treasurer of the United States is the banker for the Secretary. The new form of Treasury statement accurately reflects the condition of the Secretary's account, as disclosed by the books of his banker, the Treasurer. The old statement was made partly from the viewpoint of the Treasurer of the United States as the banker of the Government and partly from the viewpoint of the Secretary of the Treasury as a depositor for the Government. This led to endless confusion in the public mind.

During the term of Secretary MacVeagh, disbursing officers of the Government deposited their balances in designated national banks or in subtreasuries. One month before Secretary MacVeagh retired—viz, February, 1913—this practice was discontinued by him, and all balances to the credit of disbursing officers in the United States were transferred from the national banks and the subtreasuries to the books of the Treasurer of the United States at Washington, where they appear merely as book accounts. Checks of these disbursing officers are now drawn on the Treasurer of the United States instead of, as formerly, on different national-bank depositaries or Assistant Treasurers of the United States. The status of these accounts is, therefore, materially changed. Money is no longer transferred from the Treasury for the credit of these disbursing officers, but the money remains in the custody of the Treasurer of the United States, disbursing officers being given merely a book credit for certain amounts against which they are authorized to draw. Under this new system every cent of this money is in the custody of the Treasurer until the checks of disbursing officers are paid by him.

The amounts carried to the credit of disbursing officers on the books of the Treasurer do not represent an equivalent amount of obligations which disbursing officers are required to pay. They represent that part of the appropriations previously made by Congress which the heads of the different departments think it desirable that their disbursing officers should have credited to them as checking accounts for the purpose of paying obligations, and are simply the maximum amount which disbursing officers are authorized to draw on the Treasury to pay bills of the Government.

The laws of the United States requires that no money shall be paid out of the Treasury except on warrants signed by the Secretary of the Treasury and countersigned by the Comptroller of the Treasury. It is physically impossible, and would greatly delay the Government's business even if possible, for the Secretary's office to attempt to issue warrants for every disbursement, and, in order to facilitate the payment of the Government's bills, the Secretary, by a warrant, gives a credit to disbursing officers. This is purely a bookkeeping arrangement and is necessary because of the vastness of the Government's business.

Disbursing officers' funds in the hands of the Treasurer of the United States are as much a part of the funds of the Government as is the balance remaining in the Treasurer's hands subject to the check of the Secretary of the Treasury. As the net balance should represent the funds in the Treasury available for paying the current obligations of the Government, the amount placed on the books to the credit of disbursing officers should be included therein.

Furthermore, there can be no just ground for criticism because of the inclusion of these credits in the general-fund balance, as their exact amount is clearly stated in every daily statement issued by the Treasury Department.

There are, of course, at all times checks issued by these disbursing officers which have not been paid, but these are a small proportion of the total amount placed to their credit. It is impossible to state the amount of these outstanding checks daily, but once a month, in "The Financial Statement of the United States Government," formerly known as "The Public-Debt Statement," these outstanding checks, together with all other outstanding current obligations against the general-fund balance, are specifically set forth, and the balance, with these deductions, accurately stated.

Our opponents argue from false premises when they try to draw conclusions that disbursing officers' balances are mortgaged by appropriations. From that standpoint it would be proper to say that all the funds of the Government, and much more, are always mortgaged by appropriations; and if that be true, then there has never been a balance in the general fund of the Treasury. The purpose of the balance is to pay current obligations; it is not intended to cover all the money which Congress has appropriated at any one time.

Some of our opponents have criticized the Treasury statement on the floor of the House because there is included in the general-fund balance, or among the assets of the Treasury, "subsidiary silver and other minor coin." I am at a loss to understand the basis of such captious and foolish criticism. Every Republican and every Democratic Secretary of the Treasury has included subsidiary silver coin and minor coin, as well as silver bullion and fractional currency, as a part of the general-fund balance in the Treasury ever since the Daily Treasury Statement has been issued. How could the Secretary do otherwise if he is to make a true statement of the condition of the Treasury? Subsidiary silver coin and minor coin are just as essential to our fiscal operations as large denominations of money, and are, of course, an actual asset of the Treasury. Suppose, for instance, that you should be asked how much money you have in your pocket; that you have $25, of which $5 consists of silver coin of the denominations of 50, 25, and 10 cent pieces and nickels and the remainder currency. Would it be true to say that you have only $20 in your pocket because that much is in currency, and that the subsidiary silver coin is of no value, and therefore should not be counted? Suppose a bank excluded from its assets its subsidiary silver coin and minor coin—counted it as nothing. Would the bank make a true statement of its assets? Every bank in the United States and every individual with common sense counts as a part of his assets and his money subsidiary silver coin such as 50, 25, and 10 cent pieces and nickels, if they possess them, and they use such subsidiary silver coin in the payment of debts as well as for the purpose of making necessary exchanges. The inclusion of subsidiary silver coin in the Treasury statement as a part of the general-fund balance in the Treasury is, of course, necessary if its true condition is to be reflected.

Permit me to add one more observation. Our opponents are constantly harping on the daily net balance in the general fund of the Treasury, comparing it with the condition of the Treasury under the Payne-Aldrich Act and magnifying the alleged deficit in the Treasury by basing their conclusions wholly upon the excess of daily or monthly disbursements over daily or monthly receipts. This is an utterly fallacious line of reasoning, because the daily and monthly receipts of the Treasury as published since the passage of the Underwood-Simmons Tariff Act do not include the amount which the Government is accumulating daily in the form of corporation and personal-income taxes, which taxes, as you know, are paid but once a year, namely, in June of each year. As these taxes have in the past produced approximately $7,000,000 per month, the true condition of the Treasury of the United States to-day should include the amount of these taxes earned to date but not payable until June next. For example, for the eight months which have elapsed from July 1, 1915, to March 1, 1916, corporation and personal-income taxes have accrued in favor of the Government amounting to approximately $56,000,000. The Treasury statement could very properly show that these taxes have been earned up to date and that they are a tangible Treasury asset, although not payable into the Treasury until June, 1916. If this were done, the apparent excess of monthly expenditures over monthly receipts would largely disappear. The situation is exactly analogous to that of a man who owns bonds upon which the interest is payable semiannually, say, on January 1 and July 1 of each year. Between the interest periods interest is accruing on his bonds, and he is entitled to consider the amount of such interest as a part of his available assets, although he does not receive the payment until the following interest period. I mention this merely for the purpose of directing your attention to a popular fallacy in which many people indulge, consciously or otherwise, when they discuss the condition of the United States Treasury upon the basis of the Daily Treasury Statement. As an actual fact, therefore, the Treasury is to-day approximately $56,000,000 better off in the way of assets than the daily statement shows, because this represents approximately the amount of accrued corporation and personal-income taxes which have been earned by the Government during the present fiscal year, but are not payable into the Treasury until June, 1916.

In conclusion permit me to say that when Secretary MacVeagh turned the Treasury Department over to me as his successor, there was included in the general-fund balance and as a part of the assets of the Treasury on March 5, 1913, the sum of $22,671,628.50, which represented the total amount deposited in the Treasury on that date by national banks as a redemption fund for the retirement of their circulation.

Faithfully, yours, W. G. McADOO.

Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

EXHIBIT A.

The bill placing the national bank retirement fund in the balance of the general fund of the Treasury and making it a part of the public debt was introduced by Senator Sherman, who had been Secretary of the Treasury, as an amendment to Senate bill No. 2350, authorizing the issue of Treasury notes on deposits of silver bullion. (P. 4237, pt. 5, vol. 21, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 7, 1890.) It was introduced as section 6, and read as follows:

"That all laws and parts of laws requiring the lawful money deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, as provided by section 5222 of the Revised Statutes, to be held as a special fund for the redemption of notes of national banking associations, are hereby repealed; and all the money now deposited or which may be hereafter deposited under said section shall be covered into the Treasury; and all sums now deposited, or which may hereafter be deposited, with the Treasurer of the United States, as authorized by section 4 of an act entitled 'An act fixing the amount of United States notes, providing for a redistribution of the national bank currency, and for other purposes,' approved June 20, 1874, shall be covered into the Treasury."

In favor of this amendment, Mr. Sherman said:

"Mr. President, under the existing law, as Senators no doubt are all aware, when a national bank chooses to retire its circulation it may deposit an equivalent amount of lawful money, or United States notes, in the Treasury of the United States, and by the existing law those United States notes or other lawful money must be held in the Treasury to redeem the outstanding bank circulation as it comes in. It so happens, on account of recent events which I need not recall, that the national banks are rapidly retiring their circulation, and the result has been that at one time there was over $100,000,000 lying idle in the Treasury to await redemption of national bank notes which were not presented in due course in one, two, three, or four years, and at the present time there are about sixty-five or seventy million dollars lying in the Treasury held to redeem outstanding bank notes which do not come in, thus to that extent contracting the currency of the country unduly and with great injury. The section I propose as an amendment simply proposes to allow the money thus deposited for the redemption of national bank notes to be paid out, and the Treasury will as these bank notes come in pay them out of the funds in the Treasury composed of this money and other money in the Treasury. In other words, the effect will be to unlock about sixty-five or seventy million dollars of circulation. I suppose there can be no objection to the amendment.

"Mr. COCKRELL. It simply authorizes that to be paid out of the Treasury?

"Mr. SHERMAN. Yes."

On page 4755, same volume, on May 16, 1890, Senator Sherman said, in opposing an amendment offered by Senator Plumb, of Kansas, to his amendment:

"I do not think it wise to adopt such a proposition as this. It has no relation to the subject matter of the very fund to which mainly it relates. By it we cover into the Treasury $60,000,000 which must have behind it a reserve of not less than 10 to 20 per cent to pay the outstanding bank notes when they come in for redemption, and it would be necessary for the Treasury to have for this fund alone at least six to ten millions of dollars, because these bank notes are coming in in the ordinary course of business and must be redeemed. Practically they are now United States notes assumed by the Government of the United States.

"The Government having been paid for these notes by the national banks, the Government assumes the payment of these $60,000,000 of obligations; and while it may not be necessary to keep the whole $60,000,000 on hand, my proposition would cover the fund into the Treasury and make it subject to the payment of debts or any other lawful purpose, or appropriations by Congress. Even to maintain this fund and be prepared to redeem these notes as they come in, we must retain in the Treasury, say, from six to twelve millions of dollars, not less than 20 per cent. No bank would be allowed to exist or conduct business under any law of any State or of the United States that did not have a reserve of at least from 10 to 20 per cent to meet its current liabilities to depositors and the like.

"I hope, therefore, the Senate will not agree to this amendment of the Senator from Kansas, as it will practically destroy all the virtues of this bill, and because it would cripple the operations of the Treasury and prevent it from buying bullion, although that is provided for by the issue of Treasury notes; but it would prevent them from buying the silver bullion under the old law according to which the bullion is bought by money in the Treasury.

"Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether his amendment will operate upon any except the 'fund for redemption of the notes of national banks failed, in liquidation, and reducing circulation,' as given in the 'statement of the assets and liabilities of the Treasury of the United States'?

"Mr. SHERMAN. The last clause excepts from the operation of that section the fund belonging to national banks for the redemption of their notes, the 5 per cent fund. This fund is the fund that has been so much talked of—United States notes deposited for the redemption of outstanding bank notes."

On page 4561, same volume, May 12, 1890, Senator Sherman said:

"In respect to my amendment I will ask a little delay. I hope there will be no vote taken upon that amendment now, because I have submitted the amendment to the Treasury Department, and in order to get some information from the department in regard to that amendment I ask that it remain pending without action at present. By to-morrow I shall be able probably to furnish a draft that will not be objectionable to anyone."

On page 4759 of the same volume, May 16, 1890, Senator Sherman says:

"Here is a reserve fund for the redemption of national-bank notes under the acts of 1875 and 1872 and a fund for the redemption of notes of national banks in liquidating and reducing circulation. That act expressly requires that all United States notes which are deposited in the Treasury for redemption of bank notes in circulation shall be kept in the Treasury and applied only for that purpose; and here is $65,000,000 of this money in the Secretary's hands. It is separate and apart for the payment of outstanding bank notes in circulation coming in every day. To relieve that necessity, and in order to enable the Secretary to use the greater part of this money, retaining only a sufficient balance which, according to experience, has been shown to be necessary for the redemption as presented of the outstanding bank notes, my amendment is offered to cover into the Treasury this sum of $65,000,000 and paying the notes as presented. Then the Secretary would keep only about $10,000,000 on hand for the redemption of these notes, and he could apply the balance to the reduction of the public debt or other public purposes.

"Then, there are other items, called 'disbursing officers' balance,' etc., amounting to $43,248,189.39.

* * * * * * *

"Now, take these items out and the $248,000,000 are dissipated into thin air; all that is left is the item of $35,930,622.91. That amount the Secretary has of actual surplus on hand, no more and no less. Is it not necessary to maintain some such fund? What motive could a Secretary of the Treasury have to keep money in the Treasury? He does not handle a dollar of it. He could not get it by any possibility. It is in the hands of other officers. He is the mere directing head who regulates the various duties prescribed by law."

The law was finally passed by a Republican Congress and approved July 14, 1890, by Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, as section 6 of an act directing the purchase of silver bullion and the issue of Treasury notes thereon, and for other purposes, page 289, volume 26, Statutes at Large, and reads as follows:

"That upon the passage of this act the balances standing with the Treasurer of the United States to the respective credits of national banks for deposits made to redeem the circulating notes of such banks and all deposits thereafter received for like purpose shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt, and the Treasurer of the United States shall redeem from the general cash in the Treasury the circulating notes of said banks which may come into his possession subject to redemption; and upon the certificate of the Comptroller of the Currency that such notes have been received by him, and that they have been destroyed, and that no new notes will be issued in their place, reimbursement of their amount shall be made to the Treasurer under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, from an appropriation hereby created, to be known as National-bank notes: Redemption account, but the provisions of this act shall not apply to the deposits received under section 3 of the act of June 20, 1874, requiring every national bank to keep in lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to 5 per cent of its circulation, to be held and used for the redemption of its circulating notes; and the balance remaining of the deposits so covered shall at the close of each month be reported on the monthly public-debt statement as debt of the United States, bearing no interest."

Later and on July 29, 1890, page 7851, volume 21, part 8, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senator Gorman, of Maryland, said:

"The Senator says this bill was discussed in 1888. Oh, no, Mr. President; this bill was never discussed in 1888. You then discussed an entirely different bill in charge of my friend from Iowa [Mr. Allison]. There were no increases in that bill of 150 per cent. He was too astute to go before the country with such an enormous increase. You did have a bill increasing to the same extent duties over the then existing law. You had only enough to excite the people who were engaged in manufacturers; but you had the other thing, more potent than the bait you held out for increased profits. You had, unfortunately for the country, the opportunity to excite the passions of the war, induce the Northern people to fight the battles of the period of 1861 to 1865 over again, because in the disposition of affairs it so turned out that southern men were at the head of another committee who framed a particular bill, and it was an easy matter, as I feared, to excite that feeling and win the contest. In doing it you and your party laid yourselves under obligations to men who are now dictating every rate in this bill. It gave you an opportunity to bring your shattered party back into line. You succeeded in the contest; and I say now that there is not courage enough in your party to resist the demands of the men who made your success possible.

"Pass the bill! Why, Mr. President, you are compelled to pass the bill. The ground is shaking under your feet as it is. The men who control your organization and the States north and west of this Capitol will tell you, as they do to-day, with your promises made a year and a half ago, impending now a year and more since you have had possession of every branch of the Government, if you keep their business suspended, if this uncertainty in all branches of trade goes on, business reverses must come, business reverses will come.

"I know that you have attempted to stay this state of affairs. Your extravagance in appropriations has taken all the money that is in the Treasury. Nobody saw it better than the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman], when, in the passage of the silver bill, he inserted a little clause enabling you to use the money that has been heretofore kept sacred for the redemption of the bank notes of banks going out of existence and employ it to tide over the time of difficulty. Nobody knows better than the Senator from Ohio that that was not sufficient, although in private life it would have been considered a rape of the Treasury and bad faith.

"But, more than that, you have been compelled or will be compelled to take the money, $49,000,000, that goes into the sinking fund to pay off the national debt. That has been held sacred by the Republican party up to this time, and when the Democrats heretofore have suggested that possibly the interests of the country would warrant the use of that money so as to reduce taxation you have resented it. But your extravagant legislation, your unwisdom in the handling of Government affairs, has made it necessary for you to do it or else to at once increase your taxation."

He was followed by Senator McPherson, who, on page 7852, said:

"Another thing I wish to speak of the Senator from Maryland has touched upon. He spoke of the money that has been deposited as a trust fund for the redemption of the national-bank notes, for surely it was a trust fund and nothing else. It was deposited there to redeem the national-bank notes. Some $55,000,000 of it has been transferred to the Treasury. Unfortunately I agreed to it myself at the time it was in the committee and the Senate, simply for the very reason that that fund had never been treated as a reserve trust fund. It had always been in the Treasury, and I suspect it had always been drawn upon just the same as any other money in the Treasury, and I therefore voted to make its use legal.

"I thought what had been the practice for years we might just as well legalize, and not compel the Secretary of the Treasury to be performing an illegal action if the money was needed, and therefore I voted to place it in the Treasury. In this way I have assisted very materially in keeping this Republican party out of bankruptcy, which now seems to be impending."

He was followed by Senator Sherman, who said:

"The proposition made by me was to enable him to use that money, not for the relief of the Treasury, but for the relief of the people, because the money was tied up, out of circulation, and held dead, stagnant, until the people in due time presented the bank notes for redemption. That fund has been kept intact; and if the Senator can show me that in any case the fund has not been kept good, unimpaired, undiminished, undrawn upon, I will then agree with him that the man who did it ought to be very severely censured, and very severely punished, too.

"Mr. MCPHERSON. So far as I can tell from the Treasury balances, it has never been treated at any time whatever as a trust fund. It has appeared in the General Treasury account; and while the amount has not been drawn down below the precise point when these balances were reported, below the point that would cover the amount of money necessary to redeem the national-bank notes, at the same time it has been used and appeared there as a part of the current balance. * * * Now, I want to say simply this: This $55,000,000, or whatever it has amounted to, from $50,000,000 upward, has not been used as a trust fund exclusively and taken from the General Treasury account and put into an account by itself and reserved as a trust fund to redeem these notes. It has been taken, however, away from its trusteeship, and it has become now a current account in the Treasury to be used for any purpose, and we have simply the obligation of the Government to redeem these notes when they come in.

"Mr. SHERMAN. There is another point in regard to the $55,000,000. The people of the United States, in various forms, requested us to pay it out, and our greenback friends and all the men who wanted more money were very anxious to have that made available for the benefit of the Government. It was an objectionable provision, an objectionable practice, imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury by law, to hold this very large fund in the Treasury unbroken, unused, unavailable for any purpose. Therefore, by unanimous consent, both Houses of Congress—not only the Senator from New Jersey, but both Houses of Congress, by unanimous consent—agreed to that proposition, and the money is now available for the payment of the public debt.

"The Secretary of the Treasury has already given notice that he will pay the public debt and use this money for that purpose. So the money will be out in circulation among the people, and to the extent that it saves interest by the purchase of bonds so much is gained by the account. No proposition submitted in Congress was ever more cordially approved by both Houses than that; and it is now working its good effects, and will, no doubt, as soon as it is paid out in due form in the ordinary way in the purchase of bonds, tend to revive business and to add to the currency of the country.

"Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I take my full share of responsibility for the transferring of $55,000,000, which I ought to have had sense enough to have compelled to be held in the Treasury as a trust fund to redeem national-bank notes. I concede all that; but inasmuch as I had been informed by an ex-Secretary of the Treasury that it never had been treated as a reserve trust fund in the world, that it had been always carried in the Treasury balances. I thought perhaps it was as well to legalize all that has been done for years and to leave it in that condition. Therefore I voted for it. I did not know at that time, perhaps, that the needs of this Government under Republican administration were to be quite so great as they are or I might have hesitated."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask unanimous consent to vacate the order of Saturday to recess at 5.30 p. m. to 8 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of going at once into the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. MANN. Of course, the pension bills will not be in order to-day, but the gentleman wants to ask unanimous consent that the order of business for 8 o'clock to-night may proceed now and the order to take a recess vacated?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; for the purpose of considering pension bills to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that the special order heretofore made to take a recess at 5.30 o'clock p. m. until 8 o'clock p. m. be rescinded and that the pension bills that would have been in order to-night under that order be now in order.

Mr. MANN. With the same order of business.

The SPEAKER. The same order of business. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DYER. To make a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address delivered by the Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, at St. Joseph, Mo., on March 15.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by ex-Secretary of the Treasury Leslie M. Shaw, at St. Joseph, Mo., on the 15th day of March.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it about?

Mr. MANN. No one asked that question as to the present Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, one is an official of the Government and the other is an ex-official of the Government.

Mr. MANN. An official of the Government, and is in South America.

Mr. DYER. It is an address at the Lincoln Club banquet.

Mr. GALLAGHER. The address of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS] was a patriotic address, too.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to know what it is about, if it is to go in the RECORD. Has the gentleman read the address?

Mr. DYER. I have read part of it; yes, sir.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is it about?

Mr. DYER. It has reference to the state of the Union, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object. He can not contribute anything to the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objects.

Mr. MANN. I shall object to any other unanimous-consent requests until we shall have disposed of the pension business.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Alonzo Knox, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, on page 24, line 1, I move to amend by striking out "$50" and inserting "$72."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, line 1, strike out "$50" and insert "$72."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to be heard a moment.

On page 53 of the report there is a statement of this man's condition which I will read, and then I want to read a statement from the physician who examined him. From the report of the committee I read:

H. R. 11140. Alonzo Knox, aged 78 years, late a private in Company F, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Infantry, from July 25, 1861, to August 23, 1865 (length of service, 4 years 28 days), is now pensioned under certificate No. 409103 at the rate of $30 per month by special act of Congress, approved May 25, 1908. The claimant was formerly pensioned under the general law at the rate of $14 per month for chronic diarrhea and piles.

Medical testimony has been filed, indicating that claimant is in a helpless condition and unable to perform any character of labor or to care for himself. He requires almost constant attendance of others by reason of general articular rheumatism, organic disease of heart, relaxed sphincter muscles, due to hemorrhoids, and enlarged prostate. This is supplemented by other testimony, indicating that he is without means or property and has no income except his pension, which it is recommended be increased to $50 per month.

That is supplemented by other testimony, showing that the man is without property and absolutely helpless.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to read also an affidavit from this man's physician, whom I know very well, Dr. George M. Davis, of the city where this man lives. And I want to call particular attention to this fact, that Alonzo Knox enlisted July 25, 1861, and served until August 23, 1865, or 4 years and 28 days. He was pensioned under the general law at the rate of $14 per month for chronic diarrhea and piles. He was a loyal soldier with a magnificent service and his record was unblemished.

He went into the Union Army almost at the very beginning of the Civil War, and served there until it ended. He was not a camp follower, or a "coffee-cooler," or a deserter, or a substitute.

Now, I want to read the report of the physician who examined him on February 2, 1916. I read:

STATEMENT OF GEORGE M. DAVIS, M. D., IN CLAIM OF ALONZO KNOX, H. R. 11140.

I have this day examined Alonzo Knox, 78 years of age, of Manchester, N. H., late a private in Company F, Fourth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry.

I find rheumatism of both shoulders, both elbows, both hands and wrists, both hips, both knees, and both ankles. Both shoulder joints are limited to one-half normal motion; the right elbow joint is limited to one-third normal motion.

The joints of both hands and all fingers are swollen and distorted to such a degree that he is unable to firmly grasp knife, fork, or spoon.

Both knees are swollen and distorted; the left knee is one-half larger than the right knee; the left knee joint is limited to one-half normal motion.

There is crepitus of all of the above-mentioned joints. The joints of his left foot are swollen and distorted to such a degree that he is unable to wear a leather shoe or boot. There is swelling of both feet and legs below the knee. There is valvular disease of his heart and shortness of breath. He is unable to rest only in a sitting or partially sitting position. His sphincter muscles are relaxed and hemorrhoids are formed. There is enlargement of his prostate gland, causing painful and frequent urination.

The above-mentioned soldier is totally incapacitated from performing manual labor and requires the constant care and service of an attendant to dress, undress, and assist in feeding.

I further declare I have no interest in the prosecution of this claim.

GEORGE M. DAVIS, M. D.

MANCHESTER, N. H., February 2, 1916.

Sworn to and subscribed February 2, 1916, before Moodybell S. Bennett, notary public in and for Hillsborough County, State of New Hampshire.

Now, gentlemen, it was 20 years ago that I first became a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and from that time until now there has been on the statute books a general law, under which, if this man could have traced his disabilities to the service, he would be entitled to $72 a month. With the affidavit that I have here I would not hesitate for a moment to go before a jury in any civilized country and submit the facts as to whether or not all of the disabilities from which he is suffering to-day are not the direct result of the years of ravages of chronic diarrhea and piles which he contracted in the Army, and which have undermined his system and his health and brought about the distressing and awful conditions existing to-day.

This man must have two nurses. He can not stand on his feet. He can not lie down, but can only rest in a sitting or partially sitting position, and is absolutely helpless. He can not put his hands to his mouth and has to be fed like a child. There is not a joint in his limbs that is not distorted. He can not hold a knife or fork or spoon. He can not stand or lie in a natural position by reason of valvular disease of the heart. He has no control over the movement of his bowels or urinary organs, and requires the constant aid and attention of some one night and day to dress, feed, and keep him in a sanitary condition.

I submit to the Members of this Sixty-fourth Congress the question whether this old hero, who went into the Union Army almost at the outbreak of hostilities, and went through that entire Rebellion in a fighting regiment, and that was filled up time and time again with recruits, should be given $72 a month, as asked for, to bring him some cheer in his few remaining days, or will you deny this old soldier, with his glorious record, a few of the necessities and comforts of life?

Mr. Chairman, most of the men who served under that flag have crossed the threshold to their final rest. The others have but a short time to remain. I believe it is the duty of this Government to see that they are cared for as the wards of this Nation, and I submit this matter to you, simply saying that at the very last pension day when we passed pension bills we gave the sum of $72 a month to a Kentucky soldier, and his condition was no worse than that of this man. It could not be any worse and the man still live. Will you follow that precedent, or will you reject the amendment? [Applause.]

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to oppose an amendment offered by a friend and colleague upon this committee, and especially an amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SULLOWAY], for whom I have the very highest personal regard; but I feel that it is my duty as a member of the committee to oppose this amendment, and the reason why I feel so, is because we have a rule providing that we shall not in any case of a private, allow more than $50 per month. I think I may state correctly that there has not been a single bill passed by Congress giving more than $50 per month to a private within the last four years.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Is it not a fact that in the very last pension session we had here we gave $72 to a Kentucky soldier?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. It passed the House, but it has not passed Congress, and probably never will. The Senate as I understand has a rule the same as ours. It is a joint rule, providing that we will not pass a bill carrying over $50 a month for a private and my information is that the Senate committee has already reduced that amount to $50.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I will yield to my friend for a question.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Has not the Senate been more liberal than the House under the same rules?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. It was years ago, but now I think not.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Have you not had conferences on 70 amendments, and is it not a fact that the House yielded in 55 cases and the Senate yielded in 15?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. They were formal amendments, such as correcting service, correcting names, and so forth.

Mr. SULLOWAY. And increasing pensions also.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The great majority of the amendments made by the Senate in which we concurred were formal amendments. I am positive that the Senate has not passed a bill giving over $50 per month in the last three years.

Mr. GALLAGHER. I should like to know why we can not pass this bill and send it over to the Senate, the same as we did in the other case?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Well, we can; but if you ever raise the limit to $72, there are thousands of others equally as meritorious that will insist upon the same treatment. I am a friend to the old soldier, but we should treat them all fairly and alike.

Mr. GALLAGHER. But there are exceptions to all rules.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I have many soldiers in my district who are blind, who are bedridden, and who need two nurses, but I have never asked for more than $50, because it is a fixed rule of the House and the Senate that $50 is all we will allow. Now, if a soldier was injured in the service, and is entitled by law to more than $50 per month he can get it in the Pension Bureau, and does not need to come to Congress for a special bill.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Does the gentleman mean that he can get it in the Pension Bureau?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. If he was injured in the service, and is in such condition as you state—and I have no doubt about that, as I know my friend states the facts as they are—he can get more than $50 in the Pension Bureau. He does not need to come here.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The gentleman knows very well why he needs to come here. It is because originally he did not prove up all the disabilities that he now has. In other words, the very disabilities for which he was pensioned at $14 a month have developed into his present condition beyond all question. He could get in under the general law if it was not for that; and the gentleman knows that for years we have been giving $72 a month to men who came here because they did not prove up originally.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. No; I do not know that.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Well, I know it. The gentleman says you have not been paying it for the last three years.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. About three years ago we stopped paying over $50 for any private. Since that time we have had a rule fixing that as the limit, and we think it ought to be a binding rule, against more than $50 in any case, unless you are willing to raise the limit and treat all alike. To allow more than $50 in this case would be unfair to thousands of old soldiers throughout the country who are in the same condition and just as deserving.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. There seems to be some mistake about the age of this gentleman, if I understood the statement correctly. I undersood the gentleman from New Hampshire to say that he was 78 years old.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Yes; 78 years old.

Mr. SIMS. But the gentleman stated that he went into the Army when he was 17 years old. If he went in in 1861 at the age of 17, he would not be 72 years of age.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Then there is some mistake, he was older when he went into the Army, for he is now 78 years of age.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RUSSELL) there were 37 ayes and 38 noes.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I demand tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire demands tellers. Those in favor of tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirty gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Andrew Kinkade, late of Company D, Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out lines 24 and 25, on page 26, and lines 1 and 2, on page 27. This party is dead.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 24 and 25, page 26, and lines 1 and 2 on page 27.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill S. 3984, "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors," and I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 28, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee because great thoughts arise in our minds which we trace back to the great Spirit above us. Holy inspirations take possession of our spirit which find alone their source in God. Thou dost minister to us the comforts of life through the forces of nature about us. Thou hast given to us the blessings of freedom, and Thou dost minister to us these blessings through the forces of righteous living. Thou dost give to us the passion of eternity. Thou dost impart it by the gift of Thyself to men.

Grant us this day to live in the higher altitudes of life, ever keeping in mind that Thou art with us; that Thou hast a purpose in our lives; that Thou hast a mission in our Government; that Thou hast a use for the people of this great land. May they be consecrated to Thy service. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SIMMONS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CATRON. I present a letter from Ella Clapp Thompson, southern field secretary of the Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage, inclosing resolutions adopted at a mass meeting held in the capitol at Santa Fe, N. Mex., favoring the enfranchisement of the women of the Nation. I ask that the letter and accompanying resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESSIONAL UNION FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE,
PALACE OF THE GOVERNORS,
Santa Fe, N. Mex., February 29, 1916.

Senator T. B. CATRON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CATRON: I am directed by our newly elected State chairman, Mrs. Joshua Raynolds, of Albuquerque, to inclose a copy of a resolution passed unanimously at a meeting held by the Congressional Union last night in the State Capitol, and to request you to have the resolution read into the RECORD of the Senate.

With all good wishes,
Most sincerely, yours,
ELLA CLAPP THOMPSON,
Southern Field Secretary.

Resolved, That this mass meeting, assembled in the Hall of Representatives of the Capitol of New Mexico for the purpose of discussing the national suffrage amendment now pending in Congress, calls upon the Congress of the United States to pass immediately the resolution proposing to enfranchise the women of the Nation. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators and Representative from New Mexico, urging them to do all in their power to secure this action from Congress at this session.

Mr. CATRON. I present a statement from the District of Columbia Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage. I ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ASSOCIATION OPPOSED TO WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

We desire to present some facts as to the pernicious effects of woman suffrage in the States where it now exists. There have been many theories on this subject presented by the suffragists. It is our purpose to present facts and figures showing that woman suffrage, where it has been tried, not only does not better conditions but actually tends to have the reverse effect from a practical standpoint. Senator THOMAS, of Colorado, has said that he concedes that woman suffrage has not and maintains that it will not change conditions. We agree with the distinguished Senator up to a certain point, but we believe that we can show positively that woman suffrage will in many instances change conditions for the worse. We will first present some figures which will prove conclusively that women do not vote as generally as men where the franchise is given them.

FAILURE OF WOMEN TO VOTE WHEN GIVEN THE BALLOT.

In the six suffrage States of California, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, and Washington—Oregon, Arizona, and Kansas did not adopt woman suffrage till November 5, 1912—the abstract of United States Census of 1910, pages 110 and 118, shows there were in April, 1910, 3,170,153 men and women 21 years of age and over, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese. The total vote actually cast for President November 5, 1912, in the six woman-suffrage States was 1,521,590, so 47.9 per cent of the men and women over 21 years of age, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese, actually voted.

In the six adjoining and neighboring States of Kansas, Nebraska, Oregon, Nevada, South Dakota, and Missouri, where men alone voted, the total number of men 21 years of age and over, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese, was (in April, 1910, Abstract of Census, p. 110) 2,295,119; total vote in the six male-suffrage States for President November 5, 1912, 1,587,984; 69.1 per cent of the men over 21 years of age, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese, actually voted, or about 22 per cent more of the possible voters in the male-suffrage States voted than did the possible voters of the six adjoining woman-suffrage States. If 69.1 per cent of the men voted in the woman-suffrage States, as men in the adjoining male-suffrage States did vote, then an analysis of the figures show that only 19.1 per cent of the women over 21 years of age in the six woman-suffrage States actually voted. If more than 19.1 per cent of women did vote in the six woman-suffrage States, then less than 69.1 per cent of the men voted, so it is impossible to escape one or the other conclusion—that the women do not vote as generally as men when given the ballot, or if they do their voting does cause less interest to be taken in politics by men, and in either event the suffrage cause is harmful to the Republic.

According to advice from Secretary of State Jordan's office at Sacramento, Cal., where the names and addresses of all registered voters are sent in order that sample ballots can be mailed them according to law, 804,633 men and 180,000 women registered in California to vote at election November 5, 1912. (See Los Angeles Times, Oct. 27, 1912.)

This shows that about 93 per cent of men in California registered and only about 27 per cent of the women. The total vote for President November 5, 1912, and all the candidates in California, was 673,527; total registration, 984,633; 68.4 per cent of men and women who registered voted. If 68.4 per cent of the registered women actually voted, which is not likely, as women do not register as generally as men—it is not to be supposed that they vote as generally—then only 18.3 per cent of women over 21 years of age in April, 1910, voted November 5, 1912, in the State of California.

In San Francisco in the latter part of 1912 at a local-option election out of 120,859 women over 21 years of age in the city 40,655 women and 89,023 men registered, yet only 15,087 votes all told were cast for local option, and it is estimated that approximately one woman in eight who was interested enough to register took the trouble to go to the polls.

At a city election in San Francisco November 11, 1913, 49,833 women registered and 19,678 voted, about one-quarter of the votes in this election being cast by women. In three precincts no women voted; in 49 out of 675 precincts there was an average of less than 10 votes per precinct by women. (Analysis of votes by Registrar of Elections Zemanski. (See Los Angeles Times, Nov. 20, 1913.) Census of 1910 shows there were 120,859 women over 21 years of age in San Francisco, so only 16.2 per cent voted in election of November 11, 1913.

At an election March 24, 1913, in Los Angeles, Cal., involving radical changes in the city charter, only 31,000 voters, men and women, out of 222,817 cast their ballots, this, too, after a citizens' committee of 1,000 advocated in all the newspapers the adoption of certain propositions and the defeat of others. Nine out of 10 of the reform measures were defeated. The Los Angeles Times of March 26, 1913, says:

"The vote of the women was disappointing. In some precincts it was a negligible quantity, while in others it was only about one-third of the total, yet suffragists carried on an active campaign, attended and spoke at all day meetings, and even worked at their headquarters on Easter Sunday."

At an election June 3, 1913, in Los Angeles, for mayor, Rose was elected by 8,037 majority over Shenk. Los Angeles had "good government" officials for several years before women had the ballot. Rose ran on an "open-town" platform and Shenk on "good government." Every newspaper and practically every minister in the city was for Shenk, and asked the voters to elect Shenk and have a clean city in the interests of the young men and women of Los Angeles.

The Los Angeles Times of June 5, 1913, gives the total vote as 84,055, nearly 100,000 under registration. The Times further says that in spite of the excellent organization of Mrs. John S. Myers and her corps of assistants the women did not turn out in any large numbers, and of those who did a considerable percentage appeared to favor the election of Rose. As there were 222,877 men and women over 21 years of age in Los Angeles (census of 1910), only 32.2 per cent of the men and women of voting age voted. The Los Angeles Express, June 4, 1913, had an editorial on the disgrace of electing Rose:

(From the Los Angeles Times, Oct. 27, 1915.)

"Two women voted yesterday at the city hall out of 71 registered. This is an average of less than 3 in 100, with ideal conditions for exercising the suffrage. None need to walk more than two blocks on perfect sidewalks and pavements in entrancing weather."

When we realize that this election was on important State constitutional amendments it proves that the women in California are not so eager to vote as the agitators in the East would have the people believe.

At an election in Chicago April 7, 1914, with the strenuous efforts of the suffragists to get out the female vote, only 158,686 women voted. Chicago had in 1910 626,629 women over 21 years of age. (Letter from Director of Census Feb. 28, 1914.) About 25 per cent of the women of Chicago over 21 years of age voted. More than double that number of men did vote at the same election.

Most of the women who do vote in the woman-suffrage States do so in self-defense, or at the earnest appeal of the male members of their families, and not because they want the ballot, for if such women did not vote they would lose their own and their husband's political status, with which they were satisfied under male suffrage, and must either vote or live under the laws to which they are opposed and made by noisy, ranting suffragists. For this reason it is unjust to place the burden on a majority of women in order that a few aggressive, forward, notoriety-seeking women can get into politics, some of whom resent the fact that they were created women and not men.

Helen M. Foster, in Los Angeles Times, November 7, 1913, under the head of "Woman lectures woman," commends Senator WORKS for daring to call attention to the neglect of citizenship by women voters, which she says are facts backed up by data and registration lists.

An editorial in the San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle, January 3, 1915, says: "In this and other States the franchise was given without waiting for the request of the majority of the sex, and as the event has shown without the desire of a majority. It is even more than probable that were the question of the withdrawal of the right submitted to a vote in this State, with the women voting, the right would be withdrawn. There are multitudes of women who would register for such an election for the sole purpose of getting rid of a duty they detest and whose obligations they refuse to fulfill."

TAXATION AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The suffragists, who have taken the slogan of our Colonies, "Taxation without representation is tyranny," utterly fail in endeavoring thereby to show a parallel between women without the ballot to-day and the condition of the Colonies in 1775. The men (the British Parliament) who voted the taxes on the colonists paid no part of the taxes they laid, and the more they could extort from the American Colonies the less the Englishmen would have to pay themselves; whereas to-day in the United States the men voting the taxes pay the larger part of the same. In our country only about one-eighth of the women of voting age pay taxes direct or indirect, so if women had the ballot the women who pay the taxes would not be so fairly and justly treated as they are now, for then seven-eighths of the women who would vote would pay no taxes, while with men alone voting more than seven-eighths of the voters are taxpayers, and pay about seven-eighths of all taxes. As men always have and always will produce the greater part of the wealth they will always pay the greater part of all taxes. No injustice is possible where the taxes are laid by the voters who pay the larger part of the amount. Most of the property on which women pay taxes is the fruits of the labor of male members of their families, acquired by gift, will, or placed in the names of women for some other reason.

Suffragists have claimed that if woman suffrage were adopted in the South it would make a white South, giving as their reason that there are more white women of voting age in the Southern States than negro men and women together. (Their statement is erroneous, as Abstract of Census, 1910, pages 110 and 119, shows that there were in the 11 Southern States, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas, 3,708,863 negro men and women and only 3,401,622 white women.) But as there are about one quarter of a million more white men than white women in the South, instead of votes for women making the South whiter politically it would increase the proportion of negro votes. (On pages 110 and 118, Abstract of Census, we find that there were in the 11 Southern States above named 3,650,295 white men of voting age and only 3,401,623 white women.) Two Southern States, Mississippi and South Carolina, have a larger negro than white population, and there are nearly 200 counties in other Southern States where the negroes outnumber the whites, ranging all the way from a majority to three, four, and up to nearly six negroes to one white person, in Lee County, Ga., to over eight to one in East Carroll County, La. Besides, in many more counties the negro and white population is nearly equal. The per cent of negro women of voting age in the United States to total number of women over 21 years of age is 9.9 per cent, while the percentage of negro men to all men over 21 years of age is only 9.1 per cent.

In the 11 States above mentioned the per cent of negro women of voting age to all women over 21 years of age is 35.3 per cent, while the per cent of negro men of voting age to all men over 21 is only 33.6 per cent. Who would doubt that a larger per cent of negro women who were eligible would vote than white women? Who would contend that if the Southern States should ratify or have forced upon them a United States constitutional amendment granting the franchise to women, that the Federal Government would permit the negro race to be discriminated against by State laws in voting?

PROHIBITION AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

So many people are being misled on the liquor question by the suffragists that it is well to submit some facts on the subject. Prior to November 3, 1914, in no State in which women have voted on the question had State-wide prohibition ever been adopted. Ten States where men alone voted had State-wide prohibition. November 5, 1912, Colorado voted on State-wide prohibition; 75,877 votes were cast for the measure and 116,774 against it. (See Abstract of Votes, compiled from official returns by James B. Pearce, secretary of state, Denver, Colo.) If 58 per cent of the women over 21 years of age in Colorado had voted for prohibition, the measure would have become a law by 7,012 majority, without a single male vote being cast for prohibition, there being 213,425 women over 21 years of age in Colorado. (Abstract of Census, 1910, p. 118.)

Wyoming legalized gambling for about 40 years after women had the ballot, and had neither State-wide prohibition nor local-option laws.

About six years prior to the adoption of woman suffrage in California Los Angeles voted on local option, and the measure was defeated by nearly 2 to 1. About a month after women had the ballot in Los Angeles, the question was again voted on, and the saloons won by nearly 3 to 1.

In December, 1912, Los Angeles voted on the question of abolishing free lunches in saloons, but the measure was defeated and lunches are still free in Los Angeles saloons. Missouri and Connecticut have State-wide laws prohibiting free lunches in saloons. Women have had the franchise four and one-half years in Pasadena, Cal., and the sale of liquor has been legalized ever since women were given the ballot. Pasadena has 2,688 more women than men over 21 years of age (census 1910), about 29 per cent.

December 2, 1913, Santa Monica, Cal., voted wet; ballots nearly three to one for liquor, for liquor to be sold on Sundays and nights. Los Angeles Times of December 3, says: "The triumph of 'demon rum' and the sparkling cabaret is attributed to the women, who voted three to one against a Sunday drought." Total vote for the saloons and Sunday liquor 2,173, against 814. Letter under date of December 13, 1913, from Director of United States Census, shows that in 1910 Santa Monica had 2,462 males and 2,748 females over 21 years of age, 286 more women than men, yet we have the sale of liquor legalized in cafes all night and Sundays in a city of homes of less than 8,000—7,846—people, and we doubt that a parallel can be found in any State where the franchise is limited to men.

San Francisco, San Jose, Stockton, Oakland, and some other California towns permit the saloons to carry on their business as openly on Sunday as other days of the week.

Redondo, Cal., voted on local option October 14, 1913; the saloons won. Los Angeles Times, October 15, says: "That both sides claim the result was due to women's votes."

Anaheim, Cal., population 2,628, voted on local option November 6, 1913. The saloons won. (See Los Angeles Times, Nov. 7, 1913.)

San Bernardino, Cal., voted for the saloon January 30, 1914. (See Los Angeles Times, Jan. 31, 1914.) Watts, Cal., voted wet September 8, 1914. (Los Angeles Times, Sept. 9.)

At an election in California, April 13, 1914, out of 13 cities and towns voting on the liquor question, 9 voted "wet" and 4 small towns "dry." Hanford, population 4,829, and Merced, population 3,102, both of which had been dry, returned to the wet column. (See Los Angeles Times, Apr. 14, 1914.) Only 1 small county in California—Lake County—was dry, and only 10 counties out of 62 in Colorado were dry.

In Colorado Springs, Colo., where the sale of liquor was prohibited for many years, when women voted on the question about three years ago liquor selling was legalized. Colorado Springs had 819 more women than men over 21 years of age in 1910 (letter of Director of Census, Feb. 28, 1914).

On pages 208–209 annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, you will find that in the 8 States that had woman suffrage January 1, 1913, Colorado, California, Wyoming, Idaho, Utah, Washington, Arizona, and Oregon, there were 28,108 liquor dealers paying special license to the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914. From page 24, Abstract of Census, 1910, you will see that the 8 suffrage States above mentioned had a population of 6,040,592; 1 liquor dealer for every 211 people for the 8 States. For the remaining 40 States and District of Columbia there were 225,299 liquor dealers paying licenses for the same period. The 40 States and the District of Columbia had a population of 85,931,674, or 1 liquor dealer for every 381 people, or about one-half the number of dealers per capita that the woman suffrage States require, and yet we are told by the suffragists they are not favorable to the liquor interests.

At the local-option elections in Illinois, April 27, 1914, about 1,100 saloons out of 3,000, where elections were held, were abolished; 12 dry counties were added to the 30 already dry, making 42 dry counties of the 102 counties in Illinois.

Kentucky, where men alone vote, had 105 dry counties out of the 120 in the State, and Missouri had 65 no-license counties out of 114 in that State.

Iowa had 77 dry counties out of 99 counties in the State, and in Minnesota, at election April 7, 1914, two-thirds of the counties where local-option elections were held voted dry, and towns that had licensed saloons for 60 years were voted dry by men's votes.

Eight out of twelve counties in Michigan that voted on the liquor question April 6, 1914, voted dry, including Lansing, the capital of the State, by men's votes, while in Springfield, the capital of Illinois, where there are 205 more women than men over 21 years of age, voted to retain the saloons.

Eugene W. Chafin, former candidate on the prohibition ticket for President, said, at Long Beach, Cal., February 15, 1914, "that the support expected by Prohibitionists in California from women had not developed." (See Los Angeles Times, Feb. 16, 1914.)

During the suffrage campaign in Ohio Miss Margaret Foley, in addressing a meeting of labor-union men, said: "Don't be afraid, boys; we are not going to take your beer away from you."

One hundred women working effectually against prohibition amendment, making house-to-house canvass of Los Angeles. (See Los Angeles Times, Oct. 30, 1914.)

In Cleveland many of the suffragists insisted that it was only their enemies who said of them that they would vote against the saloons. In the recent campaign in Chicago, February, 1914, Miss Marion H. Drake, who was nominated for alderman in the first ward, was quoted in the newspapers as standing for "free lunch and saloons."

Mrs. Crystal Eastman Bennedict, a prominent woman suffragist of Wisconsin, made, before the Manufacturers and Dealers' Club of Milwaukee, in addressing the assembled brewers, the statement: "Why all this hue and cry about woman suffrage injuring the brewing industry? Is it not a little foolish?" Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont, in an address, said she would welcome the support of the brewers and praised Mrs. Bennedict for her work among the representatives of that interest.

Mrs. Minnie Reynolds, for the National Suffrage Association, recently challenged anyone to find a word concerning prohibition among the pamphlets issued by the association.

Hugh Fox, secretary of the United Brewers' Association, in a letter printed in the report of the hearing in December, 1913, before the Committee on Rules of the House on the resolution establishing a committee on Woman suffrage, said: "The United Brewers' Association states that the antisuffragists have never received nor asked for contributions from them, although, he adds, "we have had appeals from the other side."

May Wright Sewall said, October 30, 1913, in Milwaukee, "Votes for women will no more prohibit drink than they will prohibit food."

Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout, president of the Illinois Equal Suffrage Association, and one of the leaders in the lobby at Springfield which brought about the enactment of the suffrage bill, said:

"It is a great pleasure to remember that some of the firmest supporters of the suffrage measure in the forty-eighth general assembly were some of the so-called wets."

Suffragists have said that the reason the woman-suffrage States had not adopted prohibition was because there were so many miners in those States and that men outnumbered the women so greatly. The six States that had woman suffrage November 1, 1912—California, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, and Washington—had in December, 1909, 78,565 wage earners engaged in mining industries. (Abstract of Census 1910, p. 561.) Total number of men over 21 years of age in the six States, 1,911,518 (Abstract of Census, 1910, p. 107), or about 1 man of every 24 a miner. West Virginia, a prohibition State, had 78,404 wage earners in the mining industry and had in 1910, 338,349 men over 21 years of age, or about 1 man out of every 4 a miner. Alabama, that voted State-wide prohibition, had about 1 man out of every 16 engaged in mining, and Kansas (Kansas adopted prohibition about 30 years ago) had only a few less per capita engaged in mining than the six woman-suffrage States, and yet West Virginia, with nearly six times the number of men per capita over 21 years of age working in mines, and with Alabama with one-third more per capita, and Kansas with only a few less per capita of miners than woman-suffrage States, all voted State-wide prohibition with men's votes only.

Santa Monica and Pasadena, Cal., and Colorado Springs, Colo., all of which have more women than men over 21 years of age, voted to legalize the sale of liquor, so some other reason than more men than women and miners in woman-suffrage States must be found for those States being "wet" States until some of which voted "dry" in 1914. in November, 1912, Colorado voted "wet" by about 40,000 majority; in November, 1914, it voted "dry" by 11,572. As there were more men over 21 in Colorado, as well as other suffrage States, than women, the men undoubtedly voted the States dry, as the proportion of men to women has changed but little in two years. California, with 137 men to 100 women of voting age, defeated prohibition by 169,345, while Washington, with 158.9 men to 100 women, adopted prohibition by over 18,000 majority, and Oregon, with 152.8 men to 100 women, by 36,480. Taking the vote collectively of the five woman-suffrage States that voted on prohibition in 1914, the majority against prohibition was 99,416; population of the five States, 5,195,682. Taking the vote of the two male-suffrage States that voted on prohibition the same year, Ohio and Virginia—population, 6,828,733—the majority against prohibition was only 53,787; Ohio, which has very large brewing, distilling, wholesale and retail liquor interests, voted against prohibition by only 84,152, and about 40,000 in 1915, while California, whose wine and liquor interests are probably very much less, computed in dollars and cents, voted against prohibition by 169,245, and California has only about half the population of Ohio. So anyone who will make an investigation of female suffrage and the liquor question will find it is not women's votes that bring prohibition, but a general sentiment being worked up against the liquor business.

It is admitted that a prohibition law is the most difficult of all laws to enforce, even when a majority of men in a State vote for it. What chances would there be for the enforcement of such a law if the majority of men were against prohibition and such a law was enacted by women's votes?

Virginia adopted prohibition in 1914 by men's votes. Ohio defeated it the same year. Four woman-suffrage States voted prohibition in 1914, but California, a suffrage State, with nearly as large a population as all four woman-suffrage States combined that adopted prohibition (and had more women, proportionately, than the four suffrage States that abolished the liquor traffic), voted overwhelmingly against prohibition. California also voted that the people of that State should not be permitted to vote on the liquor question for eight years. The liquor dealers certainly have nothing to fear from woman suffrage in California.

It has been charged that the liquor interests defeated woman suffrage in the five States that rejected it on November 3, 1914; yet the only two States that adopted it at the same time were Montana and Nevada, the two "wettest" States in the Union, and the States where there never was any territory voted "dry," while North Dakota, a prohibition State; South Dakota, 68 per cent; Nebraska, 56 per cent; and Ohio, 52 per cent "dry," all defeated woman suffrage in 1914. The cities of Lincoln, Omaha, and Fremont, Nebr., cities with large brewing and liquor interests, collectively gave a majority for woman suffrage, while the country districts of that State (in which are many "dry" counties) gave over 10,000 majority against it.

Recently there was a large parade in Chicago, on Sunday, to protest against closing the saloons on Sunday. It was called the "Chicago Sunday-booze parade." The marshal of the parade is quoted in the Chicago Herald of November 8, 1915, as saying that "not less than 33⅓ per cent of the 100,000 marchers were women."

Many of the dry counties in Ohio and Pennsylvania gave large majorities against woman suffrage; so it is absurd for suffragists to lay their defeat to the liquor dealers.

SCHOOLS AND PLAYGROUNDS.

Suffragists tell us on all occasions that if women had the ballot much better laws for the education and welfare of the child and youth of our country will be enacted. Let us cite a few instances to disprove such a theory:

At Berkeley, Cal., April 12, 1913, for the issuance of bonds for playgrounds, which were defeated, only about 1,500 of the 8,000 women of the city voted. The mayor, who had been a zealous worker for woman suffrage, reprimanded the women for their negligence of this particular issue, which of all others should interest them. In a newspaper article he asks, "Where were the mothers?" Berkeley had 1,301 more women than men over 21 years of age in 1910 (letter of Feb. 28, 1914, Director of Census).

At Pasadena, Cal., where there were 2,688 more women than men of voting age, the playgrounds that were the pride of Pasadena, and were established before women had the ballot, were discontinued in July, 1913, on account of the failure of the voters to vote money for the purchase of the grounds. (Los Angeles Times, July 27, 1913.) No other playgrounds have been purchased for the children.

At an election November 12, 1913, Pasadena, Cal., failed to vote bonds to repair leaky roofs and make sanitary repairs on schoolhouses, to complete new schoolhouses under construction, and to make it possible to provide schools for the entire school year. The superintendent of schools said the school year would have to be cut a month or two, and that some schools would have to close when the rains began. (Los Angeles Times, Nov. 13, 1913.)

It happened to rain November 12 in Pasadena, and some thought the bonds might have carried had the vote been taken on a fair day when the ladies could more conveniently get to the polls, so it was decided to have another election to vote for bonds in a less amount than was voted on November 12. So on January 16, 1914, a fair day, another election was held, and the bonds were again defeated. So the voters of Pasadena decided at two elections that the repair of leaky roofs and sanitary improvements, etc., of schoolhouses, as well as playgrounds are to be indefinitely postponed. A letter dated January 12, 1914, from the Director of the Census states that there were in 1910, 9,262 males and 11,950 females over 21 years of age; the total vote for and against the bonds was 4,832. Only 22.7 per cent of the voters of Pasadena—population, 30,291—was interested enough to go to the polls at the election of January 16.

At an election of September 11, 1914, at Pasadena, to vote bonds for about $12,000 to pay school-teachers the balance of their salaries due for teaching the previous school year, the bonds were defeated. (Los Angeles Times, Sept. 12, 1914.)

The Arizona Republican of May 26, 1915, says (editorially) of the appropriation bill: "But there was one thing done in the name of economy for which the members of neither house of the legislature in years to come will want to claim credit. We think they will incline to disclaim responsibility—that was the reduction of the State school fund from $500,000 to $100,000 a year."

When men alone voted in Arizona they voted five times as much for school purposes as when women had been voting about three years.

Much has been said by suffragists about the recall of the mayor of Seattle, who has since been renominated and reelected, and the abolishing of the Barbary Coast, San Francisco. Mayor Harper was recalled in Los Angeles about four years before women voted, on account of not enforcing laws against vice, and more than 50 cities in the country have abolished segregated vice districts in the past three years. Los Angeles abolished the segregated district about 6 years before women had the ballot, but it took Denver nearly 20 years after women voted to do away with its segregated vice district. An abatement law was passed in the District of Columbia by men, and such a law has been passed or is pending in several male suffrage States.

Denver Post, October 17, 1913, report of Mrs. Stewart Walling and Dr. Elizabeth Cassidy: "Colorado Reformatory rotten. Nothing but filth and graft found at Buena Vista. Merely a preparatory school for the penitentiary. The reformatory, submerged in politics, is a monument to graft, ignorance, stupidity, extravagance, and mismanagement. Building so infested with vermin that only fire could purify it."

The Daily News, of Denver, of October 13, 1913, says the Rev. A. E. Shattuck, of Grand Junction, has stirred up the animals in fine shape by public denunciations of conditions which he alleges exist in Grand Junction, Colo.

Here are a few of the opinions he expresses: "Lawlessness is pronounced among us." "Illicit liquor selling is notorious." "Gambling joints are in full swing." "Boys and girls roam our streets late at night in unrestrained violation of our curfew ordinances." (The mothers are possibly away from home attending to political affairs.) "Officials who hate unjust gain we need."

WAR AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Suffragists continually tell us that if women had the ballot wars and internal strife would be a thing of the past, yet Colorado, which has had woman suffrage for nearly a generation, was in the throes of civil war nearly all of 1914. The State had become so weakened in its fabric that it could not keep order and protect life and property within its borders, but was compelled, through the State authorities, to call upon the President of the United States to send Government troops to administer affairs and bring order out of chaos. This is another proof of the failure of woman suffrage in the model State of Colorado, and refutes beyond any possibility of controversy the suffragists' claim.

The European war came suddenly, and, as with most wars, there was no time for men to vote whether war should or should not be declared. Should a foreign foe invade our country and the women of our land vote to offer no resistance, but decide to surrender our liberty and property and submit to the yoke of a foreign despot rather than consent to the men defending our homes and firesides by going to war, and the men of our Nation decide to fight for the honor and well-being of our country, how could the women prevent them? Could an army of women in a contest at arms defeat their husbands, fathers, sons, and brothers? Would it be right for women to vote that our men should not defend our homes and country? On the other hand, would it be just and right for the women of our country to vote that our men should go to war when the women would be unable to do their share of the fighting?

WAGE-EARNING WOMEN AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

It has been said that women working in stores and factories need the ballot to increase their wages and for bettering their condition generally. Of the 8,075,773 female workers over 10 years of age only 4,436,804 are employed outside their home and home farms; 1,346,905 are under 21 years of age, leaving only 3,088,899 to vote—only about one-eighth of the women of voting age in the United States, there being many times more workingmen than working women in the country. Why have not men increased their wages by the ballot, as men have had the ballot for over 100 years? If the ballot can increase wages and produce wealth and make equal pay for equal work, why do different wage scales obtain in different parts of this country, and why do laboring men rely on labor unions instead of the ballot for better wages and working conditions?

The main reason for lower wages for women, aside from the physical difference, which the ballot can not change, is that women are only temporary wage earners, about seven years being the average length of time which women engage in wage-earning occupations; after which they graduate into matrimony, their natural sphere, which is the expectation of every normal woman.

As there are over 20,000,000 women of voting age not employed as wage earners, what chance would 3,088,899 working women have in a contest of votes, with 20,000,000 women not so engaged and about 27,000,000 men voters besides? The first "mothers' pension law," the first "workmen's compensation law," the first "red-light abatement law" were first passed in male-suffrage States. No woman-suffrage State can show better laws than can be shown in male-suffrage States, and it is acknowledged that Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Nebraska, Missouri, Pennsylvania, New York, and Massachusetts all of which recently defeated woman suffrage overwhelmingly, and Connecticut, Indiana, and others—all male-suffrage States—are in the fore front with good laws for women and children, and years ahead of woman-suffrage States in this regard.

Judge Lindsey, in an address in Denver last year, said: "We are 20 years behind Massachusetts in spite of suffrage."

At an election November 3, 1914, California defeated an 8-hour law and 48 hours per week; and Oregon defeated an 8-hour day and room-ventilation law for women by a large majority.

In most States where men make the laws a woman can desert her husband and all he can do is to ask her to come back to him, while men can be arrested and imprisoned for deserting their wives. In many male-suffrage States women can sell and convey their real estate without the husband signing the deed, while men must have their wives' signatures in order to sell and convey their own lands.

Women acting as nonpartisans, without the vote will get more favorable legislation and better laws of every kind enacted than as partisans with the vote.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE UNDEMOCRATIC.

Woman suffrage is undemocratic: First, because the leaders will not leave the question to the women to decide, but would have the men force suffrage on women, 80 per cent of whom do not want the ballot. Second, as has been proven beyond a doubt, which anyone can verify by United States census and secretary of state's reports, women will not vote, relatively as generally as men of the different classes, and can never do so, however much they might desire to on account of their duty of motherhood; consequently the will of the majority is often set aside and defeated where women vote, and the political status of both men and women changed, and laws representing the will of the minority enacted. This is one of the great injustices of woman suffrage, for laws representing the will of the minority are dangerous to our free institutions. Third, as the Father of our Country truly said, "Government without force is a nullity," and is not just nor democratic for women to vote laws unless they can fulfill all the functions of government. As they can not serve in the Army and Navy, assist the officers in arresting criminals and putting down riots, etc., it can not be said they have a right to vote laws which they can not enforce and which would not be enforced unless the men of the country desired they should be.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE NOT AN INHERENT RIGHT.

"The granting of the franchise," said Chief Justice Marshall, "has always been regarded in the practice of nations as a matter of expedience, and not as inherent right."

If it is a right for all to vote who pay taxes and who live under laws they must obey, then all State laws preventing Chinese, United States soldiers, and illiterate men from voting should be repealed. Also laws for punishing boys for crimes or taxing their property should be abolished, as boys have no voice in making the laws of the land till they reach the age of 21 years. Yet who would say that the laws pertaining to the youth of our land are unfair or unjust, or who would say that the illiterate man is living under unjust laws in the many States where he is not allowed a voice in the making of them? Would it be wise for our laws to be made by illiterate men? Illiterate men, Chinese, and boys under 21 are people, and are not allowed to vote; and it is not now and never has been considered expedient for all people to use the franchise. Only when the interests of all the people—men, women, and children—are best served by granting the franchise to any one is voting a right, as suffrage is a political and not a natural or inherent right, but entirely a matter of expediency.

The women of Colorado or Arizona might say that, as men had always held the offices for the enforcement of laws against crimes, such as train robbing, cattle stealing, etc., that it was a right for women to be placed in these offices; but who would say that women could arrest criminals and enforce the laws as well as men? And as they could not, who would say it was a right they should be given such offices? The same is true of voting; as women only perform the duty of voting to a much less degree than men, and thereby the will of the people is not as well expressed at the polls, it can not be a right, nor is it justice, for women to vote.

We believe that you will agree with us that the main object of voting is to register the will of the majority; that it may be crystalized into the law of the land; that any propaganda that tends to and does, in some instances, defeat the will of the majority is inimical to our form of government.

We think, from the instances cited, we have shown beyond question that women given the ballot do not vote as generally as men. When a man votes in a male-suffrage State, his vote counts one, but in a woman-suffrage State, unless his wife votes, his vote counts one-half. If a single man, if the women of his class do not vote relatively as generally as men of his class and opinions, his vote is of less effect than if women were not enfranchised. The fact that the different classes of women do not vote relatively in so large a proportion as men of the different classes in the suffrage States tends to, and in many instances does, defeat the will of the majority; and the registration of the will of the majority is the corner stone of democratic government. No cause can be just or right that defeats this end. Women's failure to vote as generally as men, where they have been given the ballot, in many cases cause laws to be enacted that are the will of the minority; and that is one of the greatest injustices of woman suffrage, for the laws made by minorities are injurious to our free institutions.

As an illustration of how the will of the minority controls an election on account of women failing to vote relatively in as large numbers as men, in San Francisco County, Cal., where the sentiment was not favorable to woman suffrage, only 35.5 per cent of the men and women over 21 years of age voted for President November 5, 1912, while in Los Angeles County, Cal., which had in 1910, 346,158 men and women over 21 years of age, which gave a large majority for woman suffrage, 48.5 per cent of the men and women of voting age voted for President in November, 1912. The vote for Wilson in San Francisco County, which had in 1910, 297,269 men and women over 21 years of age, was 48,965; Roosevelt, 38,610; Debs, 15,354. Had 48.5 per cent of the men and women in San Francisco County voted, as they did in Los Angeles County, there would have been cast 144,175 votes for the presidential candidates, instead of 105,646, the actual number cast; and if 144,175 votes had been cast in the same proportion as the 105,646 votes were cast, Wilson would have received 18,288 more votes than he did and Roosevelt 14,478 more; and instead of Roosevelt carrying California by 174 votes, Wilson would have had the State by 3,636 plurality.

Only 43 per cent of the men and women over 21 years of age, exclusive of Japanese and Chinese, voted in California November 5, 1912.

Men alone voting register the will of the men and women much better than if women and men both vote, for the reason that the different classes of men vote relatively in larger numbers than the different classes of women. Women adhere to different political parties in the same proportion as men, as is generally proven by their being no change in the political complexion of States where women have been given the ballot. The average woman, if she votes, registers the same opinion as her husband, father, or brother; but if she should occasionally vote differently, by voting the Democratic ticket and her husband voting the Republican ticket, in another family the reverse may be true, the husband instead of the wife voting the Democratic ticket, so in the final count there would be no change at all in the results; if women voted as generally as the men, but as women do not vote relatively as generally as men, the will of the minority is sometimes registered at an election with women voting, while the will of the majority would have been registered with men alone using the franchise. If every husband and wife voted differently and canceled each other's vote, the making of the laws of our land would be left to the unmarried men and women, who are the smaller part of our voting population.

Also the office-seeking female politicians and their personal friends will vote more generally than women not looking for office, and as non-office-seeking women do not and will not vote in as large proportion as men, the power of the "boss" in politics will be strengthened and increased by giving women the ballot.

RURAL COMMUNITIES AND WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Another of the many instances that could be cited to show the injustice of giving women the ballot is the fact that it would reduce the power in politics of that great independent vote of the rural communities, which is the larger part of our population. The women in the rural districts, living farther from the polling places, would not vote as generally as city women, who reside a few blocks from where they cast their ballots; consequently a smaller per cent of women in the country would vote than city women; and as country women could not vote as generally as the men, then the power in politics of our rural communities would be lessened by woman suffrage. Also, in our big cities, where, the liquor interests are large, the saloons, breweries, hotels, and cafés that sell liquor, property owners who rent property to such interests, and all allied trades and business, as well as gamblers, etc., see that their women go to the polls on election day nearly as a unit, besides inducing their women friends to vote, it being to their interest financially to do so, while women with no monetary interests in the election would fail to vote as generally as men of their class and opinions do. So the will of the majority in such an election may often be defeated and liquor interests win; while if men alone voted, the saloon might be abolished. As before mentioned, when men alone voted on local option in Los Angeles, the saloon won by two to one, while with women voting the saloons won by nearly three to one. The same applies to any political machine that seeks to gain ascendancy for graft, organized socialism, etc., that really want to gain advantage and defeat the will of the majority.

FEMINISM AND SOCIALISM.

According to Mrs. Beatrice Forbes-Robinson Hale, noted suffrage speaker and writer, woman suffrage is "an essential branch of the tree of feminism." "Feminism," she says in her book on the subject, "is gradually supplying to women the things they most need." Among these things she mentions 'easy divorce" and "economic independence."

Feminism is variously defined, but in whatever guise of words we find it we see the same earmarks of revolt against nature and Christian morals. The feminist is an avowed enemy of the home. Writing in McClure's Magazine for March, 1913, Inez Milholland Boessevain, a prominent suffragist, foresees with delight "the beginning of a breakdown of the artificial barriers in the way of a more natural observance of the mating instinct," in other words "free love."

The Case for Woman Suffrage, a bibliography of suffrage literature, published by the College Equal Suffrage League, and sold by the National Woman Suffrage Association, sneers at the "old-fashioned" suffrage arguments and gives the highest meed of praise to the radical writings of the most radical feminists and socialists. "Too many advocates of woman suffrage," says the Case (p. 64), "insist that when woman is enfranchised she will be no less 'womanly' than before; whereas in point of fact perhaps the chief thing to be said for the suffrage is precisely that it would make woman less womanly in the commonly accepted sense of the term. One can not argue logically on woman suffrage without facing this fact."

The devotees of feminism talk glibly and coarsely about "sex freedom" and "sex independence for women," all to be achieved with the vote. "Economic independence for women" is a phase of the suffrage question that ought to interest the workingman, for it is the theory that all women, married and single, should engage in gainful occupations. Feminists agree that the wife must be independent of her husband, because to be dependent upon him for maintenance is to be a "parasite." She must also be independent of the care of her children, if she elects to have any, because otherwise she can not earn her own living. Dora Marsden, in The Bondwoman, a pamphlet attacking marriage and characterizing wifehood as a species of slavery, says: "The free woman's concern is to see to it that she shall be in a position to bear children, if she wants them, without soliciting maintenance from any man, whoever he may be." The Bondwoman was printed and circulated as a campaign document by the National Woman Suffrage Association.

Charlotte Perkins Gilman, leading suffrage speaker and writer, in an article in the Woman's Journal, the suffrage organ edited by the president of the Massachusetts Suffrage Association, says:

"The woman should have as much to do in the home as the man—no more. Who, then, will take care of a sick baby? The nurse, of course. If the child is not seriously ill, the nurse is as good as the mother. If the child is seriously ill, the nurse is better."

She also has said the home is no more holy than the post office.

Mary Ware Dennett says it is unwholesome for any woman to be supported by any man. Mrs. Dennett was formerly an officer of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association, later an officer of the National Woman Suffrage Association. Under this theory of economic independence for women the husband must cease to be the provider and the wife must cease to be the home maker; otherwise their relations are unwholesome.

In the suffrage parade in Washington, D. C., March 3, 1913, was carried a large banner with the inscription, "1,000,000 Socialists work and vote for woman suffrage." There is no getting away from the fact that woman suffrage, feminism, and socialism are indissolubly linked. Socialists like Inez Milholland Boessevain, Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch, Alice Stone Blackwell, and Miss Jessie Ashley are prominent leaders in the Woman Suffrage Party. Socialists favor woman suffrage because they know what it means to their cause. Where do you stand? Are you in favor of it? Do you care to have private property abolished? Do you believe that wifehood is slavery? Do you think homes should be abandoned in order that women may have economic independence? If you want these things, work for woman suffrage with the feminists and Socialists; but if you hold your family relations, your home, your religion sacred, if you desire to preserve them for yourself and your children for all time, then work with all your might against the companions, the handmaids, the forerunners of feminism and socialism—woman suffrage.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE AND DIVORCE.

It has been said that there was no connection between votes for women and divorce, yet it is significant that in the 11 States where the sentiment was favorable to woman suffrage (Wyoming, Idaho, California, Utah, Montana, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Nevada, Colorado, and Kansas) there was, according to marriage and divorce, United States Census Bulletin No. 96, page 20, an average of 364 divorces per 100,000 of married population, while in the adjoining male-suffrage States west of the Mississippi River (Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Texas, and New Mexico) the average number of divorces was only 264 per 100,000, and for the United States as a whole only 200 per 100,000 of the married population.

The suffragists say they demand justice for women in demanding the ballot for women; but for which women—the 20 per cent who demand it or the 80 per cent of the women who protest or who are silent on the question? Should 80 per cent of the women be compelled to bow to the will of 20 per cent? We are entirely unable to understand how anyone can claim that women have the right to vote and deny, as the suffragists do, that women have the right to vote on the question as to whether they want the ballot or not. In the 11 suffrage States—Kansas, Montana, Oregon, California, Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Washington, Idaho, Wyoming, and Colorado—the total number of women of voting age was 2,097,945 (census, 1910), which is 16,063 less women of voting age than reside in the State of Pennsylvania. Population, not territory, counts.

Total majority against woman suffrage in Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, and Massachusetts at the election last year was 434,865. Abstract of census, 1910, page 107, shows there were in the United States 26,999,154 men and 24,555,754 women 21 years of age and over. So if women were given the ballot they could not, if they desired to do so, vote any laws that the men opposed.

We deny the allegation of the suffragists that the men of this country have made a failure of government, or that men have become such "mollycoddles" or so weak that it is necessary to place the burden of government upon women, most of whom are opposed to having the additional responsibility imposed upon them. It is an insult to the men of this country to be told by the suffragists that they can not be trusted to make just laws for women and children, when an average of four-fifths of the earnings of the man, over and above the necessities of the family, are spent on the women and children.

Suffragists often quote the praise given woman suffrage by politicians from suffrage States, but it could hardly be expected that politicians from States where women have the franchise would condemn woman suffrage, as the loss of a few votes of the agitating class of women, or even one vote to a politician, might mean the loss of a big-paying office.

If women could ever vote as generally as men there would be little or no change in our laws, for if even once in a while a wife voted in opposition to her husband and canceled his vote—in which event the family would have no voice in the laws at all—the final result of the whole vote would rarely be changed, and we would have the absurd spectacle of two people doing what one alone could accomplish as well and waste all the effort expended in the study of politics by women and the enormous expense the doubling the vote would entail.

The foundation of every government is the family, and the large majority of men and women of voting age are married. If a wife voted in opposition to her husband there would be no necessity for either to vote, while if they voted alike her vote would be useless.

Our Government is in part one great business concern; and what business man or factory owner would not consider a proposition childish to use for part of his work double the number of people at double the cost to do something which would be of absolutely no profit? Yet it has been proven that suffrage does not better conditions or laws, and still suffragists ask men to give women the ballot when it would almost double the cost of elections and nearly double the number of people to do the voting, with no good whatever accomplished.

Under caption "What freaks do to California," the Los Angeles Times of September 26, 1914, prints, in a dispatch from Sacramento: "California citizens will pay approximately $1,637,500 for the privilege of exercising the right of suffrage this year. This is an increase of 133⅓ per cent since 1910." Above amount is exclusive of city, county, and special elections. Women were given the ballot in California October 10, 1911.

Five States defeated woman suffrage in 1914 and the four States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, containing about one-fourth of the population of the country, in 1915. The wave of hysteria is passing, and instead of woman suffrage growing it is on the decline, as is shown by the vote in Michigan, where it was defeated in November, 1912, by about 700 majority and in 1913 by 96,144. In Ohio in 1912 "votes for women" was defeated by 87,455 majority and in 1914 by 182,905. In the past three years 11 States in all have by overwhelming majorities decided against giving women the ballot, viz, Wisconsin, Michigan, Ohio, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Massachusetts, which have a population of 38,239,955; add to these the 12 Southern States whose hostility to woman suffrage is well known—Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas—we have the States with a population of 62,289,524 known to be strongly opposed to the franchise for women, or 67.7 per cent of the total population of the Nation. Besides these the 5 New England States—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, and Connecticut—the States of Delaware, Maryland, Kentucky, Indiana, New Mexico, and Minnesota, in all of which there has never been enough of suffrage sentiment to get the legislatures to submit the question to the voters. So it is more than probable that the States containing about 80 per cent of the population of the United States are decidedly against "votes for women." Woman suffrage is not coming, it is going.

The more women go out into the rough world to do men's work the greater the loss to the home and the more she loses her delicate charm and sympathy, which is distinctly feminine; and, in the language of the late Senator Vest, of Missouri, "What man would care to go home after the struggle and worry of the day in the business world and fall into the arms of a constitutional lawyer or politician for rest, consolation, and comfort?"

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA ASSOCIATION OPPOSED TO WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

OPINIONS OF EMINENT MEN AGAINST WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Thomas Jefferson: "Nature has marked the weaker sex for protection, rather than the direction of government."

Daniel Webster: "It is by the promulgation of sound morals in the community, and more especially by the training and instruction of the young that woman performs her part toward the preservation of a free government."

The Hon. Elihu Root, United States Senator: "I am opposed to granting suffrage to women because I believe it would be a loss to women and an injury to the State. * * * It is a fatal mistake that these excellent women make when they conceive that the functions of men are superior to theirs, and seek to usurp them."

Grover Cleveland: "I am willing to admit it was only after a more thorough appreciation of what female suffrage really means that I became fully convinced that its inauguration would vastly increase the unhappy imperfections and shortcomings of our present man-voting suffrage, its especial susceptibility to bad leadership and other hurtful influences would constitute it another menacing condition to those which already vex and disturb the deliberate and intelligent expression of the popular will."

William Howard Taft: "If in any of the States now acting on the question I were called upon to vote, I would vote against giving the suffrage, because I think to force it upon an unwilling or indifferent majority * * * is to add to the electorate an element that will not improve its governing capacity."

Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D.: "If any man attempts woman's functions, he will prove himself but an inferior woman. If woman attempts man's functions, she will prove herself an inferior man. Some masculine women there are; some feminine men there are. These are the monstrosities of nature."

Bishop John H. Vincent (founder of the Chautauqua): "When about 30 years of age I accepted for a time the doctrine of woman suffrage and publicly defended it. Years of wide and careful observation have convinced me that the demand for woman suffrage in America is without foundation in equity, and if successful must prove harmful to society."

James Cardinal Gibbons: "Woman is queen, indeed, but her empire is the domestic kingdom. The greatest political triumphs she would achieve in public life fade into insignificance compared with the serene glory which radiates from the domestic shrine, and which she illuminates and warms by her conjugal and motherly virtues."

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4881) to reimburse the postmaster at Kegg, Pa., for money and stamps taken by burglars, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 311) thereon.

Mr. KERN, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 3304) concerning the exportation of alcohol and other distilled spirits, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 312) thereon.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 4764) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and use of opium for other than medicinal purposes," approved January 17, 1914, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 315) thereon.

J. LAWRENCE LATHAM.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Post Offices and Port Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8466) to relieve J. Lawrence Latham, postmaster at Eupora, Webster County, Miss., of the payment of cash and funds stolen from the post office, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 314) thereon. I do not wish the bill to go to the calendar, but I ask unanimous consent that the bill and accompanying report be referred to the Committee on Claims for action by that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims for action.

DAUPHIN ISLAND RAILWAY & HARBOR CO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4476) to amend an act to authorize the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., its successors or assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges, or viaducts, across the water between the mainland at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big; also to dredge a channel from the deep waters of Mobile Bay into Dauphin Bay; also to construct and maintain docks and wharves along both Little and Big Dauphin Islands, as amended by an act approved June 18, 1912, and I submit a report (No. 313) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 1 of the act of June 25, 1910, so as to read:

That the Dauphin Island Railway & Harbor Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Alabama, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto between the mainland at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Cedar Point and Dauphin Island, both Little and Big, situated in Mobile County, State of Alabama, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the authority hereby granted shall be considered as withdrawn and deemed to be revoked if the said bridge or bridges and approaches thereto be not constructed and put in operation by or before the 18th day of September, 1921.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT M'HENRY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. LEE of Maryland. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 68) to cede to the State of Maryland temporary jurisdiction over certain lands in the Fort McHenry Military Reservation. The joint resolution was reported yesterday from the Committee on Military Affairs. It simply gives to the State of Maryland jurisdiction over the territory embraced in old Fort McHenry, which the city of Baltimore has had for some time past as a park, but it lacks jurisdiction for the enforcement of order upon the reservation as a park.

This joint resolution was introduced in the House and passed the House, and was reported favorably by the Senate committee and is now upon the calendar. I ask for its immediate consideration because it has to be ratified by the Maryland General Assembly, which is now in session and will adjourn in seven days. The terms of the joint resolution are perfectly reasonable, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRRIGATION OF ARID LANDS.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with an amendment, Senate resolution 154 authorizing the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands to employ a stenographer, and so forth, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, in line 4, to change the number of the bill from 4261 to 1922.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and is hereby, authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to hold hearings on the bill (S. 1922) in aid of reclaiming arid lands, and for other purposes; to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, and to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate.

ADJUDICATION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6918) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. LEE of Maryland it was—

Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the original manuscript accompanying Senate Document No. 360, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, entitled "The military law and efficient citizen army of the Swiss."

APPLICATIONS FOR PAROLE.

Mr. OWEN. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read. The resolution calls for information which I desire to have for the use of the Senate in connection with the consideration of the parole bill which I had the honor of submitting. If there is no objection, I should like to have it considered at this time.

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL TRIBUNAL (S. DOC. NO. 378).

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have a communication here from Mr. Oscar T. Crosby relative to an amendment which I have offered to the naval appropriation bill, the amendment providing for the establishment of an international tribunal or tribunals competent to secure peaceful determinations of all international disputes. The communication consists of only three or four pages, and I ask unanimous consent that it be made a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

tain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, in view of the delay that is attending the consideration of Senate bill 4840, I desire to postpone until Friday, March 31, the notice which I gave that I would address the Senate on that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER obtained the floor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield for that purpose?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, as to the probable course of the appropriation bill that is now before the Senate, and whether he has any idea when it is likely to be disposed of?

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, so soon as the distinguished Senator from North Dakota finishes his speech, I intend to ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and I am very certain if, say, commencing at 1 or 1.30 o'clock to-day the Senate shall give undivided attention to the bill we can conclude its consideration by 5 o'clock to-day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My reason for asking the question is that I am very anxious to call up the Army reorganization bill. I dislike to interfere with the pending appropriation bill if there is a chance to have it finished in a short time, but if the bill is not finished to-day I shall feel it my duty to ask the Senate to take up for consideration the Army reorganization bill not later than to-morrow morning.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator from Oregon. I assure him that unless Senators on our side make long speeches the bill will be finished by 5 o'clock. I hope they will refrain from doing so.

RURAL CREDITS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Committee on Banking and Currency has reported a rural-credits bill. I have sometimes thought the Senator, who as chairman of the subcommittee reported the bill, felt that those who disagree with that particular measure were antagonistic to rural-credits legislation. I wish to assure him that I am as earnestly in favor of some rural-credits legislation being passed as he is, and if I do not agree with him I want him to credit me with entire good faith in the criticisms I may make of the pending bill. I am urging these objections with the hope that we may in the end secure a rural-credits law that will meet American conditions.

Mr. President, as I look over the vast number of salaried employees provided in this rural-credits bill, beginning with five members of the Federal farm-loan board, with a term of eight years and a salary of $10,000 each per year; when I contemplate the army of registrars, special land-bank appraisers, attorneys, experts, assistants, land-bank directors, presidents, vice-presidents, secretaries, land-bank officials, as many as may be deemed necessary of each class; the many officers and agents of farm-loan associations, appraisers, and so forth, all to draw salaries and all to be paid for their expenses, I am astonished that such an enormous, extravagant machine should be foisted on the public. And I wonder why the committee having at heart the real interest of the agriculturists, the decrease in the rate of interest, should provide such elaborate, expensive machinery, which must be covered by the interest charged.

I naturally ask myself why the elaborate system of banks which we now have could not be utilized so as to save the heavy expense of bank-buildings maintenance, and all of these other expenses for salaries, and so forth.

I find the answer, and the only answer, in section 3 of the bill, which provides that all such attorneys, experts, assistants, clerks, laborers, and other employees, and all registrars and appraisers shall be appointed without regard to the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883, and amendments thereto, or any rule or regulations made in pursuance thereto: Provided, That nothing herein shall prevent the President from placing said employees in the classified service. In other words, the President is not required in filling these positions to draw from the civil-service list, but when all have been appointed he can then blanket them all into the civil service, where they may rest securely as long as life shall last.

And so the real interest of the farmer is sacrificed that thousands of places may be made for political adherents. And yet there are those who have the audicity to say that this bill must be freed from partisanship. Why, Mr. President, it is conceived in partisanship.

As one reads over this bill one of the first questions that would challenge his consideration is, Why are there two bills in one? Why are there two entire and distinct systems of rural credits, governed by separate provisions? If both are good, why have two systems? If either is weak, why not discard the weak one, or cure its defect, make it perfect, and discard the other? The Democratic platform calls for a rural-credit law. It does not call for two laws. The truth of the matter is, Mr. President, that the committee itself must have doubts, and grave doubts, as to the utility of either one or both of these schemes, and in their desperation they provide for two systems, hoping that possibly one of them might prove a success or that the intelligence of business men might enable them to choose between the two.

Provision is first made for Federal land banks. The United States proper is to be divided into 12 districts, and no district shall contain a fractional part of a State. Within this district the Federal Farm Loan Board must establish a Federal land bank with a capital of not less than $500,000. But, Mr. President, in order to establish a land bank in one of these districts with $500,000 capital some one must be induced to raise the capital, some one must build the banking house, and some one must operate the establishment. There are few people in the world who can afford to go into a business for philanthropic purposes only. There must be a fair financial inducement; if not, the project will go begging. The ordinary business man, after reading the entire bill, after ascertaining the enormous overhead expenses to meet the demands of the army of employees appointed for political reasons and covered into the civil service, would hesitate to invest his capital in the undertaking or advise others to do so. Now, the proponents of this measure undoubtedly saw that danger, that its weakness would be apparent to the experienced business man, and they provided for it in a very simple manner. They forced the Government to go into it, loss or no loss. They reasoned out that the Government, by taxing the people generally, could raise money, and the Government, having the power to increase taxes for its support, could afford to allow its money to lie idle without interest, or could lose it entirely. And so it provided that—

> If within 90 days after the opening of said books any part of the minimum capitalization of $500,000 herein prescribed for Federal land banks shall remain unsubscribed, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe the balance thereof on behalf of the United States, said subscription to be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors of said land bank upon 30 days' notice.

In other words, if this scheme is so bad or so uncertain that it will not invite capital from the public, the Government will squeeze the capital out of the public and force it into the bank. And I will prophesy right here that every one of these banks, if any should be established, would be Government-owned banks; that the Government will be compelled to take all the stock of these banks. A great many Senators here would not support a measure where the Government merely guaranteed the farmers' paper for half the value of the farm securing it, because it smacked too much of paternalism; and yet they will turn around and support a measure where the Government itself actually goes into the banking business and furnishes the money without any interest, in an undertaking in which the capital in due time will probably be eaten up by salaries and expenses.

Of course, provision is made that if the subscription of any private individual can be secured for any of this stock, his subscription shall retire so much of the Federal subscription which is to be retired without interest.

But, Mr. President, these Federal banks must have something besides their capital to do business with. Much of the capital would necessarily be used in the construction of great banking buildings, and as there would only be 12 of these in the United States we would expect that they would be of such quality and proportion as would comport with the dignity of a Government institution. And this would make a big hole in the capital. As there would be no inducement for an average business man to deposit his funds in this kind of a bank, we must get the deposits elsewhere. So there is a provision that the Secretary of the Treasury may designate any of these banks as depositories of public money, except receipts of customs, and employ these banks as financial agents of the Government. But it is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury shall require of the Federal land banks satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds or otherwise, for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited.

And then the same section provides:

No Government funds deposited under the provisions of this section shall be invested in mortgage loans.

I do not just understand at a glance of what use the funds would be if they were not to be invested in mortgage loans. But be that as it may, before the bank can deposit security for this deposit of money it must buy that security, and it takes money to buy the security. So it would seem to me that this deposit to be made by the Government could not be of any practical value to the bank. It would cost dollar for dollar. It would not loosen money for investment in farm loans.
